This is by the by. The boundaries of France, Poland, Italy, Belgium, and of the East are too important to those countries concerned to be left to any world's court of distant and careless nations. They must be settled now before the peace, and not afterwards, in order to have firm government. One of the disputes between Peru, Bolivia, and Chile is as to the nitrate beds. Would we leave that to the nations in Europe, all of which are eager to get control of those nitrate beds? Would we allow Europe to interfere? The whole scheme of compulsory intervention will fail as voluntary arbitration has failed at The Hague because of the difficulty of agreeing upon judges.

Now, as to disarmament. There is a provision that no State should maintain more than its quota of troops or ships. That accurately expresses the idea of disarmament. It never had to be enforced in this country because no State tried to have an army or navy. It is different abroad. Germany always has wanted an army, and the world had an experience there. In the time of Napoleon it was provided that Prussia should keep under arms only 42,000 men, and Stein and other German ministers arranged a system of short enlistments and short intensive service like what we have given our officers, and they turned out when the war again broke out against Napoleon with over 500,000 thoroughly trained men in the field. A provision for disarmament acts in favor of Germany, the country that expects to use her soldiers at home. It acts against a country like our own, where we have no military system, and have to take men 3,000 miles. A provision for an enrolled and disciplined militia would be necessary for us. We should do little with it, but it would cover a whole German army. There can be no safety in any equality of provision for a power that has the advantage of a central position, and with its soldiers always at the place where troubles are to be expected, while others must send soldiers from afar, and America and England from oversea.

The provision that we had in the league that no State shall keep a navy is vital. It would be dangerous now to the world. The navies of England and America now secure the safety of the world. They must be strong enough to secure that result.

The scheme of the confederation was for a general army and navy sufficient for the common defense. The same scheme is now called in the proposition in the paper this morning "An international police." The confederation failed to get any such army or navy. During the Revolution Congress was only able to get out at the highest about one-tenth of our able-bodied men, while in the Civil War the North got out one-fifth of its able-bodied population and the South got a much larger proportion.

Under the confederation, calls for quotas failed, requisitions for men and money failed, and the men we had were unpaid. The league could not enforce these quotas of men and money, even in our dire necessity, and the only remedy of Congress would have been to make war upon the delinquent States. This was actually proposed by Madison. Six weeks after the ratification of the articles in 1781 he proposed an amendment to give the United States full authority to employ their forces as well by sea as by land to compel any delinquent State to fulfillment of its Federal engagements. Washington approved of this, saying that a knowledge that this power was lodged in Congress might prevent its ever being exercised. Indeed, said Washington, if Congress were unquestionably possessed of the power nothing could induce the display of it but absolute disobedience and urgency of the general welfare. Madison argued that in the very nature of the confederation such a right of coercion was necessarily implied, though not expressed in the articles. Fiske declares that much might be said in behalf of this opinion. "The confederation asserted itself to be perpetual, but how could it have perpetuated itself for a dozen years without the right to coerce its members? Practically, however, the remedy was one which never could have been applied without breaking the confederation into fragments. To use the Army or Navy in coercing a State meant civil war. The local yeomanry would have turned out against the Continental Army with as high a spirit as that in which they swarmed against the enemy at Lexington and Kings Mountain. A government which could not collect the taxes for its yearly budget without firing upon its citizens or blockading harbors would have been the absurdest anomaly imaginable." (Fiske, "The Critical Period of the Revolution," p. 118.)

Afterwards, when we came to the constitutional convention, there were two plans, one for a government and the other for strengthening the power of the league. The latter, the New Jersey plan, set forth in the Paterson resolutions, aimed at a like right for the league to enforce contributions of money and men. Congress was to have power to collect taxes in the States if requisitions were not complied with. The resolutions changed the proportion of the quotas from property to men, because Congress had never been able to have a valuation of property. But in the last resolution it was proposed that the acts of the United States in Congress should be the supreme law, and that the judiciary of the States should be bound thereby, and that if any State or any body of men in any State shall oppose or prevent the carrying into execution such acts or treaties, the Federal Executive shall be authorized to call for the power of the confederated States, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enforce and compel obedience to such acts and the observance of such treaties. Madison Debates, Volume I, pages 164 and 166, say:

3. Resolved, That whenever requisitions shall be necessary, instead of the rule for making requisitions mentioned in the Articles of Confederation, the United States in Congress be authorized to make such requisitions in proportion to the whole number of white and other free citizens and inhabitants, of every age, sex, and condition, including those bound to servitude for a term of years, and three-fifths of all other persons not comprehended in the foregoing description, except Indians not paying taxes; that if such requisitions be not complied with in the time specified therein to direct the collection thereof in the noncomplying States; and for that purpose to devise and pass acts directing and authorizing the same: Provided, That none of the powers hereby vested in the United States and Congress shall be exercised without the consent of at least —— States; and in that proportion if the number of confederated States should hereafter be increased or diminished.

6. Resolved, That all acts of the United States in Congress, made by virtue and in pursuance of the powers hereby, and by the Articles of Confederation vested in them, and all treaties made and ratified under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the respective States, so far forth as those acts or treaties shall relate to the said States or their citizens; and that the judiciary of the several States shall be bound thereby in their decisions, anything in the respective laws of the individual States to the contrary notwithstanding; and that if any State or any body of men in any State shall oppose or prevent the carrying into execution of such acts or treaties the Federal Executive shall be authorized to call forth the power of the confederated States, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enforce and compel an obedience to such acts, or an observance of such treaties.

Is the world league to make war on poor Poland if it fail to pay its quota of expenses? This would be tyranny, not government.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has been pointing out the weakness of the Articles of Confederation—how they failed to secure the necessary unity. I want to ask the gentleman this, however: Does he believe that the final union of the States in the form that we now have it could have been accomplished immediately upon the completion of the Revolution without the intervening experiment of a confederation?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; I do not; and I will ask the gentleman in reply, does he want to have a union of all the people of the world, no matter how dissimilar?

Mr. BORLAND. I am not prepared to commit myself to such a union of all the people of the world.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Neither am I; and I will say that it can not be done.

Mr. BORLAND. I regard it as entirely experimental; but does not the gentleman realize that the Articles of Confederation were good for the experimental stage of American Government and that we progressed from that to a more perfect union?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think we had a right to try experiments with our sister States who had been with us in the Revolution. I do not think we have a right to try experiments with the Bolsheviki of Russia or with the other people over there to see whether we can make a union with them.

Mr. BORLAND. That is exactly what I wanted to ask the gentleman. Does he not think it would be wiser for us to try the experiment to get a league rather than to go to the full extent, logically, as he makes it, of having legislative, executive, and judicial power?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; I would never go to that extent. It is not logical at all. The statement I have made is very clear, I believe. We need a temporary understanding. I like that word better than an alliance. We need a temporary understanding with the people who have fought with us in the war, and we will secure peace on proper terms. I do not want to go further than that.

Mr. BORLAND. But the understanding to expire when the peace is secured?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; except so far as we choose to go ahead. We carried on this war to a successful conclusion without anything in the way of writing to bind us to do it, because we thought it was for the good of the world. We can see that peace is obtained in the same way, by a similar understanding, and I hope, thank Heaven, we can do it without breaking Washington's orders and without entering into any permanent alliances.

Mr. BORLAND. It may be that these terms of peace are going to extend some years into the future and to require a great many affirmative acts to be performed by the central powers. Does not the gentleman think a close alliance with our allies is going to be necessary possibly for years to come?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; I do not. I think we should be able to put pledges in the hands of the allied powers in Europe and be able to secure their ends in that regard. I think we want to get out of Europe as soon as we possibly can.

Mr. BORLAND. With reference to this idea of using force against members of the league, the great powers, of course, could put down the little ones.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Imagine the jealousy of the great powers if that were done. Imagine the jealousy if they had more than one vote, as suggested in the Marburg plan. Alexander Hamilton, in the debate on the Paterson amendment, made some remarks, and I ask to be allowed to put in an extract and to extend my remarks in the RECORD generally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey that he extend his remarks? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. At that time Shays' rebellion was going on in Massachusetts and Alexander Hamilton spoke on the proposition to use force to maintain the Government. He said that military force exercised on the States means war; and continued, as to the weakness of all leagues (Madison Debates, Vol. I, p. 178):

Force, by which may be understood a coercion of laws or coercion of arms. Congress has not the former, except in few cases. In particular States this coercion is nearly sufficient, though he held it, in most cases, not entirely so. A certain portion of military force is absolutely necessary in large communities. Massachusetts is now feeling this necessity and making provisions for it, but how can this force be exerted on the States collectively? It is possible. It amounts to a war between the two parties. Foreign powers also will not be idle spectators. They will interpose, the confusion will increase, and a dissolution of the Union will ensue.

Influence: He did not mean corruption, but a dispensation of those regular honors and emoluments which produce an attachment to the Government. Almost all the weight of these is on the side of the States, and must continue so as long as the States continue to exist. All the passions, then, we see, of avarice, ambition, interest, which govern most individuals and all public bodies, fall into the current of the States and do not flow into the stream of the General Government. The former, therefore, will generally be an overmatch for the General Government and render any confederacy in its very nature precarious. Theory is in this case fully confirmed by experience. The amphictyonic council had, it would seem, ample powers for general purposes. It had in particular the power of fining and using force against delinquent members. What was the consequence? Their decrees were mere signals of war. The Phocian war is a striking example of it. Philip, at length, taking advantage of their disunion and insinuating himself into their councils, made himself master of their fortunes. The German confederacy affords another lesson. The authority of Charlemagne seemed to be as great as could be necessary. The great feudal chiefs, however, exercising their local sovereignties, soon felt the spirit and found the means of encroachments, which reduced the imperial authority to a nominal sovereignty. The diet has succeeded, which, though aided by a prince at its head, of great authority independently of his imperial attributes, is a striking illustration of the weakness of confederated governments. Other examples instruct us in the same truth. The Swiss Cantons have scarce any union at all and have been more than once at war with one another.

We learn from those debates how hard it is to have anything like united action in a confederacy, even of people of the same blood like the Germans or the Swiss or ourselves, and how impossible it would be among scattered nations and peoples like those who are talked of for a world's league. Do we know anything about Russia? Do we know anything about the Balkans? Can any of us tell the difference between the governmental principles of the Serbians and Bulgarians? Does anyone know now exactly what government would suit the Armenians, who have been massacred for generations and never had any government at all? Can anyone tell me why the little Czar, regarded almost as a god by his people, was after a few months taken to prison and massacred? Can anyone tell us what became of the influence of the great Russian Church, which was supposed to govern the Russian people? Do we know what they will do from day to day? Do we know whether their representatives here really represent the Russian people or not? If we made all the leagues in the world, would we know whether the delegates to the convention represented the people or not? We are face to face with a strange emergency, in which we have to change the map of Europe, fit together what we consider the separate nations according to their language and supposed autonomous desires, and finally establish governments which will be recognized by the great powers of Europe and protected by them. In all this the allied forces must see and make sure that there is no power like Germany that shall disintegrate this scheme or add to the confusion which now exists. The United States can go no further. We ought not to try to decide details in Europe, because we know nothing about them.

The present propaganda for a "league of nations" all involve the proposition that the league shall intervene with its international forces in every dispute in Europe, Asia, Africa, or America in order to compel peace, and shall have power to make its member States contribute men and money to such forces and abide by the decisions of the league council and courts.

American soldiers abroad would cost more than those on the spot. America would fulfill her engagements at any cost, though she would not want to make war in the Balkans or in Russia, because they did not contribute to the cost of the world league or obey its mandates.

If this agreement be constitutional, it may be questioned whether it be sensible to obey a league of nations in our foreign policy and be their cat's-paw.

The great nations can be trusted. They have been for peace, with the sole exception of this military monster of modern times. They have prevented war when they could.

Egypt, India, and Morocco have obtained peace and prosperity under the control of England and France, and their people now acknowledge it with almost exaggerated loyalty. The great nations have more power than they used to have, and they likewise bear the white man's burden.

Now, there is one other thing which we learn from our American league called a confederation, and that is that it was intrinsically a sham—intrinsically. The Congress had to try to be President, legislature, and judge all at once, and they did nothing well. Washington had to enforce upon them his right to be Commander in Chief, and no one but Washington could have done so. They only learned that he had that right after years of warfare, just as the modern entente have learned by constant disasters that they had to have one man, Marshal Foch, at the head of the Army if they would not fail. The league and its Congress were always impotent. Any congress of nations under such a league always will be powerless against any united nation.

The American Confederation was a sham as a legislature also. The delegates, being mere delegates, consulted the welfare of their individual States and not the common good. In order to prevent hasty action by the union of the small States against large ones, it was required that a majority of two-thirds of all the States should vote in favor of any proposition, and the result was that a minority of five States was always easily found to defeat any important action. What is more, the mere absence of a few States would defeat action, and for the last three years of the Confederation there were seldom more than 20 delegates present representing seven States, barely enough to pass routine business and not enough to determine any important thing where nine was required. The great men of the country did not go to Congress. They found that business could not be transacted. Would not this be likely in any modern league? Think of the power that would be given, as some one said, to Liberia, or let us say to the hosts of Balkan and South American, Asiatic, and other States. They could unite to make us enter into their broils or to keep us from united action because they did not want to pay the expenses.

There is no plan that can be just between people of different interests that binds them to a majority or two-thirds vote. No plan is safe at all, because with interests drawn in different directions you can not have that harmony that exists here because we are one people.

Now, we must agree on peace terms that will make for peace. But they are not the terms of this league. Constantinople, for instance, must be held under the grasp of the allied powers so as to protect Russia and the East, and there is no other way to do this. Perhaps the same thing will have to be done to the Kiel Canal to give access to the Baltic and protect northern Russia. As for the payment of indemnity to the ruined countries, the German Navy and Rhine lands will have to be kept as a pledge until Germany really surrenders and pays here indemnity. Some of us think that in addition the surrender of her troops will be necessary as a pledge against war.

The United States must preserve and maintain stores of arms and munitions and a corps of officers that will enable us to arm our citizens in case of need and not have to wait three years for lack of arms and officers. Every schoolboy should learn obedience and marksmanship under well-trained officers in civil life, who would likewise make our militia a reality. Such preparedness by ourselves would be the best guaranty that no military power would again disturb the peace of the world.

I read again from Washington's Farewell Address:

> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; * * *
> Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. What other nation outside of the United States is talking seriously about a league of nations?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I know none.

Mr. SLOAN. Who outside of a few officers and a few individuals throughout the United States is claiming that we can establish a practical, well-working league of nations?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know who the parties are that provide the means for broadside advertisements of a whole page in newspapers and issue all kinds of books and articles at great expense. They have some of the best names in the whole country in their societies. At one time a general league of nations was favored immediately, but Mr. Taft, our former President, now wants a small alliance of the great powers. He and others seem to think that the alliance of great States should look to a future general league for general peace, which, perhaps, if they attempt it, will only embroil us in every foreign dissension.

Mr. SLOAN. Have they formulated a correct basis for one of these leagues except that which is a good deal of a nebulous discussion?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; I have two or three little books or circulars that give formative plans. One is by Mr. Everett P. Wheeler.

Mr. SLOAN. Who is Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. He is a very strong lawyer and a very good man.

Mr. SLOAN. What is his record? Has he had any experience in handling national affairs?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. He is a very good lawyer and a very sensible man. I do not know that experience makes us any better when we come to get at new things. One other has spoken, and that is the President of the United States. His proposition is clear as to that. There is no sort of doubt about it.

Mr. SLOAN. I was asking outside of officials.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I was not including him as an official. He is President of the United States.

I fear this proposed general league. I fear that it may tie us up so much that these effete governments and new governments will make confusion worse confounded. I fear for the independence of the United States of America.

America has had her experience with leagues. We turned from that league, or confederation, to what Washington glorified in his Farewell Address. He found the completion of his work in the new birth of our Nation. He tells us that the love of liberty is but the beginning, and that the end is the Union, the State, the Constitution that our own hands had framed, giving to the people a government that mere allegiance could never give, realizing the name of American, which he says belongs to us in our national capacity, and "must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations," as embodying our common struggles, battles, triumphs, dangers, sufferings, and success. He tells us that sentiment and interest alike bind us together—North, South, East, and West—and that union alone can support liberty. He exhorts us to look to that union as our "palladium of safety and prosperity," to speak and think of it with constant affection, to discourage amendment lest that should breed the spirit of change, to let the Constitution grow as all government must grow—from within—and so to work out the destiny of one Nation, whose Constitution, once adopted by the people, is "sacredly obligatory upon all" and can be changed only "by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people."

His courage calls it a crime to doubt the continuance of the Nation. He tells us that amid such prospects and such dangers as surround us the union is worth the trial. He tells us to be prepared for war, to deal fairly with all other nations, but to avoid hatred or fondness for any, and especially to guard against any passionate attachment for any one nation, and to steer clear of permanent alliances or even a permanent commercial policy with any nation of the world.

In the earnestness of the retiring chief we read an anxiety which only history can explain. Only two years after the Constitution had been adopted he had seen the French Revolution, with its constitutions of a day or of a year, the carmagnole of party strife, and the sudden destruction of the property, credit, and institutions of that nation. That revolution was still in the height of its power. Our chief says nothing of all this, but it is plainly in his thought, and he urges on his children reverence for law, union, peace, fear of party spirit, economy, religion, hatred of change, and strict maintenance of the public credit. Clearly he was thinking of the wild doctrines of the rights of man as an individual without regard to the rights of society, which characterized the French Revolution and are still a potent force even in the modern world.

I wrote this some years ago. Such a revolution as the French Revolution is going on now, certainly in Russia and possibly in other nations. It must work itself out in each case upon the spot. Each nation must learn for itself to govern itself. No others, certainly not we, can teach them how. No alliance could or should control what the President calls the autonomy of each people and their autonomous desires.

Mr. SLOAN. One other question, if you please.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In just one minute.

America will intervene whenever it is necessary to save the world from robber conquest. But until that danger again arises America will mind her own business and keep her hands off while she holds up the light of liberty that will enlighten the earth after the allied armies have established a fair and business government in the various territories. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. I am very much interested in the very able speech, but I did not hear all of it. I would like to know whether the gentleman attempts in any wise to square this talk for a league of nations with the Farewell Address of our first President?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It can not be squared.

Mr. SLOAN. And you feel safer in following the address of George Washington than you do the distinguished passenger on the George Washington, do you?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am not making a comparison, sir. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman; the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], in charge of the bill, wishes that 30 minutes' recognition be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, one of the imperative problems to be solved as a part of the reconstruction legislation of this war will be the creation of a budget system for the United States. This country, strange to say, has had nothing approaching a budget system, but the business interests of the country are now beginning to discuss with a very deep-seated earnestness the necessity for such a system. It may clarify the problem somewhat, and possibly lead to its solution, if we get some idea of what is meant by a budget system. To my mind a budget system means simply the two sides of the public ledger. It means that the Federal Government should gauge its expenditures by its income, or possibly, stated from the opposite angle, that it should provide its income in proportion to its necessary expenses, and that there should appear upon the open pages of the public ledger the exact statement of the governmental expense on the one side, balanced on the other by an exact statement of the sources of revenue out of which those expenses are to be paid.

This system is so simple and is so fundamental in all business enterprises, and its need is so clear to every man who has had the most elementary experience in business affairs, that it seems a matter of the greatest surprise that nothing of the kind has ever occurred in regard to our Federal expenlitures.

One reason for this has been that we have subsisted during our national life very largely upon a system of indirect taxation, raised from tariff duties and internal revenue, under which system it is absolutely impossible to tell what the national income is to be. Hence the expenditures could not be regulated in accordance with the income. In fact, we had as many surpluses in our Federal Treasury under that system as we had deficits. Now we have come to an era of direct taxation, in which the backbone of the fiscal system of this Government must be the income tax. Every man will see reflected in his annual tax bill the burdens of the Federal Government, and there will be no opportunity to camouflage or to juggle or to say that taxes are not borne by the citizen. There will be no opportunity to pretend that the foreigner pays the tax. There will be no chance to say that taxes are not a public burden, but in some mysterious way are the source of prosperity to the Nation. Once we eliminate that idea from the public mind there will be no difficulty in getting down to a system of a budget.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. How much nearer will there be certainty as to the Government's income when based upon income tax that has not already been earned than there is on the income which is based on the revenue derived from a tariff tax, which depends upon the amount of imports? I would like to find out where the greater certainty comes in.

Mr. BORLAND. There is a great deal more certainty. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. Tariff taxes are based upon the imports that chance to come in during a fiscal year. The imports are dependent upon world conditions of trade, which are absolutely out of the control of the country levying the tariff duty and which are impossible to foresee. We can only estimate them by what has occurred in the past, and we have never succeeded yet in hitting the amount even approximately. But an income tax is based upon the current income of persons and of corporations in the United States, whose volume of business for the current year is absolutely a matter of record. There is a certain margin according to which we can estimate the increase of business. We can not, of course, foresee any extraordinary matters that might increase or diminish these revenues, but we can hit approximately the revenues, and, as a matter of fact, our experience under an income tax shows that we are able approximately to estimate them.

Mr. STEVENSON. But does not income also depend largely upon the condition of business in the country, and does it not vary very largely? And when we make appropriations here in the early part of the year, based on the income that citizens are going to have that year, are we able to foretell what the conditions are going to be and what amount we are going to get?

Mr. BORLAND. We are better able to tell what the business is to be than what the tariff will produce. A man running a street car company does not know exactly how many people are going to ride on his cars next year, but he has an accurate idea of how many have ridden on them in the year before, and the prospects of an increase or a decrease, and he is able to make an accurate estimate within a few dollars of how much his fares will amount to. And exactly so as to any man's business. No merchant can tell certainly, when he puts a stock of goods on the shelves, what he will make out of that stock of goods, but nine times out of ten he can do it nearly enough to enable him to fix the prices properly. The very change of the fiscal system from the indirect to direct taxes is going to force a budget system. In my judgment that is one of two elements.

The other element is the enormous growth of the Federal expenditures. Heretofore while Federal expenditures have been comparatively little per capita in this country, little attention has been paid to them, but now they are tremendously heavy and bid fair during a course of years to be materially heavy; so materially heavy as to amount to an important factor in the earnings of every business man in the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman care to give to the House an estimate of what he thinks our expenditures will be in the year 1920?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I am utterly unable to tell closer than was given by the leader of the majority [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman agree with the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that they will be about $4,000,000,000?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. That is my estimate. That would be approximately my estimate; at least $4,000,000,000 in 1920.

Mr. LONGWORTH. At least?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I say "at least" because I do not think that is an overstatement at all.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Does the gentleman take into account any interest to be paid by the foreign countries who have secured these loans from the United States? Have you deducted that?

Mr. BORLAND. No. I do not think between now and 1920 we will collect a dollar of interest from any foreign country. On the contrary, I am quite convinced that we will continue to advance them money.

Mr. FOCHT. Under this theory, would you make provision for any payment of the public debt whatever?

Mr. BORLAND. No. That does not, in my judgment, embrace a sinking fund. That embraces the interest upon our accrued indebtedness and the cost of the upkeep of our present activities.

Mr. FOCHT. Under this budget system you would undertake to relieve the House and the country from all these difficulties that we have had with deficiency bills? We will have no more deficiency bills? Is that the idea?

Mr. BORLAND. That is a new idea, but possibly that is true.

Mr. FOCHT. Furthermore, do I understand you to absolutely abandon the old traditional policy of your party of a tariff for revenue only? [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. If that is so traditional, then I abandon it, but it is not traditional, to my mind.

Mr. FOCHT. It is not?

Mr. BORLAND. No. Up to the time that an income tax was constitutional in this country—in fact, I thought it was constitutional in 1893—but up to the time that an income tax was constitutional in this country it was absolutely essential to rely upon a tariff for revenue. But the traditional policy of the Democratic Party, if I understand it aright, has always been for an income tax as the fairest and most democratic system of raising revenue. If a tariff exists the Democrats insist that it shall be so framed as to provide revenue, and not be prohibitive in character.

When we speak of a budget we understand, impliedly, the English system. Under the English system, as I understand it, the officers of the Crown, who are responsive to and practically chosen by the popular branch of the legislature, prepare both the estimates of expenditures and the tax proposal, and present them as one concrete plan to Parliament.

Under that system, if the people do not desire a certain activity of the government, then they can be assured that it will cause a certain definite reduction in the tax bill. If they insist upon a certain activity—for instance, old-age pensions—then they are confronted with the plain necessity of providing by a tax for the money necessary for that activity. If they do not want the activity, they can get along without the tax. If they want the activity, they must have the tax. They can balance the one against the other. As I understand it, the English Government must stand or fall upon its budget. It goes before the country with its budget, which includes everything from the largest question of foreign policy and national defense down to the smallest road or bridge in the kingdom. The ministry, or the Government, as it is called, stands or falls upon the success of that budget in passing Parliament.

There is one particular feature about that system which does not prevail here. There the executive is absolutely the creature of the legislative branch. If the program of the executive is not accepted, it means political death, and a ministry must be formed which will command a proper majority in Parliament. In our Government we have an Executive chosen for a fixed term, who may lose the command of the legislative branch of the Government without being legislated out of office. It is not difficult to see why every civilized nation which has adopted parliamentary government has adopted the English system. There is no Government, outside of some unsuccessful Republics to the south of us, that has attempted to fix the tenure of executive power. The executive power in all parliamentary governments resides in a ministry responsive directly to the representatives of the people.

Under our system of government we not only have no budget system but our system is so chaotic that it is almost impossible to describe it in a few words or even in many. Under the theory of our Constitution Congress has the sole power of raising revenue and appropriating money. It has no control over the Executive; it has no control over the advisers of the Executive, who are the heads of the departments. After the Cabinet officers are once confirmed by the Senate their term of office is practically fixed. But, theoretically, Congress has absolute control over the public purse. It can raise such money as it sees fit and provide by law for the expenditure of the funds in such manner as it deems wise. The Executive is supposed to carry out those instructions. In practice that is not possible. As a matter of fact, the Executive must furnish the basis of the information upon which the appropriations are made. Under our practice that basis is the estimates. Those estimates are prepared annually by the chiefs of the bureaus and the heads of the departments. There is no correlation between them. There is no limit to them except the expansive force of the imagination of an ambitious politician who happens to be at the head of a particular bureau. Any executive officer can estimate for all kinds of activities that he thinks he would like to engage in and which might enlarge the importance of his particular work. Some of them might be good. All might be good. But there is nothing to indicate their relative value or importance. Those estimates go to the Secretary of the Treasury and as a purely clerical matter are put in the form of a compilation and are sent to Congress. Here they are distributed in fragments. A fragment is thrown to one committee and another fragment to another committee, according to the division of jurisdiction fixed by the rules of the House of Representatives. The appropriation bills are made up in those several committees absolutely without relation to the relative importance of any of the particular estimates.

It is true that there are men on all of these committees who by length of service and experience are familiar with the history of certain appropriations. It is true also that in the hearings had upon the question of granting a new appropriation it is possible in some way to have an accounting as to what was done with the previous appropriation for the same or similar purposes. But even if it were possible to have accurate information of the expenditure of previous appropriations Congress is perfectly powerless after it has got the information. In but few cases can it refuse a new appropriation for a meritorious purpose on account of the misappropriation or unwise use of a previous appropriation. It has not, except in the grossest cases of criminality, any possible control over the officer who may have been guilty of the unwise or unlawful use of the money. It can not control, except by legislative limitation, the use of the new funds. My experience is that the power of Congress to control by limitation the use of money in the hands of the executive is the feeblest power on earth. It is a power that any smart man can evade. It is a power that ties the hands only of the efficient. It is a power that adds to the delay and red tape and expense of government. It is impossible for Congress, under the form of limitation, to compel efficiency in the executive departments. We must rely upon the centralized responsibility of the executive departments themselves.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not Congress under this additional disadvantage as compared with the House of Commons, that there, as I understand it, no public bill appropriating money can even be introduced in the House of Commons except through the ministry, whereas here any Member of Congress can offer any number of bills appropriating any number of millions?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is entirely right.

Mr. FOCHT. That applies not only to appropriation bills, but it is well known that a member of Parliament has no right or option with relation to introducing any legislation. All legislation there is controlled by the ministry, which means the Crown.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, no; it does not mean the Crown.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman has made the point that there is no limitation on the amount of the appropriation bills that may be introduced in Congress, and that therefore a great flood of such bills can accumulate in the office of the President of the United States. Now, is it not true in every State of the Union that the governor of that State generally has before him appropriations amounting to probably five times the amount that the State taxation would bear according to the ruling rate, and does not every governor have to be a sort of a budget committee of his own, and prune the appropriations down to what the people will stand?

Mr. BORLAND. Undoubtedly that is in a measure true.

Mr. ELSTON. Now, why can not the President of the United States organize an advisory committee to supervise the bills that come to him, and exercise the right of veto, and in that way, to some extent, take the place of the budget system?

Mr. BORLAND. That has been suggested, I will say to the gentleman from California—that the President of the United States be given the right to veto specific items in appropriation bills. The gentleman from California realizes what an enormous burden that would be, even if the President did it only in the counsels of his own office; but if we were to turn loose on him all the people interested for and against a particular item it would be a very much larger burden. I do not think that is the real remedy. I know it is a remedy used in a great many States, and possibly it works in a satisfactory way.

Mr. ELSTON. I spoke of that as a mediating factor and not as a solution of the proposition.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. That question of vetoing the specific items in an appropriation bill would involve calling the roll of the House on each item.

Mr. BORLAND. It might.

Mr. STEVENSON. In the State of South Carolina I have seen the governor veto 160 items in one appropriation bill, and it took four days to call the roll on a sufficient number of items to pass them over his vote, and they passed every one of them.

Mr. BORLAND. To resume my discussion, I say that not only are there a dozen committees with power to frame appropriation bills, but there are a number of committees that prepare and bring in bills that provide a charge on the Public Treasury which must afterwards be met by appropriations from the public funds.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think I got a wrong conception of the meaning of the gentleman. Does he desire us to understand that the members of Parliament can not add an amendment to a supply bill or an appropriation bill?

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to convey that idea now, although I have not reached that point. It is a fact.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman contend that we ought to have such a budget system that the Congress of the United States would not have the power to add to or take from an appropriation bill?

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to contend that Congress does not need the power to add to the estimates of the executive.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I am sure the gentleman is going to include this thought, just where he is going to lodge any power or authority or discretion or option in respect to limitation of appropriations, who is to have it, and how are they to exercise it?

Mr. BORLAND. A budget system implies necessarily a centralized responsibility of the executive. It abolishes the twilight zone by which the executive and Congress both escape the ultimate responsibility of increase of governmental expenses. If there has been any failure, in my judgment it has been perfectly plain that it has been the failure on the part of Congress to control the efficiency of the executive departments. That seems to be absolutely impossible under our system. We must look the budget system squarely in the face if we are to discuss it, and under such a system it is essential that the executive be permitted to control all estimates and expenditures and all proposals of taxes, and that they balance one another, so that the program can be presented as a whole upon the responsibility of the executive. That necessarily takes away from the legislative the power to add to that program. It does not take away from the legislative the power to veto any or all the items of the program, but it does necessarily take away from the legislative the power to initiate appropriations.

What does the legislative department really lose by the loss of that power? All of us know that, as a matter of fact, the charge that Members of Congress have an undue appetite for pork is largely a matter of newspaper persiflage. The truth about the matter is that the real appetite for pork is back in the constituency. I have rarely seen the man elected to this House from any constituency, urban or rural, that did not come here the first day of his term pledged to make some kind of a raid on the Federal Treasury. I do not recall an exception to that rule. If a man wants to run for Congress anywhere in the United States, the first thing he does is to think up something he can ask the Federal Government to spend in that district and go out and campaign on that issue. If he wants to run against the sitting Member, the first charge he makes against him is that he did not bring home the bacon to that district, and he, the new aspirant, pledges himself to do better in that line than the man he hopes to succeed, who probably had a fine record himself as a pork hunter.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. For a short question.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the budget can not be added to by Congress and is originated by the executive, have you not shifted the constitutional right to originate revenue and appropriate legislation in the House?

Mr. BORLAND. The Constitution says that no money shall be withdrawn from the Federal Treasury except by appropriations made in accordance with law. We are not shifting that right at all. The Constitution also says that bills that raise revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. Of course the House of Representatives would have to adhere in a large measure to the whole program presented by the executive.

Now, what have we lost? We have lost, in my judgment, very little in losing the power to add items of appropriation on the floor, but we have gained much in the centralization of responsibility on the executive. This brings me to a point of very much more importance, in my judgment, and one that we ought to face fearlessly. If the executive has the sole power of laying out the program of revenue, the sole power of estimating for appropriations, and the sole responsibility of expenditure, as it does in fact now, then the legislative ought to reserve to itself the power of vetoing the program of the executive and ought to have the courage to veto it, if the plan does not commend itself to the popular judgment.

Men talk about the risk of starving the executive by withholding supply bills. Why, the whole history of free government rests on the power of the people to starve the Government until the policy of the executive conforms to the will of the people. Unless the people and their representatives have both the will and the courage to starve the executive until it complies with the popular will, then the lesson of parliamentary government has been learned in vain. If a plan be presented by an executive with a fixed tenure which does not meet the approval of the majority of the legislative body, it would be absolutely the right and the high moral duty of the legislative body to say so. Then the issue would be clearly presented to the people as to whether the legislature or the executive were right on that program.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman has answered the question I desired to ask as to where he would lodge the power. I understand it would be with the President?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Is that the gentleman's judgment? Is that the common idea of those who favor the budget system, that the President should have this control?

Mr. BORLAND. I can not speak for others, and only for myself, and am only giving a few fragmentary views of my own.

Mr. FOCHT. I would also ask if the President of the United States had control of these vast appropriations, whether he means he should allow them to follow it up by having a tenure limited to one term or whether he would expect him to stay here for life, with all this money to spend?

Mr. BORLAND. I am speaking about our system, where the Executive has a fixed tenure of power. We can not throw the Executive out of office by failure to pass supply bills. I am saying Congress still reserves the right, by failure to give him the necessary money, to control the policy of the Executive if it has the courage to exercise it.

Mr. FOCHT. I want to ask: The gentleman is differentiating between the policy and system of government that we have and that in England, and seems to be exalting theirs and deprecating ours. Is it not possible the forefathers who framed this Constitution for us believed in their hearts there would be intelligence enough in the American Congress so to frame the laws as still to retain the power given to the people instead of delegating it all to one man? What is the gentleman's answer to that?

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer it.

Mr. FOCHT. If the gentleman pleases.

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer it in this way: At the time our Federal Government was formed in 1787 a budget system was not known in England or anywhere else on earth. Our Government is the oldest government in the world——

Mr. FOCHT. Of its kind.

Mr. BORLAND. Without exception. The English Government in its present form dates from 1830. The reform bill which gave control to the House of Commons rather than to the House of Lords and the whole budget system of England dates from that time. The other parliamentary governments are the same way.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think, to carry out his idea of a budget system, it will be necessary to amend the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. BORLAND. No; and I will discuss that in a minute. There is one other thing I want to add at this point. Now, gentlemen, besides centralizing on the executive the absolute responsibility for all items of appropriation we retain to Congress the right to reject the budget if we decide it is wrong. Then we come to the auditing——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman passes away from the budget system——

Mr. BORLAND. I am not passing away from it.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was going into the question of auditing. I think I can get the gentleman a little more time if necessary. I would like to say there has been a great deal of talk throughout the country about the advisability of Congress adopting what is referred to as the "budget" system. My own experience is that I have never met anyone before who knew what it was. As I understand the gentleman, if correctly, it is not what is known in other parts of the world as the budget system. The executive prepares a list of appropriations to be made, transmits that to the legislative body, which is not able to increase any item or add any new item?

Mr. BORLAND. It has power to reject any item or reduce it.

Mr. MANN. Has power to reject any item. Of course that is in all cases as now in operation in countries where they have a responsible ministry, where, of course, the ministry does not have the parliament with it it goes by the board anyhow. Now, as a matter of fact, do not we in this country come very close to a budget system now? Is it not a fact we rarely make an appropriation which is not estimated for by the Executive?

Mr. BORLAND. Very rarely.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact in most cases the committees on appropriation, instead of adding new items which are not estimated for, confine most of their attention to the consideration of bills for reducing items which are estimated for, or cutting out items entirely which are estimated for?

Mr. BORLAND. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. And under the existing law, is it not the duty of the executive branch of the Government in making these estimates to make what would practically be a budget?

Mr. BORLAND. It is. It is their duty to make up this compilation of estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall want about 15 more minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BORLAND. I thank the gentleman. I might want more time, as I desire to cover another point.

Mr. MANN. If the budget were to be made up under the so-called budget system, would it not be made up by precisely the same individuals and departments now making up the estimates?

Mr. BORLAND. No; not in that complete sense. The estimates which come in now are only a compilation——

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman will recall that the law requires——

Mr. BORLAND. It requires it.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, if the gentleman means to say that people do not comply with the law, that is another thing. The law, as I understand, now requires all estimates shall be submitted to the President——

Mr. BORLAND. And to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. To the Secretary and to the President, and that the President must send to Congress a recommendation, in case the estimates of appropriation exceed the estimated revenue, how the additional revenue shall be raised. And I assume that the President will comply with those provisions of law. Now, how would it change the situation in the interest of economy to make a little more absolute the estimates now made by the departments which are constantly rejected by the committees and by Congress, in the form of a budget, giving them a little higher authority than they now have? How would that be in the interest of economy? By centralizing the responsibility? Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. BORLAND. That is exactly my idea. I am not at all positive, neither can any man be positive, that the change would result in economy. The appetite for "pork" might be transferred from the legislative to the executive department, and it is entirely possible that an administration might come into power conceiving the happy idea that by a proper distribution of appropriations it could maintain itself in power. That is not entirely impossible. There is no way to prevent that. But the responsibility would be clear, not confused. If the people wanted economy, they could get it, but if they wanted extravagance, they could get that. But the whole idea, as I understand, of the budget system is to centralize before public opinion both the power and the responsibility. Now, if we can accomplish that by simply waiving our right—our supposed right under the Constitution, which we rarely exercise, as the gentleman says—if we can waive that right to add to the budget and hold the executive strictly accountable for every item in the budget, we have accomplished at least that advantage of the budget system.

Mr. MANN. Well, the executive is now responsible for every item in the estimates.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has failed to read the American press in his usual careful way, because it is the very common and widespread opinion of the people and the press that Congress is responsible for every extravagance.

Mr. MANN. I think the press is rather demanding a budget system.

Mr. BORLAND. What the gentleman says is correct. Congress very frequently cuts down the estimates of the departments.

Mr. MANN. Take, for instance, two bills that are sometimes referred to as "pork-barrel bills"—the river and harbor bill and the public-buildings bill—and is it not a fact that every year the estimates for public buildings and rivers and harbors vastly exceed the appropriations made by Congress?

Mr. BORLAND. Always, without exception, in my experience, the approved projects coming in for rivers and harbors and approved projects coming in for public buildings from the executive departments exceed what Congress is willing to grant, and yet Congress has been constantly attacked as the author and sole beneficiary of that system.

Mr. MANN. I am not seeking to defend the bills at this time. I endeavored to read something in reference to the budget system and ascertain such facts as I could. It seems to me, and I realize that we may need to do something—it seems to me the budget system as operated in other countries is mainly designed to leave to the voting power of the legislative branch free right to O. K. something which they can not refuse to do. And that it only adds to the executive power instead of taking away from it. It seems to me, while the press of the country is rather advocating the budget system, it is doing it on the theory that it will take away the executive power and add to the legislative to keep down appropriations.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very glad to have the expressed views of the gentleman from Illinois, and I do not feel that I have either the capacity or experience to answer all of the objections that he has implied and suggested. The only thing I can say is if we talk about a budget system at all we must still look the question squarely in the face and make up our mind what we mean by the budget system. I am trying to explain what it means to me; that is, definite responsibility both for revenue and expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand aright, a budget system is submitted by the executive, generally by the ministry. The Prime Minister in England, for instance, presents it, and if it is turned down the government changes. Then there is an election, and after an election the budget system is not worth three whoops, as I understand it.

Mr. BORLAND. I covered that a moment ago.

Mr. CANNON. I was not in, and I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BORLAND. I covered it in this way, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois: Our executive has a fixed tenure of office, but the party to which the executive belongs may lose the control of the legislative branch, without the executive going out of office. That differentiates us from all other parliamentary Governments in the world, practically. Now, what the gentleman says is true. The failure of the budget in any parliamentary Government of the world is the death of the ministry and necessitates usually a general election. With us it would not be so, we having an executive with a fixed tenure of office. With the power in Congress to provide or withhold the supplies for carrying out the orders of the executive, it would depend then upon a pure question of political courage between the legislative and the executive. If the legislative had the courage to refuse the supplies to the executive, the executive would be compelled to present a program which would be satisfactory to the legislature. That is the only answer I can see under our Constitution.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. As a matter of fact, is not the budget system as it has been discussed rather a nebulous proposition, something like the freedom of the seas and the removal of economic barriers, and various other propositions?

Mr. BORLAND. It is a matter of taste.

There is one point I wanted to discuss further, and that is the question of audit. In my judgment, as I say, centralized responsibility for both pages of the ledger must rest with the Executive. And Congress must give up its nebulous power to add to the budget on the floor of the House—a power so rarely exercised that it is not worth contending over.

The third thing is true, that we must have a legislative control over the expenditures of funds that have once been granted. That is the thing that we do not now have. The audit which occurs now is what is known as the administrative audit. It is an audit only under control of the executive officer himself who spends the money, or rather it is under the same group of executive officers who expend the money. It is done by an auditor of the Treasury Department for the different departments of the Government. Of course there is an officer whose duty it is to pass upon the question whether a particular expenditure ought to be made out of one particular appropriation or out of another particular appropriation. His decision is more or less of a technical legal nature. Neither of these goes into the question of the wisdom, the efficiency, or the propriety of the expenditure of the money. Neither of them goes into the question whether the purpose the Congress had in mind could have been accomplished by a less expenditure of money or by an expenditure in a totally different way. In other words, the executive officers are in the habit of coming to Congress for all that they can possibly get and getting all they possibly can and then seeing to it that they spend it all, for fear that if they show an unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year Congress may refuse further appropriations along the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Can the gentleman from Mississippi yield me 10 minutes more?

Mr. SISSON. Can the gentleman get along with five?

Mr. BORLAND. I would rather have 10, but I will accommodate myself to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but I would like to have the gentleman make his question brief.

Mr. STEVENSON. I got the impression from the discussions I have heard here on the budget system that it also embraces the idea that all appropriations should be carried and handled by only one committee, instead of five or six, as they are now. Is there anything like that embraced in the gentleman's idea?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think that is fundamental. I do think, however, it is fundamental that the legislative branch of the Government should control the audit of the expenditure of the money.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have no doubt that is a good idea.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that power to audit the expenditure of the money is more valuable than the power to add appropriations from the floor of the House. It is a notable fact, gentlemen, that under the English system the auditing committee of Parliament is in control of the party opposite to the party in power. It is never even under the control of the party in power, and it does seem to me that is one of the most wholesome features of the whole thing.

It is possible for experienced members of a committee, such as my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who was at the head of the Committee on Appropriations for years and is now a distinguished and hard-working member of it, a man of intimate familiarity with the history of appropriations, to detect in many cases the unwise and improper expenditure of the funds, but the power of Congress when that is done is a small matter. Its power is feeble when it discovers those cases of incompetence or abuse. But it is not possible for the average Member to even discover them under the glittering generalities of the average testimony that is given in the average appropriation hearing. There must be somewhere a committee charged with the power of going through these expenditures to determine the wisdom and propriety of them, not simply to determine whether they have been honestly made. For we may correctly assume, I think, that in all parties that might be in power in our Government, in the main, our expenditures would be honest under the law. But whether they have been wisely and efficiently made is an entirely different matter, and that, after all, is the real matter of interest to the taxpayer. If the Congress can not by legislative limitation control, direct, or procure efficiency in the various departments of the Government, there is only one way, then, in which it can proceed. If it can not do so by legislation in advance, then it can certainly be done by an audit and a public record of the expenditure after it has been made.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman means for the legislature to control the expenditure of that money?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; to require an accounting of its expenditure.

Mr. TILSON. Would he have a committee of Congress clothed with power and authority to change the expenditure in any way? What could they do more than make a formal audit to see whether it was correct or not?

Mr. BORLAND. The audit made under this system is more of a record for the public. It is not possible to recall the expenditures. In some cases, of course, it is possible to lead to the dismissal of officials, and frequently that might also be a wholesome result; but the main purpose accomplished is exactly what is done in every business house—to find out where the money has gone and whether those charged with the executive authority in that concern have wisely used the funds of the common purse.

Mr. TILSON. Then the gentleman speaks of its being in control of the minority. The gentleman, of course, means in that case that it would be opposed to the Executive? That is, in this case it would be a party in opposition to the White House?

Mr. BORLAND. That is true.

Mr. TILSON. Rather than to the majority in Congress?

Mr. BORLAND. That is true; opposition to the Executive.

Now, gentlemen, I realize what I am saying. You gentlemen on the Republican side are coming into power in the Sixty-sixth Congress. You will have your investigating committees of the executive departments anyway. They will be hit-or-miss concerns, possibly, or they may not be. It is a great deal better, in my judgment, that they should be general in their operations and have some logical and symmetrical plan than that they be simply smelling committees, as they might easily be. It is entirely possible to dig up some one item which might have some political significance without being of any service whatever to the taxpayer. But a full and genuine accounting is a very essential thing, I think, to the taxpayers, and I think it is a very essential thing to the budget. Of course, we understand that in parliamentary governments the ministers have access to the floor of the legislative branch.

Even that is not impossible under our Constitution. All that would be required would be a simple change in the rules of this House. In my judgment it would be a very highly desirable change. I think when a matter concerning the Post Office Department was before the House it would be entirely possible to have the Postmaster General given the freedom of debate. On a matter concerning the issuance of liberty bonds and the expenses of floating the loan it would be entirely possible to have the Secretary of the Treasury here to explain the matter. If it concerned an expenditure for agricultural purposes, it would be entirely possible and very much better to have the Secretary of Agriculture here to give us some definite knowledge of his plans. We are always told from some source what the executive wants, but it would be very much better to have the right to cross-examine the executive himself and ask him why he wants that rather than some other possible plan.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Admitting that there would be certain advantages in having Cabinet officers appear and defend the items in their bills, would not the inevitable result be that the men on the committee, who now feel the responsibility of investigation, because they have to defend the items on the floor, would feel no further responsibility, and that no one in the House would know anything about any appropriations?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is suggesting a possible difficulty there. The members of the committee do undertake to post themselves as to these questions which they think are going to arise and endeavor to give information to their fellow Members of the House. Sometimes they are able to do it. Sometimes, of course, they are unable to do it.

Mr. MANN. Of course, no one knows enough to know everything that can come up on an appropriation bill, but the man in charge of an appropriation bill on the floor of this House who comes in once without knowing his bill very thoroughly, never feels anxious to come before the House again under the same disadvantage.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose the question to be one of personal responsibility for a policy. The members of the committee are not personally responsible for the policy of the member of the Cabinet. They give all the information that is available, but they are not responsible. Suppose Congress wants to know why a certain policy was adopted by a certain member of the Cabinet, as it has a right, in framing this legislation or granting its appropriations, to be satisfied on that point. Is it not very much better to get that information at first hand from the man who is responsible?

Mr. MANN. Do we not get it at first hand?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Is not the Cabinet officer or the subordinate under him asked those very identical questions in the committee during the hearings? And those hearings are printed so that all members have an opportunity to see them in cold print. Is not that a great deal more effective than it would be for some Cabinet officer to rise here, who would not know anything about the details of the subject, without having four or five or a dozen subordinates to coach him and give him the information on something that he is not posted on?

Mr. BORLAND. I think not.

Mr. MANN. I am not indicating my own attitude on the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. I know that, of course. The Cabinet officer may not be thoroughly posted. It is impossible for the chairman of the committee to be thoroughly posted, and the Cabinet officer may not be.

Mr. MANN. I am not reflecting on anybody.

Mr. BORLAND. It is not possible for a Cabinet officer to know all the questions of detail, but he would know the general questions of policy. I heard it suggested by a distinguished Member of this House that one effect of the rule permitting Cabinet officers to appear on the floor and be subjected to the interrogation of Members of the House would be the shattering of a number of large-sized political reputations. I am not sure about that. But whatever might be the result, I think it would be wholesome.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KINKAID. As a practical proposition, does not the gentleman believe that the committee would become better informed by having a Cabinet officer or his representatives, who are better informed than the Cabinet officer himself, probably—or take several of them together, their combined information would be more effective, perhaps, than that of the Cabinet officer—to have those assistants of the Cabinet officer come once or twice or three times or more before the committee, and thus ground the committee thoroughly by examining and cross-examining, and then that well-grounded, well-advised committee come before the House and inform the House thoroughly and answer all questions? Would not that be better, as a practical proposition?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think not. I am sorry to say I would not agree to that. I think that if the Cabinet officer could not answer the questions in detail he would do exactly as he does now. He would say, "I will file that report later"; but I think upon the broad questions of his policy he could and should be able to answer all questions. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, last week when the bill for a sanatorium for the treatment of tubercular patients was up for consideration we were told that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were preparing a measure that would take care of all the men who had contracted tuberculosis in the service. I take it that every Member of this House, Democrat or Republican, feels that something ought to be done for the care of the men who have contracted tuberculosis in the service.

Now, I want to make a few suggestions for your consideration. First of all, if you are going to do anything for these tubercular patients it must be done right away, because any medical man will tell you that unless tuberculosis is treated in its beginning there is very little chance of effecting a cure. Second, I think we ought to find out as soon as possible the number of men who have contracted tuberculosis in the service. Third, I think we ought to appropriate a sum large enough to take care of all those men. Fourth, I think we ought to select a commission composed of experts on tuberculosis to locate these hospitals, and I think that this commission ought to be instructed to divide the country into districts—say three or four districts. I make this last suggestion for two reasons: First, because we know that climate is not considered essential, and that it is better to treat a patient in the climate to which he is accustomed and where he intends to live after he is cured; second, because if these hospitals are located in these different districts—east, west, south, and in the center—it will be possible for the parents of these boys to visit them from time to time, which will keep them more cheerful, and we know what effect the mind has on the body in the treatment of disease.

Now, gentlemen, I thought I would make these suggestions for your consideration, with the view of getting quick results. Bear this in mind: Talk will not cure tuberculosis. If this Congress is going to do anything at all for the men who contracted tuberculosis in the service, something must be done right away so that these men can be treated now. If you wait until they have large cavities in their lungs, it will do no good.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAZARO. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman enlarge upon the point he made that we must treat the man in the same climate in which he is to live after he is cured? That appeals to me; but it seems to me that is usually disregarded in taking people and placing them in sanatoriums in some particular kind of a climate, without any regard to the place where they are to live afterwards.

Mr. LAZARO. We know to-day that it is best to treat them in the climate in which they are expected to live.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that a man can go into a very dry climate, say, and be cured, and then if he returns to some other country from which he came, with a different kind of climate from that which he left, he probably takes the disease again and dies?

Mr. LAZARO. That is often the case. I wish to make the suggestion that if we are going to do anything at all for the men who contracted tuberculosis in the service, if we mean what we say, we must do it at once, because the time to treat the tubercular patient is in the beginning of the disease.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield? I think the gentleman is right, but this program for Congress to inaugurate will take time, and in the meantime would it not be feasible to gather the worst cases together and put them into tents until the other program is ready?

Mr. LAZARO. I think a commission composed of experts on tuberculosis could have these hospitals ready within a very short time, provided we get at it right away.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it was a very interesting speech that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], on the subject of the budget, and it drew forth some interrogatories that were equally interesting, particularly those in regard to the "pork-barrel" system as it is supposed to exist, and especially at this time, when the two bills referred to as being "pork-barrel" bills occupy so modest a place in the appropriations of Congress.

I have before me a statement made by the Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, of Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, summarizing the appropriations made for the present fiscal year. They mount up to more than $24,000,000,000. The public building and grounds bill, charged with being a "pork-barrel" bill, is not mentioned in this list at all, and the river and harbor bill, which gets a very great deal of undeserved criticism, is referred to as having been passed with a paltry appropriation of only $23,000,000.

But the purpose for which I took the floor, Mr. Chairman, is to discuss not the budget system, but passing events.

It may not be unconstitutional for the President of the United States to go abroad to personally attend to such important business as must be transacted at the peace conference, but his going will probably be more criticized than any other of his public acts disregarding American precedents and traditions. While the President may deserve popular acclaim abroad—he has certainly rendered great service to the allies—we may fairly ask, What is it that he can do that could not have been done by proper and accredited representatives of the United States, who do not owe to the more than 100,000,000 Americans the constant oversight that is expected of a President? In other words, why could the President not have remained at his post of duty in the United States, where his presence is required daily and hourly, leaving it to the loyalty, integrity, and patriotism of other Americans whom he might have appointed to transact the business that must be transacted at the peace conference?

AMERICAN ALTRUISM.

In many respects, gentlemen of the House, we have been drifting from our national moorings during the last six years. It has come to be a habit. A spirit of cosmopolitan altruism like unto which there has been nothing in the history of the world seems to pervade our national life. There seems to be nothing which other nations ask of us that we will not give. The United States is supposed to be rich and prosperous, and therefore it is easy for the people of the United States to give, even to the point of suffering, in order that others who are competitors, in a commercial sense, may have and hold. That which we would not do generations ago because we believed that "he who provideth not for his own household is worse than an infidel," we now seem to want to do without any regard to the consequences of the accounting we must make.

I pause parenthetically to say that though we hear much about what other nations have done in the great world war there will be an accounting that we all, from the President down, must make to the American people, and particularly to the American taxpayer, who does not yet know what burdens have been levied on him in the interest of our allies, and in order that our own arms might be strengthened in this war.

We built the Panama Canal thinking it to be an American enterprise, and the President, as a candidate for President, insisted that it was our canal, and that it should be used by our ships, and that they should have a preference, and that the promise made in that regard "was not molasses to catch flies." But after he had entered his high office his attitude changed toward that project, and we are now told that the canal is as much for the use of other nations as for our own. I do not object to other nations using the canal, but we are compelled under existing conditions, in spite of our effort and expenditure, to give them what is in effect a seeming preference over the United States in that their shipping, apart from canal tolls, may be more cheaply conducted than our own.

And again I pause to say there is a propaganda now on in the United States which is intended to teach our easy-minded and easy-going American people that the Panama Canal should be given over as a peace offering to the nations of the world, and particularly to those who are stronger upon the high seas than we are. We have been observing a little of this free and easy disposition of our property, paid for by the taxes of the American people, in Mr. Hurley's speeches concerning the American merchant marine. One would think, judging from some of his utterances, that the billions we are spending for ships, some of them to carry American troops abroad and to bring American troops back—troops that arrived in the nick of time to save Europe and to prevent the overthrow of the democracy for which we enlisted in this fight—were spent merely to aid our competitors for the world's trade; those whom we have helped in this war and who have been protecting their markets in South America and the Orient while we were providing the men and the money to make the war a success.

Credit may be given to the British Navy—only a day or two ago the people of the United States celebrated the glory of British arms—credit may be given the British Navy for helping us to get our troops to Europe—and we seem to have paid well for that service—but while we are giving credit, a credit that may well be deserved, we should not forget that we had a Navy of our own and that that Navy was supposed to be working while all this foreign fighting was going on. Where was our American Navy when all this glorious work was being done by the British Navy? Surely we were not inactive. I made some inquiries of the Navy Department when the American ships struck by German submarines were going down upon our own coast. I learned our Navy was largely abroad or convoying troopships. We were protecting others who were supposed to be protecting us, and we were giving to them our torpedo-boat destroyers, some we sorely needed along our own coast to save our own ships, some of which were sacrificed in order that our troops could go abroad to save the European situation. While we are celebrating other navies, therefore, we do not want to minimize our own. We were certainly not idle on the other side of the water when our naval vessels were needed there.

GOING AFTER TRADE.

Were we following up our trade routes all that time? Were our American ships sent down to South America and the Occident and the Orient? They were not. They were busy on this war business. And while they were busy were our competitors ignoring their opportunities in South America? Were they avoiding these channels of commerce? The testimony of American business men who ran up against all kinds of restrictions and limitations indicates they were not. They were looking after their business all the time, even when our coastwise trade was going down upon the Atlantic shores. Our business seems to have been war business exclusively, as much for the benefit of other nations as for ourselves. These are matters which the President may discuss with foreign nations when he arrives on the other side, but they certainly should not be settled to the disadvantage of American interests nor should we permit them to be so settled.

We have passed laws, like the seaman's law, which was sanctioned by the President, which would lead to the impression that our business is to dedicate ourselves and our resources to foreign nations, while they go about their business gobbling up the trade of the world. The President should watch that situation. In fact, there is a great deal about the President's foreign tour, with all the spectacular features that must necessarily accompany it, that may well give concern to old-line Americans who resent one-man power in the United States and who insist upon an old-fashioned democracy.

Our Government thus far has been conducted on a democratic basis, except as it came dangerously close to autocracy during the war period, and it is not altogether clear that the danger line has been passed even at the present moment. The President has gone abroad, leaving the White House vacant, and we must now await further developments.

Meanwhile we are told that the cables between the United States and Europe are to be put under Government control, and following that is the announcement that the President's Information Bureau, headed by Mr. Creel, who magnanimously announces that he will not ask Congress for any more money, since the President has enough in his special $100,000,000 fund to care for publicity, is to be the advance agent of the foreign expedition.

GETTING THE PRESIDENT'S APPROVAL.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A practical question in legislation connected with the subject of the gentleman's discussion. The Constitution provides in section 7 of Article I that before a bill which has passed the House and Senate becomes a law it must be presented to the President of the United States for his signature, and so forth. I would like to know how the gentleman interprets the word "presentation" in that connection, whether in his judgment it means an actual physical presentation or whether there is such a thing as a constructive presentation of a bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but I understand the Constitution to require the actual physical presentation of a bill, because of the personal signature of the President. It must be signed, and therefore the President himself must see the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am thinking particularly of one piece of legislation which Congress has been urgently requested to pass by the Executive, and that is the revenue legislation. Suppose it were possible for the Senate to consider that bill in 10 days and send it to the House; that it was sent to conference, and it was actually passed by both Houses within two weeks from to-day. Would it be possible for that bill to become a law before the 1st of January?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It might become a law without the President's signature in 10 days.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Ten days after presentation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman. He presents a rather complicated proposition, which the constitutional lawyers now advising the President might very well answer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The matter of actual physical presentation is one of which I will be very glad to have a definition. Does it means that the person carrying it must go exactly to the President himself and put the bill before him, finding the way to his room and laying it down before him? What does he mean by physical presentation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The provision goes on to say that if he approves it, he shall sign it. He can not sign it unless it is presented to him. If not, he shall return it with his objections to the House. He must have the bill in his hands.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then the Clerk of the House or the Senate, as the case may be, must go through to the President himself, through all the rooms as they may be formed, and present the bill physically? Is that the gentleman's construction?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman concludes that the President can not sign the bill unless his hands are actually on the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am talking about the definition of physical presentation as the gentleman stated it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that a signature by wireless or through a spiritualistic medium would be a physical presentation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absent treatment, in other words, of a bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then just exactly what is physical presentation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The handing of the bill to the President, who takes it in his own hand.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And takes a pen.

Mr. GARNER. The gentlemen know that that process has not been actually gone through in 25 years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be. Very many unprecedented things have been done in this administration.

DOUBT ABOUT THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. GARNER. Under the administration of the gentleman's party no such thing ever happened.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think if I were President I would not go abroad under the circumstances, seeing my responsibility to the people of the United States.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman were President——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We would have a fine Government then. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] whether he believes a revenue bill can be passed before the 1st of January without the President's actual signature on the bill?

Mr. GARNER. If it were passed at this time I think the President's signature could be attached to it before the 1st of January.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How could it be done?

Mr. GARNER. It could be presented to him.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely; and he would sign it.

Mr. GARNER. It is not necessary to fight your way to see the President. All you have to do is to give a bill to some one, who will hand it to the President, and that has been the policy for 25 years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman been able to see the President lately without fighting his way?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could the gentleman from Texas, a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, who is conversant with the methods of the other body and with the White House methods, inform the House whether there is any likelihood of the revenue bill passing another body so that it may be presented to the President of the United States?

Mr. GARNER. Apparently there is not much prospect before the 1st of January, with the disposition of certain elements in another body with which the gentleman is more familiar than I am.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is entirely nonpartisan?

Mr. GARNER. Entirely.

Mr. STEVENSON. As to the question of the presentation to the President, is the term "presentation" there anywise different from the general legal term of presentation which governs the presentation of all negotiable paper and things of that kind, where they present it to the general office and place the business and it becomes binding?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there is a difference where a signature is required. The President can not sign by proxy.

Mr. STEVENSON. The acceptance of a paper?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If he did sign by proxy and sent his check to a bank in which the gentleman from South Carolina has considerable interest, he would probably be arrested for forgery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have 15 minutes more.

Mr. DAVIS. I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman.

UNITED STATES NOT AN EASY MARK.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Further, I would say, the Republicans in the Senate have already indicated their purpose to exercise the right conferred upon them by the people in the Constitution. Does this mean they fear the President of the United States in the course of his foreign pilgrimage may make agreements with foreign nations that would not be sanctioned by the representatives of the American people in Congress assembled, or does it mean that the Senate and the House of Representatives, which have yielded to many requests of the President during the war, have determined, now that the war is over, to demand an accounting in the name of the people for the expenditure of funds and the creation of commissions and bureaus, the continuation of which is being sought at the expense of the people?

These are question that may actuate another body. I do not know. Certainly they are questions that come directly home to the people and will, I trust, have due consideration when the people come to consider paying for the war, paying for the troops abroad, and paying for such agreements as may be made, which do not have the sanction of the representatives of the people in Congress assembled.

At any rate it was well that the people should have put a Republican Congress on guard at this particular juncture. We have been mighty generous under the Wilson administration to almost everybody on earth. We will have a big bill to pay, and we will pay it, but there seems no good reason why those who advocate a democracy should not now demand a halt upon that irritating tendency toward autocracy that has characterized many of the bureaucracies created under cover of war. Up to date the administration has refused the cooperation of Congress to check up expenditures and to prevent extravagance and waste. A Republican Congress should seek to protect the interests of the people of the United States and prevent their becoming an "easy mark" for competitive nations or for ambitious men who seem to regard our wonderful resources as a melon to be cut. There is plenty of room under the Constitution as it now stands for a restoration of trade and business on normal lines where every willing worker may have an equal opportunity to make the most of his labor and capital. The United States normal in trade and industry has generally been far in advance of that of any other nation, and with autocratic governmental restrictions removed and adequate protection assured it should never fall below the high standard we have set for it.

PRESIDENT'S ECONOMIC THEORIES.

When the President made his declaration to Congress, enumerating the 14 points which he intended should be submitted to the peace commissioners when appointed, he made a startling statement in point 3, which has been confusing to the minds of many people, particularly those engaged in the industries of the United States, and it will bear repeating at this time, particularly in view of the fact that in his farewell message to Congress the President failed to take the Congress or the people into his confidence in regard to what he meant by that particular point 3.

What was it? A condition for the peace delegates, when assembled, to consider, emanating from the President of the United States, by which apparently he intended to be bound as the President of the United States or through such representatives as he might send. I will read it:

3. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

I am frank to say that many Republicans, when the President read that point 3, were alarmed at his attitude in an international sense. They knew that the President was inclined toward free trade; that he believed in a leveling of the tariff barriers. He had said so. There was no doubt in their minds as to his theoretical position, but they did not believe that the President would seriously carry those theories of his against the wishes, certainly, of the greater half of the people of the United States into an international conference by which the United States was to be bound. The President said, on coming to Congress the first time, away back on April 8, 1913, when he first ascended this American "throne":

Our task is to square them with the actual facts. The sooner that is done the sooner we shall escape from suffering from the facts and the sooner our men of business will be free to thrive by the law of nature—the nature of free business—instead of by the law of legislation and artificial arrangement.

What did he mean? He meant that all business should be free from tariff restrictions, because further he said:

It is plain what those principles must be. We must abolish everything—that bears even the semblance of privilege of any kind or artificial advantage, and put our business men and producers under the stimulation of a constant necessity to be efficient, economical, and enterprising, masters of competitive supremacy, better workers and merchants than any in the world. Aside from the duties laid on articles which we do not, and probably can not, produce, therefore, and the duties laid upon luxuries and merely for the sake of the revenues they yield, the object of the tariff duties henceforth laid must be effective competition, the whetting of American wits by contest with the wits of the rest of the world.

Observe, "abolish everything"—

TREATING AMERICAN BUSINESS ROUGH.

"The whetting of American wits by contest with the wits of the rest of the world." Yes. There was no misunderstanding the President in 1913. Apparently he had not changed his position upon this point, although he may have changed it upon one hundred other points. He meant that we should break down all tariff barriers and set the business of the United States where it would be hopelessly in competition with all other industrial business in the world, where the Fiji Islander with his product should be on an equality with the producer of citrus fruits in Florida; where the Hindu who made his cotton bagging should be on an equality with the man who manufactured cotton products in Massachusetts or elsewhere in the New England States or in the Southern States as far down the line as Texas. It meant that the man who could work for a trifling wage in the mills or shipyards of Japan should be put in competition with the highly paid worker in the American mills and in the American shipyards.

We disputed this theory of the President then, and now that he has told us of his political preferences—I refer to the letter which he wrote 10 days before the election—we are privileged to refer to it again, even though he has voluntarily, and without telling us just the reason why, gone on a mission abroad of great import to the people of the United States, and consequently to the people of the world. Yes; the President has been consistent in his desire to overthrow the preference which the industries of the United States have had by virtue of wise Republican laws, even from the first enactment of Congress down to the present time. Therein lies our danger in the conferences that may take place in Europe.

But we are talking reconstruction now. We are all for reconstruction in the United States. The foreign nations are talking reconstruction also. Every one of our allies is talking reconstruction, and many of them are reconstructing with the help and assistance of the people of the United States. Our rivers and harbors got $23,000,000 in the bill passed by this House last year merely to keep our streams in order, that we might get our ships carrying troops out of our harbors into foreign ports; but we have sent over $8,000,000,000 of American money with which they have not only been improving their rivers and harbors and building railroads, but with which they have been constructing canals for purposes of war at present but for purposes of peace thereafter. That is the condition. So that when this peace arrangement is settled and we again begin to talk about improving something in the United States we may find that they have already "reconstructed" over there, with assistance we have given them, while we refused to spend in our own behalf over here even to the extent of a pittance.

OTHER NATIONS RECONSTRUCTING.

Mr. FOCHT. Does the gentleman believe there will be any way of ascertaining how much money America has advanced for the purpose of making improvements that will be used to compete with the United States after the close of the war?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I voted for every loan, and I stand by the propriety of sending that money abroad. But there is not a foreign nation that was advantaged by these loans that has not been making internal improvements along with its war plans, while we have been forgetting to do that same thing here for ourselves.

I am going to read to you, not from the President of the United States, who is strong on theories and stands for them in the matter of leveling tariff barriers, but from the most recent report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. The chief of that bureau went abroad for the purpose of examining this question of reconstruction on the other side. And what does he say in this report, which is just fresh from Europe?

The outstanding fact under observation is the recognition in every land and by all statesmen of the problem called "economic reconstruction." But of more immediate importance is the fact that England, France, Italy, Germany, and Austria are making preparations to resume their peaceful economic life with improved facilities for foreign trade, with a national supervision of the use of natural resources for the benefit of their own citizens, and with assistance from the State.

While I realize that many plans advocated or adopted in the foreign countries are unsuitable or even unnecessary for the United States, I feel impelled to point out that those plans might involve prejudice to the interests of the United States in foreign fields if they should be administered in a narrow spirit or if the United States should fail to make plain its own interest in them.

That is what England, France, Italy, Germany, and Austria are doing.

What are we doing? Well, for one thing we are still making loans to the allies. Is anybody worrying about a river and harbor "pork" bill just now? Why, we appropriated $23,000,000 for that purpose this year. Still some people worry over it and continue to grieve. Why, I venture to say that more than $23,000,000 was spent on canals in France alone during this war. And yet we have sent approximately $8,000,000,000 to the allies and are preparing to send more even after the war.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman looked at the make-up of the next Rivers and Harbors Committee? If you take seniority as the rule, has the gentleman looked to see who will be the active members of the majority in the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the next Congress?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not looked at it specifically. I will say to the gentleman that the committee is now at work preparing a bill, which I assume will be reported to the House in the next two or three weeks.

Mr. GARNER. What I am speaking of is the make-up of the committee in the next Congress. If seniority rules, who will be on the conference committees and in charge of the work of that committee?

UNITED STATES SHOULD WAKE UP.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not examined the personnel in particular. Of course it will be Republican next year, and if anything I have said will be of advantage to the Republicans I hope they will profit by it, just as I would expect my Democratic friends to do under like circumstances.

But this chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce goes on, in his report to the Secretary, as follows:

Although the various countries will, for a while, undoubtedly work toward economic self-sufficiency and toward the elimination of enemy interests in the exploitation of their resources, it is essential that each of the allied countries should frame its program and the administration of its program with full realization of the extent to which the interests of all the other allied countries are involved. We have no reason to anticipate a purely selfish spirit on the part of any of our allies. It is quite natural, inevitable really, that they should plan as soon as possible to recover their industrial, commercial, and financial equilibrium. It is for us, however, to stand ready to enter, at the proper moment, upon an understanding which will show our appreciation of the community of interest in the larger aspects of trade and economic intercourse after the war, and which will be in harmony with the motives underlying our participation in the war.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that five days after the signing of the armistice the English started practically all of their old steamship lines, running to all the ports of the world?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think that is correct. I know that from August, 1914, down to the present time American shipping has had to go through foreign influence in order to get anywhere. That condition still prevails. I have pending in the State Department now certain claims of American citizens who were wronged upon the high seas. I have been before the State Department in their behalf, but they have been advised to go and try their cases in the courts of London.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have an indefinite time, not to take more than 10 minutes?

Mr. DAVIS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have 10 minutes?

Mr. DAVIS. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will cease quoting from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce, because it is conclusive. It differs from the President's "leveling" process, but nevertheless it is conclusive. It is in the nature of a warning to both sides of the House—a warning to Democrats of what might ensue if we follow literally the President's primary proposition to break down the tariff barriers, or his secondary proposition carried over to the peace conference, to effect a leveling of all economic barriers, which I take to mean the same thing. And I would suggest to the Republicans that unless we stand firm to our principles in this matter of reconstruction we may be found wanting by the majority of the people of the United States, who, in view of the recent election, expect that we will hold in check even the highest in the land upon this question of the removal of the economic barriers that have protected American industry and American labor. [Applause.]

FOREIGN COMPETITION TOO STRONG.

Here is a report from our Democratic Tariff Commission, the United States Tariff Commission appointed by President Wilson at a time and under circumstances which led many of us to believe that perhaps the Democrats might be coming over to a protective policy and were about to leave their false gods. The chairman of the board is Prof. Taussig, who has been quoted in many ways, a very able and learned man. It delights me to quote from this report the statements these eminent Democrats have made. The matter of the manufacture of surgical instruments is dealt with in this report. It is not a large industry in the United States, but we find on examining the report that when the Underwood law—that marvelous bit of legislation passed in October, 1913—was in effect we made only about 10 per cent of the surgical instruments used in the United States. The rest were made in Germany. Some of us on our side of the House knew of this condition, but it was a matter of no great concern to those who believed in the economic policies of the President. But here—and I am not desiring to quote the President's agents against him, although the Department of Commerce has been of some service in that regard—I recur to the report of the Tariff Commission on surgical instruments as at once reaching the crux of the whole argument. The report says:

The testimony of men familiar with German conditions, men who recently visited that country, indicates that the wages paid to German instrument makers in 1914 ranged from $7.30 to $10 a week, and the average was about $8.20.

The average shipyard worker has been getting that much per day in the United States, and yet these skilled surgical instrument makers in 1914 made $8.20 a week. The American wages at that time, as quoted in this same report, were $21 to $22; that was about the average pay in the United States.

Query for the Republicans and Democrats and for the President in conference with the crowned heads of Europe next week: How can the American manufacturer of surgical instruments survive if foreign labor is paid $8.20 and the American labor is paid $22 and more now, since these are the figures of 1914? Theorists may answer that question, but practical men can not.

Here is what the Tariff Commission say about the tariff bill—the Underwood tariff bill of October, 1913. Note that what they say is said so gently as to reduce the disastrous effects of the Underwood bill to a minimum:

The tariff reduction of 1913.—The duty on miscellaneous metal manufactures, the classification under which the bulk of surgical instruments are imported, was reduced by the act of 1913 from 45 per cent ad valorem to 20 per cent. Because of the lack of statistics showing separately the value of surgical instruments imported, it is impossible to determine the effect of the reduction in the duty upon the amount of forign instruments brought into this country. There are indications, however, that the prices of instruments of foreign manufacture were not correspondingly reduced. The wholesalers uniformly refused to make any reduction to retailers in the prices of the instruments imported under the act of 1909, on which they had paid the 45 per cent duty. They agreed, however, to give a discount on orders placed with them for import under the new tariff.

But the German manufacturers, meanwhile, had raised their prices, and consequently the prices the retailers eventually had to pay for the instruments imported under the new arrangement did not differ materially from the prices they had paid under the old tariff. The increase in the prices of German instruments had been contemplated for some time. For several years before 1913, the costs of manufacture in Germany had been rising, but the keen competition of producers had kept prices down. Finally, however, the German manufacturers succeeded in forming an effective organization and agreed upon a uniform price policy. It is possible that they chose the time of the reduction in the American tariff as an opportunity to put in force the price increase.

WAGES IN THE COTTON MILLS.

I was talking with New Bedford manufacturers a few days ago and with some of the great cotton manufacturers of Fall River, and I inquired as to the wages of weavers—men and women—in the cotton mills, where they fabricate the raw product that the South is raising, and where we would fabricate more if the South would encourage them a little more than they do foreign nations, and they said that while they were paying $24 a week they were now, since the war closed, beginning to anticipate the competition of Japan, where they are skillful in weaving and now pay the weavers 8 to 10 cents a day.

Gentlemen, I ask both sides of this House, I ask the President of the United States when he comes to "remove the economic barriers" over there in the peace conference, if that is his purpose, to consider whether we can pay $24 to the cotton weavers in America while they can weave cotton in Japan at 10 cents a day?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before we went into this war men were going out to work all over the country, and we had an insufficient tariff law and insufficient protection. Does the gentleman know any plan that has been presented by the present administration or by the party in power that will protect us after the war is over from a similar condition on the signing of the peace treaty?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know of no other recourse to which they have resorted. They have stood by the Underwood bill even when that bill was bringing the country to financial disaster. The President, it will be recalled, had to come in and ask for $100,000,000 to save the situation; and then he came in and asked for another $100,000,000, and he kept on coming here and asking for more money, which we had to raise by direct taxation, until we got used to it. When the war broke out he did not have to come on economic grounds, because the war closed up German shipping and foreign competition, and gave us a protection which no law of the land could give.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that preparations were being made to reduce the wages of the weavers in the cotton mills of New England?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; they desire to keep them up if possible.

Mr. STEVENSON. But they were expecting to have to reduce them?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said, and I will ask the gentleman to bear with me, that no American manufacturer could pay $24 a week to a weaver and remain in business in competition with a Japanese institution which paid 10 cents a day. Now, if the gentleman can show how that can be done——

Mr. STEVENSON. Then I misunderstood the gentleman's statement if he did not say that they expected to have to reduce the wages. I will ask the gentleman if he knew that they were selling their goods at prices fixed by the Government on a basis of 36-cent cotton and that they are paying 26 cents for the cotton? That is what they are doing, and if they are prepared to reduce the wages of their employees then they are simply taking it out of the employees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know how the gentleman gets——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Here I am stopped right in the middle of a sentence, and I must ask the gentleman from Minnesota to give me two or three minutes more.

Mr. DAVIS. Since one of the parties to whom I had apportioned time says he does not care to use his time, I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

COTTON MILLS CAUTIOUS.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota. He is getting to be a very good chairman of the committee. [Laughter.] Answering the gentleman from South Carolina, I will say this: He is a cotton factor and better posted on the subject of raw material than I am. I do not know just what the actual price of cotton is to-day, but I do know that throughout the whole of this war, though cotton was ably defended and ably promoted on this floor by the gentleman from South Carolina and another gentleman, who comes, I think, from Alabama, if my memory serves me right——

Mr. STEVENSON. Possibly Texas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That they never could induce the President of the United States to fix a price on cotton, and somehow or other they never could get the President to include cotton in the embargo list. It just so happened with regard to cotton, by reason of the peculiar political complexion of this House about which I do not now complain, that the President seemed to be under some occult influence which kept cotton right side up all the way through.

Mr. STEVENSON. I know the gentleman intends to be correct——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to be frank with the gentleman, although I tried here several times in perfectly good faith in view of our vast financial obligations to impose a little bit of a tax on cotton—something like $3 a bale—I could not get it through. We did not have enough votes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman means to be correct, and the gentleman stated that cotton could not be embraced in the embargo. Does not the gentleman know there could not be a pound of cotton shipped without a license, and that in a very large part of the world it was not allowed to be shipped——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I recall and the gentleman from South Carolina will remember distinctly that when the President issued his embargo proclamation including those things which should not go abroad, that for some reason or other—I could not just say whether due to influence on that side or not—it did not include cotton. You could find flour, beef, and things of one kind and another, but cotton was not to be found on the list, search as you please.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman did not try to ship any cotton.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At that time the attention of the House was called to the fact that cotton was going into Germany——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That cotton, though contraband, was still going into Germany, and we could not get head or tail of that. It was going to Germany and they were turning it into explosives to shoot us up. We could not stop it; cotton had full swing. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman know that the New England manufacturers are having contracts canceled; in fact, that their business is disappearing at the present time and has been since the armistice was signed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe the gentleman is entirely correct. It is reported that several large mills have closed. On a recent trip to Fall River and New Bedford I found there was much concern, because they had large investments, and they began to feel that business was being taken away from them. They were not enthusiastic about the removal of these economical barriers to which the President referred before going to the peace conference.

WHAT AMERICA MUST PAY.

Now, I want to say something about reconstruction. Every foreign nation is prepared to reconstruct. Make no mistake about that. It is true, perhaps, we are going to sell them material with which to reconstruct, a great deal of material, but we will not sell a pound to any nation that can provide for itself; do not make any mistake about that. We have not only loaned them approximately $8,000,000,000, but this morning a request has come forward from the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the foreign loans in the sum of one and a half billion dollars. So when you say we are going to reconstruct and you talk of the United States as a great and rich and prosperous country, just bear in mind that we spent approximately $13,000,000,000 up to the end of last June, and have got most of it to pay back in some way or other.

Do not forget, when this spirit of cosmopolitan altruism overcomes your patriotic souls, that in addition to what we spent last year we have appropriated this year, 1919, upward of $24,000,000,000. We have authorized the expenditure of every cent of it. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. SHERLEY] came here and gave us his statement and the Secretary of the Treasury confirmed it. Put that against your $13,000,000,000 already spent and up to the end of June, 1919, you will have spent, or have authorized to be spent, a total of $37,000,000,000, plus the deficiency bill appropriation. Of course, we are going to save some of this. Of the $8,000,000,000 to be raised by taxation it is announced that $2,000,000,000 can be saved. That remains to be seen.

But counting out the 1918 bill and dealing only with the authorizations of 1919, it will be remembered that after we had provided the $24,000,000,000 reported by Mr. SHERLEY we were obliged to report a deficiency bill for $7,000,000,000 additional. That made a 1919 total to date of $31,000,000,000, a staggering sum, but involving an indebtedness you will have to talk about back home in every district in this land when the tax and interest bills come along in due course. And they will keep on coming along for years and for generations, and it will be pay, pay, pay for us while the foreign trade is being picked up by many of our allies—God bless our allies! We hail their brave and patriotic work—but when our own people begin to realize the extent to which they have been involved in this war they will at least want to keep their mills open and their wheels turning under the shelter of reasonable economic barriers and without being forced "to whet their wits" and wages against the cheap industrial world abroad. [Applause.] I wanted to sound a little warning, because we have been a mighty easy people.

We are just as brave as any on the other side; we have as many courageous men; we stepped in when we were needed and saved the day for our allies. Do not forget that when you praise the flags of other nations. We have not stinted ourselves in men or money, but we are not necessarily called to bear the whole burden nor to place it upon the backs of our children for generations to come. A great and glorious Nation is the United States, but she needs protection now as she never did before in her history. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We will get back to normal. Yes. We ought to get back to normal; but we have that one strange condition staring us in the face. Our spokesman, our sole representative, our overtowering personality in this great conference of the nations of the Old World, pledged to his economic theories, wedded to the destruction of every artificial barrier which heretofore protected the United States, has not taken the Congress or the people into his confidence.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. After the one superior gentleman that you have been referring to returns from abroad, what position do you think the rest of our delegation will take on this same question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those who have accompanied him?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President appointed every one who went with him. Some of them we know, some of them we know not so well. But the gentleman from New York has the temerity to think that any one of the gentlemen appointed by the President will differ from him in view—no Member of the House or Senate being present—it seems to me he is going astray. No; those gentlemen accompanying him will stand with the President.

Our danger, then, is this: Holding these views, standing for the destruction of the artificial barriers of protection which have made the United States prosperous and strong, reiterating them in point 3 of his 14 points, so that England and other nations take free trade to be his meaning, we may find ourselves in disagreement when as a people and a Nation we might hope in such a crisis to stand together and as one man. It certainly can not be that the majority of the American people are ready to accept a free-trade policy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] such time as he may desire.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable misapprehension as to the price guaranteed for wheat for the year 1919. As you all know, there was no price guaranteed for the crop of 1917. That crop was handled on the price fixed by a committee named by the President for that purpose. As to the crop of 1918, while there was a guaranty in an act of Congress of $2 per bushel, the United States Grain Corporation handled that crop for a considerable margin over that sum. So that practically the crops of 1917 and 1918 were handled without regard to any guaranty made by Congress. Now, we are faced with the problem of the guaranty for 1919, and, as I have hinted, there is considerable misapprehension among the Members of Congress—and I might say outside of Congress—as to just what that guaranty means. I desire to have printed in the RECORD for the information of the Members certain documents issued by the Food Administration, the vice president of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, and the President of the United States, and I wish to call particular attention to the thoughtful letter of Vice President Crowell and the recommendations made by him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. An examination of these documents, I think, will make it clear to the minds of all that while the guaranty for the wheat crop for 1919 is specific, no agency has been created to carry that guaranty into effect.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; I do.

Mr. STEENERSON. Was not that the very purpose of the Food Administration's grain corporation, authorized under the authority of the proclamation of the President, under the laws of Delaware, first capitalized at $50,000,000 and the capital afterwards increased to $150,000,000, through which the Food Administration has been buying grain, especially wheat, for the Government and for the allies?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. One of the documents that I will put into the RECORD is a letter from the Food Administration Grain Corporation of New York, in which it is stated that the corporation was organized for the specific purpose of handling the crops of 1917 and 1918, and there is nothing in the authority given to them up to this time which would warrant their handling the crop of 1919.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman print the actual articles of incorporation and the proclamation under which that was done?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am going to put in the RECORD the proclamation of the President.

Mr. STEENERSON. And the articles of incorporation?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have not got those. If the gentleman has them I will be glad to put them in the RECORD.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have not got them here, but I have a copy at home. But I think the gentleman is mistaken, and the statement of the Food Administration was not well founded, that it was limited to any particular crop. It was limited to the period of the war. That was its whole scope and purpose.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I think the gentleman is referring now to the articles of incorporation issued by the State of Delaware.

Mr. STEENERSON. The President's proclamation authorized the Food Administration to incorporate under the laws of the State of Delaware. Its object was, as stated in those articles, to buy grain, and it was not limited. There is nothing in those articles that limits it to one crop.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. As the gentleman knows, it frequently happens that when corporations are incorporated they are authorized to do many things that are perhaps contrary to the laws of the land, and in this case, of course, the incorporation in Delaware could not give the corporation any greater powers than had been already authorized by Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will yield further, I will say I do not think that is a matter that comes up in this consideration. I was simply referring to the letter of the Food Administration to the gentleman, in which they say they were limited to the one crop. I maintain that if you examine the law and the proclamation and the articles which were formed in pursuance of that law you will find it was not limited to that crop.

I would like to have the gentleman yield further in order to permit me to inquire if the gentleman has been able to get the report of the Food Administration for the last fiscal year?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have not seen that report yet.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that I have inquired at the document room, and there has been no report since that for the year 1917.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Of course, the gentleman's question as to whether the Grain Corporation can extend its operations over another year is comparatively unimportant, because it would be an easy matter, anyway, to extend their authority. The real question, the real problem, is whether that corporation, if it is extended, will have sufficient funds to back up the guaranty that has been made, because I think it very clear that they can not pay the farmers for the wheat unless they have the money with which to pay it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I noticed what purported to be an interview with the gentleman from North Dakota a day or two ago in the newspapers, in which it was stated that the Government would probably lose a million dollars on account of its guaranty. Did the gentleman mean to confine it to one million, or was that a mistake?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. As a matter of fact, I did not hand out a statement like that. I was incorrectly quoted in one of the papers here as saying there would be a million dollars lost.

Mr. STEVENSON. What loss will there be?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I would not want to state what it will be. It seems to me the amount of loss will be dependent on how we back the Food Administration Grain Corporation. The officers of that corporation are playing a pretty big game. They have in sight a wheat crop bigger than any raised before, so far as the acreage is concerned. Heretofore they have been selling to people in Europe who wanted the wheat and who were prepared to pay the cost price plus the expenses of handling. Now they are confronted with the problem of selling wheat to countries of Europe that have the opportunity of buying their wheat elsewhere and possibly at a lower price. It might at first blush look like a serious situation or we might be facing a big loss, but the fact is that some of this wheat that the papers are talking about which the allies and people of Europe can get is so far away that it takes about 115 days to make a round trip. That is so with respect to the wheat in Australia. An ordinary freighter can make just one round trip in 115 days. The same boat can make the trip to Argentina and return in 81 days. It does not seem, with the great shortage they have in shipping now, that they could get their supply, considering the shortage of tonnage, from those countries, and yet it may be that if we do not back up the Food Administration Grain Corporation they may get enough of it from Argentia and Australia to break the market and then subject us to a heavy loss. That loss might run into very large sums.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The gentleman comes from one of the large wheat-growing States, where there has been a good deal of criticism about the fixing of the price of wheat. They do not want the price removed from the next year's crop, do they?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that our farmers did not ask for the fixing of a price of wheat at all. The fixing of wheat prices was imposed upon them. Now, so far as they are concerned, the price having been fixed and they having been compelled to accept prices much less than they would otherwise have received in an open market, the time has come, in their opinion, for it to operate.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. They do not want that price removed, do they?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No; they do not.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that I fought this whole price-fixing scheme.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I know that the gentleman from Texas has been a consistent opponent of all kinds of price fixing on farm products.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I know that we are up against a serious proposition. I agree with the gentleman. We have got to have some kind of legislation to make this guaranty good.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is right.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I fought this price-fixing scheme, but in good faith to these wheat farmers I am going to do everything in my power to see that they get the guaranteed price fixed for next year's crop, because it has been promised them by legislation.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I appreciate that statement very much, particularly inasmuch as the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and in view of the fact that he while in the committee room and at all times has consistently opposed price fixing. He had the courage to oppose it at a time when it was very popular.

I want to say also that I have not discovered any disposition on the part of any of the officials connected with the Government at Washington to repudiate this guaranty. The only thing I can complain of is this, that some of the officials connected with the Government here, and practically all of them excepting the Food Administration Grain Corporation at New York, seem to think that the price guaranty will be self-executing, and that it will not take any money to back it up. Now, as to the amount of the loss that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] was asking me about, it would look to me as though the more we give to the Food Administration Grain Corporation, the better support we give them, the more money we give them to make the guaranty good, the less it will cost them to make it good. The public officials of France and Italy and Great Britain are playing a big game. They are out to buy wheat anywhere in the world as cheaply as they can get it. If they can buy a little from Argentina or from Australia, enough to break the market and get the rest over here, of course that will suit them.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman think that would be fair dealing on the part of those countries, that Mr. Hoover, the Food Administrator, should go over there and telegraph back to the United States farmer and the public that we must ship 20,000,000 tons of food, largely grain, to Europe; that we must advance large quantities, and then after they have encouraged this production and the exportation of 20,000,000 tons, that these countries which have been benefited shall then go and break the market by importing from Australia and the Argentine? Does the gentleman think that is fair play?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I do not impugn the motives of the officials connected with any other government. I am assuming that they are going to act for their own people.

Mr. BAER. I may say that it is the gentlemen in Minneapolis who break the market. The farmers of my State are glad that the price was fixed at $2.20 on their wheat, because if it had not been fixed they would only have gotten $1.25 this fall, compared to the price at which all the other products were sold.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman if his friends did not make an attack on the Democratic nominees in that section of the country on the proposition that this administration had fixed the price of wheat?

Mr. BAER. I did not. I upheld the administration, because the farmers up there realized that they would not have received over $1.25 for their wheat if the price had not been fixed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood that generally that was an issue in the wheat-growing sections of the West. Was it not in Kansas and other wheat-growing sections?

Mr. BAER. I do not know anything about Kansas. The gamblers and speculators were robbing the farmers and the consumers. At Larimore, N. Dak., when wheat flour was $10.60 wholesale, barley flour was $14.60; on the same day wheat sold for $2.04 and barley was only 93 cents.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The point I was trying to make was this, that if we permit the Food Administration Grain Corporation to run along with the amount of money they have in their treasury now, or with a paltry sum, these fellows across the ocean, who are playing a clever game, will beat them. I think the men who are at the head of our Food Administration Grain Corporation at New York are thoroughly experienced, perhaps the most experienced men that could possibly have been found in the United States. They know the wheat business from the ground up. They are men who have been in the business for 25 or 30 years. They will protect us against loss, in so far as that is possible, if we will give them the necessary financial backing. The farmers have had serious losses on account of arbitrary, unjust, and unfair grading of their grain under grain grades established by the United States Bureau of Markets, but I think I am correct in saying that the farmers desire to see the Food Administration Grain Corporation given ample funds to make the 1919 wheat guaranty good.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman know what the freight rate is on wheat from New York to Liverpool now?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Freight rates are up and down, and it is impossible to get any quotations on rates for any length of time in advance, but it stands to reason that the freight rates between here and Europe will be very much less at this time, when tonnage is short, than from the Argentine and Australia, and my proposition is this: I do not believe Europe can get enough wheat except from the United States, and if we have men at New York who have the money and have the backing of Congress they can hold that wheat until they can get a reasonable price for it.

Mr. HARDY. Exactly. The reason I asked the question was because the freight on cotton to-day is $32.50 per bale—that is, $6.50 a hundred pounds—and I wanted to know if they are knocking wheat anything like as much as they are cotton?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I think the big proposition we ought to keep in mind is this: That if we back our grain officials in New York—Mr. Barnes and Mr. Crowell, who know their business—they are not going to let those fellows in Europe get our wheat from us, where they must get it, for a price that they fix themselves by importing a little from the Argentine and from Australia to break the market. European buyers do not expect to get their wheat supplies from Argentina and Australia. They have not enough ship tonnage. What they want, I repeat, is to get enough from those countries to force a concession in price from us, then they expect to get the wheat from us.

Mr. HARDY. I agree with the gentleman in his contention, but what I wanted to know was whether our freight rates were enormously high on wheat?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. They are high on everything. I can not give the gentleman the exact figures he desires.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman believes that by giving the wheat corporation a sufficient amount of money they can maintain the price on the prospective crop of next year of a billion bushels of wheat with this surplus of Argentina and other wheat-raising countries. Has the gentleman the slightest idea of what he thinks it would cost this Government to maintain the price and protect the farmers and carry out the guaranty to the Government for the ensuing year on the price of wheat as now fixed?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I think the gentleman will agree with me that it would be an impossible task to estimate what it would cost. It is impossible to say to what extent the Grain Corporation can overcome the present outlook. The loss will be measured by the difference between the price paid to the farmers and the price obtained upon a resale of the wheat.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman will find that by the time he gets ready to sell the next crop the sentiment in this matter will drop out and competition will prevail, and that the allies will buy wheat where they can buy it, in the cheapest market, without regard to fences put up by this country.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I do not blame them for buying where they can buy the cheapest, but I think it is up to Congress to see that our fellows are put in a condition to meet the competition in the best possible way.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to see the Government carry out its agreement, but it will cost the Government millions to do it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Whatever it costs it is up to Congress to keep faith with the farmers. My contention is that if we act wisely we will place in the hands of the Food Administration Grain Corporation officials all the money they ask for, even if they ask for $1,000,000,000. Whatever is not needed will remain in the Treasury. If given ample funds our officials can foil the attempt of European buyers to force a low price upon our wheat. Let Congress put our officials in the position where they can fold their arms and say to the European gentlemen: We have the wheat; it is paid for and stored; you must have it; when you are ready to pay a reasonable price for it you may have it, but not before. [Applause.]

Here is a statement issued by the United States Food Administration, which is typical of a number of statements appearing in the press. It affirms that the guaranteed price for 1919 is to stand, but fails to take into account that it will require an appropriation of money to make it good. Now is the time to face this problem, and not after Congress has adjourned.

STATEMENT OF FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

[From the Official Bulletin, Dec. 4, 1918.]

The guaranteed price of wheat for the 1919 crop stands, by the terms of the Lever Act, under which the United States Food Administration is operating. This statement was made by the Food Administration.

The President's proclamation of September 2, 1918, stated that the "producers of wheat produced within the United States * * * for the crop of 1919" are guaranteed the prices therein set forth, $2.26 per bushel at Chicago, and the end of the war or the proclamation of peace does not in any way affect this guaranty.

Section 24 of the Lever Act provides "that the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect when the existing state of war between the United States and Germany shall have terminated, and the fact and date of such termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President; but the termination of this act shall not affect any act done, or any right or obligation accruing or accrued," etc. It further states that "all rights or liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated."

The guaranty for the 1919 wheat crop expires JULE 1, 1920.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1918.

In issuing to-day the Government's guaranty of the same price for the 1919 wheat crop that was guaranteed for the 1918 crops I wish it to be understood that in the spring of 1919 I will appoint a disinterested commission, who will secure for me the facts by that time disclosed as to the increased cost of farm labor and supplies, using the three-year prewar average prices of wheat, of labor, and of supply costs as a basis, and that from this information I shall determine whether there should be an increase in price above the present level, and, if so, what advance, in order to maintain for the farmer a good return. Should it then appear that an increase is deserved over the present guaranty, however, it will be applied only to those who have by next harvest already marketed their 1918 wheat.

It is the desire and intention of all departments of the administration to give to the wheat grower a fair and stimulative return in order that the present acreage in wheat may be maintained.

I find a great conflict of opinion among various sections of the country as to the price that should be named as a minimum guaranty. It must be obvious to all, however, that the factors which will make for increased or decreased cost of production of next year's harvest can not be determined until the near approach to the harvest.

In giving a guaranteed price for wheat one year in advance (the only industry guaranteed by the Government) there is involved a considerable national risk. If there should be peace or increased shipping available before the middle of 1920, Europe will naturally supply itself from the large stores of much cheaper wheat now in the Southern Hemisphere; and therefore the Government is undertaking a risk which might in such an event result in a national loss of as much as $500,000,000 through an unsalable surplus; or, in any event, in maintaining a high level of price to our own people for a long period subsequent to freedom in the world's markets.

Despite this, the desirability of assuring a supply to the world of prime breadstuffs by insuring the farmer against the fluctuations in prices that would result from the uncertainties of the present situation and from the speculation those uncertainties entail, seems to me to make the continuation of the guaranty for another year desirable. On the other hand, it is clear that before increasing this liability by large sums with the risks set forth above, and before increasing the burden of the consumer, the matter should be subjected to searching inquiry at the appropriate time—the time when the pertinent facts will be known.

I feel confident that with this preliminary fixed guaranty, and with the assurance that justice will in any event be done to the grower, he will continue the fine patriotic effort by which he has served the country hitherto; that the Government will have acted prudently; and that the consumer will be satisfied that his interests are not unduly sacrificed, but just and exhaustive consideration given to every element of the matter at the proper time.

WOODROW WILSON.

STATEMENT OF F. G. CROWELL, VICE PRESIDENT OF FOOD ADMINISTRATION GRAIN CORPORATION.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION.
FOOD ADMINISTRATION GRAIN CORPORATION,
New York, December 7, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: In further answer to your recent wire in reference to the United States guarantee on the price of the 1919 crop of wheat and the nonexistence of any agency or appropriation to carry the same into effect.

On September 2, 1918, the President of the United States, as provided by act of Congress, fixed the guaranteed price of wheat to be harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale by the 1st of June, 1920, provided the producer complied with all the regulations which might be thereafter promulgated in regard to said guarantee by the President of the United States.

The President of the United States, by Executive order, provided, on August 14, 1917, for the creation of the Food Administration Grain Corporation in order to enable the United States Food Administration, acting under the direction of the President, to purchase, provide storage facilities for, and sell at reasonable prices for cash certain commodities, to wit, wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes, and designated Mr. Herbert Hoover, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. Julius H. Barnes, of Duluth, Minn.; Mr. Gates W. McGarrah, of New York City; and Mr. Frank G. Crowell, of Kansas City, Mo., as directors of a corporation to be formed and to have a capital stock of $50,000,000, all the stock to be owned by the United States of America and to be paid for out of the appropriation of $150,000,000 made by Congress for the food, fuel, and other agencies created by the congressional act.

The Food Administration Grain Corporation was not ordered or requested to protect the 1918 crop guarantee by Congress, which was a congressional matter and not a Food Administration matter; but inasmuch as Congress had not passed any specific appropriation to protect its own guarantee, the President of the United States issued an Executive order on June 21, 1918, increasing the capital stock of the Food Administration Grain Corporation to $150,000,000, and ordered it to protect the 1918 price guarantee in addition to performing its other functions.

This the Food Administration Grain Corporation is now doing, and will continue to do until it has fulfilled its obligations as provided by the congressional act, even although it may necessitate its continuing in business until August or September of 1919, for it must continue to exist for this purpose—that is, protecting the 1918 guarantee and protecting its outside obligations—although the United States Food Administration ceases, under the food-control act, on the issuance of a peace proclamation by the President of the United States.

When the Food Administration Grain Corporation was formed it was required that the president, vice president, and 13 second vice presidents, and secretary, located in various parts of the United States, should serve without any remuneration, should give their entire time to the fulfillment of their duties, and should divorce themselves from the grain business by closing out their business, parting with all their stock, and if unable to do the latter that any dividends received from any grain business should be given to the Red Cross or some other national war agency. This was required in order that their policies or action might not be subject to any adverse comment. These 16 executives and heads have done this, and will continue to do this until their public service is ended by the closing up of the obligations of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, which, as I stated above, will be along in August or September of the year 1919.

In my opinion the Food Administration Grain Corporation should liquidate as soon as it has taken care of its obligations and has protected the 1918 crop and wind up its affairs and return to the President of the United States the capital intact intrusted to it, which the officers hope to do, with the feeling on their part that they have executed with a degree of efficiency this public trust.

The next question which will confront Congress is the creation of an agency, perhaps a new corporation, with a much enlarged capital and with the power to draw on the Treasury of the United States freely to meet its obligations, which will be very large in attempting to finance the 1919 crop. Under whose management or control this new agency or corporation shall be is up to Congress.

It has been intimated that some of the personnel connected with the Food Administration Grain Corporation should sacrifice their own interests further and continue to serve the United States Government in the marketing of the 1919 crop. Perhaps Mr. Barnes and some of the other executives or administrative officers will be willing to do this; I do not know. It is a tremendous problem.

If the wheat acreage is increased, as seems likely, to 75,000,000 acres, there is a possibility of the United States producing a crop of 1,200,000,000 bushels of wheat. In the marketing of this volume of wheat there is a possibility of the United States Government meeting a loss of about $1,000,000,000 in endeavoring to market the crop in competition with the crops of the world.

It is a very serious problem, and will demand your most careful study and consideration. I am of the opinion that any legislation that is enacted to carry into effect the 1919 guaranty must be drawn with the greatest care, and I am very sure that when Mr. Hoover and Mr. Barnes return from Europe some valuable suggestions might be given to you for your consideration regarding new legislation that undoubtedly will be necessary.

I am,
Cordially, yours,

F. G. CROWELL,
Vice President.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has not been my pleasure to hear the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I understand that he discussed the failure to fix the price on cotton and the failure to lay a tax upon cotton.

I recall, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that in 1914, when the war broke out in Europe, it so injuriously affected the price of cotton in the United States that the farmers lost 8 cents a pound. The price was 14 cents a pound when the war broke out, and it fell down to 6 cents a pound. Gentlemen, there was real suffering in the South that fall. Many a farmer had to sell some of his live stock that he had made that crop with. He was unable then to pay his debts. Bankruptcy occurred in many instances in the South and our people suffered greatly.

I remember that the South stood here and through its representatives called upon the Government to do something to relieve that awful situation. We were only asking the Government to do something to prevent the loss that we were suffering on that crop. We argued that this condition was brought upon us not by any fault of our own, not by any natural economic cause, but that the war had an injurious effect, which reached into our country and destroyed the value of our cotton. The South lost millions of money that year. I remember my friend from Pennsylvania was one of those who said, "Gentlemen, it is unfortunate, but you will have to take your loss; it can not be helped. The Government has no business in interfering in the price of agricultural products." That was the high and holy ground the gentleman and others on that side took, as well as some gentlemen on this side.

Now this fall, when because Europe had turned her fields into food-producing lands and cotton no longer was produced in abundance in India and Egypt and Russia, and cotton was scarce and high, the gentleman wants to seize on it and keep down the price by legislative enactment. "Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel." When the farmer was crying out to us to save him from wreck and bankruptcy in 1914, caused by the war, you would not extend a helping hand to him, but then you permitted him to suffer while his cotton crop was sold below the cost of production. When the price commences to go up and he is getting back some of the losses that he sustained in 1914, these same gentlemen wanted to seize him by the throat and choke him down and destroy the value of his cotton by legislative enactment.

Let me say here that while the price is higher than in 1914 the profit on the present cotton crop is not large. When you consider the $250 and $300 that the cotton farmer has paid for plow mules, and the increased cost of fertilizers, agricultural implements, and labor, and, in fact, everything that enters into the cost of production, you will see that the producer is not getting a large profit when he receives 35 and 40 cents a pound for his cotton. And I want to say just here that the price of raw cotton never has been in keeping with the general run of prices on cotton goods. If cotton should bring the price to-day that the price of cotton goods generally justifies, cotton would now be selling for 75 and 80 cents per pound.

I want to say that I am opposed to the price fixing of agricultural products. We were told that it was necessary to fix the price of wheat because wheat was a food product that we had to supply our allies, and we were all together in fighting the greatest enemy of mankind. I voted to fix the price of wheat at $2.20 and later, as gentlemen will recall, I voted to increase it to $2.40, for I did not want the wheat producer to lose anything on his crop.

Now, in the fall elections I understand that the wheat growers in some places said you did not put it high enough, and voted against the Democratic Party for that reason. Since the Republicans have carried the House they seem to be well pleased with this price and want to hold onto it for another year, which presents a right interesting situation. Again, consistency, I say that thou art a jewel.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just for a question.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not a fact that the Democratic administration fixed this price on wheat for next year?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, if Congress has done that, I am in favor of living up to the contract with the farmer.

Mr. SNYDER. So am I.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, it will not do, gentlemen, to fix the price upon farm products generally. This was foodstuff deemed necessary as a war measure, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania could not with any degree of grace attempt price fixing upon cotton without favoring the fixing of a price upon the wool of those stalwart sheep in his State that climb those high and rugged hills; and in order to tax cotton, to be consistent, he must levy a tax upon the wool of the sheep, and if he does that he must put it on flax and silk—put himself in the attitude of desiring to tax all textile material. If you tax one farm product, if you are going into that business, you will tax wheat so much a bushel, corn so much a bushel; that is what you are coming to when you lay a tax on cotton—you open the way for laying a tax on every agricultural product. Of course you will. I hope the time will never come when this Government will lay a tax on farm products, and I do not think you will ever achieve that end, gentlemen, because there will always be enough men here from the grain-growing West and the cotton-producing South to prevent such a catastrophe and calamity to the farmers of the United States. [Applause.] So that you might just as well dismiss that from your minds. But, gentlemen, I want to get all prejudice regarding cotton out of your minds. Do you know that cotton brings gold to this country when all other products fail? Cotton renders to the country a great national service every year. Cotton is the only product that goes out of this country that will unlock the vaults of foreign countries and bring gold when other products fail, and it brings more gold every year into the United States than the world's annual output. America is already the greatest cotton-producing country in the world, and I want to see her lead every other country in the manufacture and sale of cotton goods. Let the time come speedily, then, when the people of this country—East, West, North, and South—will have no semblance of prejudice against an industry of another section, but when all will look upon it as a great American industry and all working together for the good of that industry which contributes to the common good of us all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. The Clerk will read; I have no other requests for time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District, of which amounts one half is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, namely:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to speak two or three minutes while the bill was under discussion. I want to say just a few words about this reconstruction that has been so much talked about, and particularly that which we hear so much in the newspapers about the distribution of those who are employed in the munition plants and those who are wearing the uniform in the various fighting branches of our country. It is my belief that so far as those who are in uniform are concerned that they will find the patriotism of their employers such that when they return home all their employers will not only be glad but anxious to see them and put them back at least on jobs equal to those that they had when they left. Of course, there is in the Army a considerable number of men who did not leave regular employment to go into the Army. Those men may have some difficulty in getting back, but in my section of the country I should feel that an employer, either little or big, who would refuse to reinstate the man who went to the colors, either as a volunteer or by conscription, would be almost fit for the rail or some other method of getting him out of the community, and I believe that they would practically ostracize in the community any man who would refuse to do that thing. So I feel that there is very little necessity for anxiety on our part with regard to placing in employment men who wear the uniform. I have the notion that a man who has gone to war for the purpose of making the supreme sacrifice if necessary will not feel that he should be appointed to a job or led to a job when he returns home. I believe that they will want to pick out and select their own places, and therefore I do not feel any great anxiety about the men who are returning from camps or those who are coming back from the other side.

One thing I think many men overlook with regard to the difficulty of distributing the men from our munition plants back into the ordinary economic activities of the country, and that is that practically every man who went to a munition plant went from some other job to it. And the natural thing for him to do will be to return to that job which he left. And my notion about conditions to-day and those that will prevail for the next few months, at least, is that industries that were considered nonessential during the period of the war will find it rather difficult to catch up with their requirements for many months to come, and those men who are turned out of munition plants, who desire to work for the concerns that they left, at wages such as they left or wages that have been increased since they left, which may not in every case be as high as they have been receiving in munition plants, will find very little difficulty in getting back to work. So that it is my belief that we will return to normal economic conditions during the period of reconstruction with very little financial or commercial difficulty.

The one other thing that I would like to speak about, if I had time enough, is the distribution or disposal promptly of merchandise that the various purchasing departments of the Government find themselves to have on hand at the present time and that will come into their hands on account of contracts. I am told that there probably will not be less than a billion dollars' worth of competitive merchandise left on hand that the Government will have to find some method of disposing of. This, if thrown on the market in any one lot, or at any one time, would be, to my mind, the most destructive process of disposal that could possibly be found. And some way must be determined, in order to protect the industries of this country, for the distribution or disposal of such competitive commodities as the Government now has on hand.

Take, for instance, the question of knit underwear. I am told, and, in fact, I am nearly correct, that there are on hand to-day 125,000,000 shirts and drawers, both wool and cotton. If any such amount of goods as that were thrown on the market it would destroy the business in knit goods for at least 12 months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object at this time, because many gentlemen did not have an opportunity to speak under general debate, but I want to serve notice now that I would like to have the gentlemen confine themselves to the subject matter of the bill, so we may have it passed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SNYDER. I would be glad to do that, but I overlooked the fact that time on the bill had expired.

What applies to knit goods applies to almost everything we can think of. Take the general line of hardware. There is in the department to-day nearly $100,000,000 worth of hardware, such as shovels, hoes, picks, hammers, axes, monkey wrenches, and things of that sort, manufactured in all parts of the country; and if, as the Government must do, these goods are thrown on the market by auction or by some other terms of sale, without very careful consideration, it would disrupt the whole business community of this country.

Now, I am as anxious as any man can possibly be to see our economic conditions go on comfortably. Of course, we can not go along continuously at the high rate of speed we have been going on during the war period, but it will be a very simple matter to throw us into confusion as manufacturers and merchants in this country if due care is not taken to dispose of these tremendous amounts of competitive merchandise that the Government has on hand and will have on hand. Now, I have suggested from a business point of view a method, and I have introduced a bill to-day which I think would help the situation considerably. My idea is that if we should dispose of 20 per cent of any item of merchandise that we may have on hand during the period of any fiscal year it would not tend to disrupt to any extent the business of the country. And, like the wheat proposition, this is one that interests the whole country, and the country could assimilate and take up $200,000,000 of the several thousand various items that the Government will have to dispose of without interfering very much with any industry, and it would not be a great hardship for the Government to have to carry the balance for the other period of five years.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. Along that line, has the gentleman made any provision in his bill for compensation for cancellation of contracts?

Mr. SNYDER. I have not. I have simply tried to cover the question of the disposal of such goods as are on hand and those that the Government may have to take by reason of its inability to cancel contracts as quickly as they desire to do.

Mr. CRISP. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the fact that the goods kept would deteriorate?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. My measure covers only items that are not perishable.

Mr. LONDON. How about placing these goods at the disposal of the desolated regions of France?

Mr. SNYDER. My bill covers that. It does not conflict with the Government disposing of it all to-morrow outside of the United States.

That is all I have to say, gentlemen.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to say to the gentleman that the cotton and woolen goods that the gentleman speaks of can be disposed of outside of the United States, I am sure, to advantage.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman that my bill has that very item in it. My bill only affects the sale within the boundaries of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on the item in the first paragraph of the bill in order to obtain some information. This is the item that has provoked considerable discussion on the floor of the House in years past. Points of order have been raised against it. I rise chiefly to inquire whether this is the identical phraseology that was carried in the last year's bill, and——

Mr. SISSON. It is.

Mr. STAFFORD. And though the House voted to adhere, the House conferees were forced by the exigencies of the occasion to finally recede from?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. This was the provision which was written by the chairman of the committee some years ago, with which the gentleman is familiar. He was not at that time the chairman of the committee, but Mr. Fitzgerald asked the present chairman of the committee, after we had agreed upon what was wanted, to draw the provision, and I will say that Mr. SHERLEY drafted this provision, which has been before the House on three different occasions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill believe that he will meet with better success this year by reason of the other body having become better acquainted with the equity and merits of the proposition by reason of the bill having been in conference a long time last summer?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. We have made a statement which we could not have made before—that we are now demanding a reduction of the revenue because the surplus in the District treasury is becoming too great.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, it is to the advantage of the taxpayers of the District to have this adopted?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether it will be to their advantage, but it will not be to their disadvantage.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Personal tax board: Three assistant assessors of personal taxes, at $3,000 each; appraiser of personal property, $1,800; clerk, $1,400; assistant clerk, $1,000; two inspectors, at $1,200 each; extra clerk hire, $2,000; intangible personal property—two clerks at $1,500 each, five inspectors at $1,200 each, clerk to board of personal tax assessors, $1,800, two clerks at $1,200 each; in all, $30,800.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SISSON. What is the item?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is on the personal tax paragraph. What are the duties of these five inspectors?

Mr. SISSON. The five inspectors go out and inspect the personal property of the District. The inspection is that which finally determines the valuation of the property where there is a controversy about its value.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is the intangible property.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Are they authorized to inspect men's books and their personal belongings?

Mr. SISSON. No; they are not authorized to do that. They are simply authorized to make an inspection of the returns and go back to the taxpayer and make inquiry as to whether or not a mistake has been made, or to make such investigations of the records shown by the various deeds and trusts that secure the notes, and check up accurately as to whether any of that class of property has escaped taxation. They have no inquisitorial powers, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was the question I wanted to ask the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, repairs, fuel, lighting, fitting up buildings, lunch-room equipment; purchase, exchange, and maintenance of bicycles and motor delivery vehicles, and other contingent expenses, $11,000; in all, $29,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are now coming to a very important subject, and this sparsely attended membership, I think, should not be burdened with the consideration of it.

Mr. SISSON. Where is that?

Mr. STAFFORD. On page 12.

Mr. SISSON. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. KITCHIN, as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WELTY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George R. Gary (H. R. 1016, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LARSEN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 15 days on account of important business.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which, with the report (No. 489) thereon, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

SALARIES OF REPRESENTATIVES DISCHARGED FROM MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 358, discharge the committee to which it was referred from further action, and put it on its passage.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I suggest that the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the resolution referred to a Senate resolution?

Mr. GARD. It is a House resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to discharge the committee from further consideration of House joint resolution 358 and for the immediate consideration of the same. The Clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 358) authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it be reported for information.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to those Members of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fifth Congress who have been serving with the military or naval forces of the United States in the recent war with Germany and her allies, compensation from and after the day of their discharge from military or naval duty at the rate provided by law for Representatives in Congress, upon the resumption and during the continuance of their duties as Representatives in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand from the reading of this joint resolution it merely provides for the compensation of those Members of the House who have joined the military service from the date of their discharge?

Mr. GARD. Yes. There are several Members of the House, as gentlemen know, who went into the military service, and they are now returning to service in this body. This resolution provides a means of protection to the Sergeant at Arms in paying them for their services as Members of the House of Representatives when they have secured their discharge from the military service and have resumed their duties in this House.

Mr. STAFFORD. It makes no provision whatsoever for paying back salaries to those Members who have joined the military service while they were in the service?

Mr. GARD. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard that some gentlemen have not accepted pay while they were in the Army and have not drawn their salaries here. What provision is made for them?

Mr. GARD. None in this joint resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. There can be no objection, as I see it, to this joint resolution, because it merely provides for the payment of their salaries from the time they resume their duties here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the word "recent" be changed to the word "present," because the war is not over?

Mr. GARD. Possibly that would be better. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that change will be made.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1918.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SISSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 10, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed report of the expenditures under the appropriation "Preventing the spread of epidemic diseases," for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1562); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Alien Property Custodian, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for salaries and expenses of his office for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1563); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for an increase in the salary of the principal bookkeeper of the office of the Treasurer of the United States for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1564); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement showing the number of employees and their compensation in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing whose compensation is paid from "Compensation of employees," as carried in the sundry civil bill, but who are detailed for duty in connection with clerical work of the bureau (H. Doc. No. 1565); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1566); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1567); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for an assistant to the superintendent, and for increases in salaries of certain employees, for the period from December 1 to June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1568); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Northeast River, Duplin County, N. C. (H. Doc. No. 1569); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Indian and Halifax Rivers, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 1570); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 469) providing for an investigation of the National Security League, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 844), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 845), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13056) to grant to citizens of Modoc County, Cal., the right to cut timber in the State of Nevada for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove such timber to Modoc County, Cal., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 846), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13042) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 847), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLLIER, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5999) for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 848), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our great military leaders on the field of battle have recognized Thy grace to us as a people. Thy mighty arm has gained us victory, and in this place of political power, where we shape the policies of a nation, we would no less recognize Thy right to rule and our dependence upon Thy grace and Thy power. A mighty task, unspeakable in its greatness, the greatest that has ever faced, perhaps, organized society, lies just before us. Oh, do Thou give us grace, Almighty God, to meet the issues of our day and to triumph by our dependence upon Thee and by Thy divine guidance in all that pertains to the happiness and prosperity of the world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 6, 1918, was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM OREGON.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, Hon. FRED W. MULKEY, who has been elected for the short term by the people of Oregon as Senator. I ask that the credentials may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye, that it appearing from the official canvass of the vote cast at the general election held within and for the State of Oregon on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, A. D. 1918, that FRED W. MULKEY, of Multnomah County, State of Oregon, received the highest number of votes cast for the office of United States Senator in Congress at said general election:

Now, therefore, I, James Withycombe, governor of the State of Oregon, by virtue of the authority vested in me under the laws of the State of Oregon, do hereby grant this certificate of election and declare said FRED W. MULKEY, of Multnomah County, State of Oregon, to be duly elected to the office of United States Senator in Congress of the State of Oregon for the term of ------ to fill the vacancy in term ending March 4, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the State of Oregon to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the Capitol, at Salem, Oreg., this 30th day of November, A. D. 1918.

By the governor:

[SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the credentials? The Chair hears none, and they will be placed on file.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the oath be administered to Mr. MULKEY, who is present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The newly elected Senator will present himself at the desk for the purpose of taking the oath of office.

Mr. MULKEY was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him he took his seat in the Senate.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, which I ask to have read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO—CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas the Board of Canvassers of the State of Idaho, as provided in section 453 of the Revised Codes, having duly canvassed, declared, and certified on the 25th day of November, A. D. 1918, to the secretary of state that at a general election held in said State on the 5th day of November, A. D. 1918, WILLIAM E. BORAH received the greatest number of legal votes cast at said election for the office of United States Senator and is therefore elected to such office.

Now, therefore, I, W. T. Dougherty, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do certify that WILLIAM E. BORAH is elected to the office of United States Senator in and for the State of Idaho for the period of six years commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1919, and ending the 4th day of March, A. D. 1925, as appears by the records in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Idaho. Done at Boise, the capital of said State, this 25th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.]

W. T. DOUGHERTY,
Secretary of State.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The Judiciary Committee, by direction of the Senate, is investigating the subject of German propaganda work in this country during the war. On Saturday before that committee certain evidence was produced by Mr. Bielaski and my name was so referred to as to justify me in making a brief comment.

The evidence in question consisted of a letter dated July 22, 1915, signed "Reiswitz," and sent to some one whom he addressed as "Your Excellency." We are told that Reiswitz was then the German consul at Chicago. His letter appears to give the so-called "excellency" information concerning a German movement in this country to stop the export of arms and ammunition. This movement was known as the Embargo Conference. In this letter Reiswitz mentions my name in the following paragraph:

Among others, the following have agreed to cooperate: Senator HITCHCOCK, Congressman Buchanan, William Bayard Hale, of New York, and the well-known pulpit orator, Dr. Aked (born an Englishman), from San Francisco.

HITCHCOCK seems to be very strong for the plan. He told our representative at a conference in Omaha, "If this matter is organized in the right way, you will sweep the United States."

If his alleged "excellency" or Reiswitz himself had any intelligence, either or both of them must have known that I was myself the author of the bill to prohibit the export of arms and ammunition and that I had introduced it in the Senate more than eight months before the Reiswitz letter was written. They must have known that I had made a Senate speech upon it and that it had been debated in the Senate and discussed in the newspapers. They must have known that on February 17, 1915, I had offered my bill as an amendment to the shipping bill then pending and that my amendment had been defeated by a vote of 36 to 51. My position, therefore, in favor of prohibiting the export of arms and ammunition had been independently and publicly taken and was widely known months before Reiswitz discovered it and revealed it to his chief as a secret.

The part I took during 1914 and 1915 in favor of prohibiting the export of arms and ammunition during our neutrality has never been a subject of concealment or apology on my part. It became a campaign issue in 1916 when I ran for reelection, and the fact that I was reelected by a comfortable majority indicates that my course and my motives were understood and approved by the people of Nebraska.

My stand was taken in 1914 as an American for neutrality. The Germans in America took theirs by forming the Embargo Conference in 1915 as partisans of Germany. They were supporting my bill, but I declined to go to their conferences, conventions, or meetings, though I was often invited to appear as a speaker. I made my only speeches here in the Senate or in defending my course later before my constituents.

In those days, Mr. President, the country was under a pledge of neutrality by virtue of the President's proclamation made when the war broke out. We should, no doubt, have remained neutral, at least nominally and officially, if Germany had not by a series of outrages made our attitude first difficult and then impossible.

My attitude naturally changed with changing conditions.

I stood, first, for a strict, peaceful, and impartial neutrality even to the extent of selling no arms and ammunition and lending no money to either side.

Next, when Germany began a systematic attack on our commerce, I was ready to fight to protect our neutrality.

I supported the President's request that we authorize him to assert and protect our neutrality by arming our merchant ships, and I had charge in the Senate of what was known as the armed neutrality resolution, which died so dramatically here in the Senate at noon on March 4, 1917.

A month later, when the issue changed from armed neutrality to war, I had charge of the declaration of war, which was briefly debated and passed by the Senate April 4, 1917.

And so, Mr. President, like other Americans, I have passed from one phase of the situation to another—peaceful neutrality, armed neutrality, war. German conduct forced these changes not only in the case of public men as individuals but in the case of the country as a whole. This conduct was not wholly confined to the outrages perpetrated upon the high seas and in the war areas in Europe, but it included the criminal folly of German agents, whom Mr. Bielaski has been investigating. The latter exasperated American patience at home while German atrocities abroad aroused American resentment.

I have no disposition to criticize Mr. Bielaski for revealing all the secret correspondence of these German agents and conspirators with each other. It is evident, however, that they in correspondence with each other have used the names of a number of public men recklessly if not falsely. They reached the climax of absurdity when they recorded Prof. Albert B. Hart, of Harvard, as one of the public men of America who would cooperate with them.

In my case they knew that I had refused to join their organization, refused to speak at their meetings, or even to attend them, though they were camouflaged as American.

I supported in the days of our neutrality the embargo idea as a Senator, as the publisher of a large newspaper, and as an American, but I declined to associate myself with those who became partisans of Germany.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I shall send to the desk of the Secretary in a moment the press report of the street car strike in Cleveland, Ohio, references to the difficulty by the National War Labor Board, and certain comments of Mr. Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, thereon. If the Senate will tolerate me for about three minutes, I should like to make a short statement. There is no objection, Mr. President? The woman suffrage joint resolution is pending and undisposed of in this body, coming over here from the House.

Last September, under stress of war conditions, in Cleveland women became street car conductors, taking the place of those who were in war service or had gone into the military or naval service. There not many days ago, Mr. President, a strike was instituted on the ground that the emergency having passed, the armistice having been signed some time ago, the unions of Cleveland would not tolerate longer the presence of women as car conductors in that city. The matter came before the National War Board. It was ruled by that board that the women conductors in the Cleveland street car system must go. Mr. Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, its secretary, says:

Organized labor has not suspended any of its rules; it has not held any of its fundamental laws in abeyance; it has simply acquiesced in certain things done by the Government because by such acquiescence it was believed the war could be more speedily brought to a successful termination. All rules which experience has shown are necessary to obtain for labor its just rights are still in full force and effect, and none has ever been abrogated or suspended.

Following this statement of Mr. Morrison, or, rather, preceding it, if I get the point of time correctly, was the ruling by the War Labor Board that the women conductors must be dispensed with in the city of Cleveland.

On the 6th day of December, 1918, here in the city of Washington a crowd of suffragettes were rotten-egged at Lafayette Park. They were in pursuance of a lawful right, holding an assembly. The purposes of that assembly I have no sympathy with. I have no sympathy with their picketing or with some of the remarks made at that assembly. I think the President has done as much to officially forward the passage of the joint resolution as any occupant of the President's office can well do, and I am not in sympathy with their criticism in this regard. Nevertheless if the women of Ohio or of the country had the same vote that men have they would not be rotten-egged in Washington, nor would they be discharged, with the approval of the secretary of the Federation of Labor and the finding of the National War Labor Board, from their service in Cleveland, Ohio, as street car conductors. If they were good enough to serve when the country was in the stress of a great emergency, they are good enough to continue that service until they see fit to voluntarily retire.

While the joint resolution is pending and undisposed of here, this disregard of the rights of women in this country probably will continue. Such exhibitions as the rotten-egging of women in Washington, whatever their conduct may be, whatever the cause which they represent may be, however much I may not be in sympathy with them, their discharge merely because they are women and not because they are not performing their duties correctly as conductors of street cars—those matters are a disgrace to Washington, they are a disgrace to the city of Cleveland, and they are a reflection upon the sense of fair play that belongs to the American male citizen.

I trust the joint resolution will come in due time to a vote again, that ultimately it will pass, and that woman may be clothed with the right of a ballot, so that she may protect herself against such discrimination both in occupation and in her right of lawful assembly and expressing her sentiments.

I ask that these matters, including a protest of the National Women's Trade Union League night before last here in Washington, in which Mrs. Robbins and others entered their protest on these matters, may be incorporated in the RECORD and printed at length. I do not ask that they be read, but I think they ought to be preserved to be used in connection with the suffrage resolution which is still pending.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLEVELAND STREET CAR STRIKE ENDS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 6.

Following an all-day conference, 2,400 striking motormen and conductors of the Cleveland Railway Co., who quit work Tuesday morning, have voted to accept the proposition of President John J. Stanley, of the company, that he would dismiss 150 women conductors by March 1.

The company officials and representatives of employees met and signed the agreement which ended the strike. The women conductors have been employed since September 1. Cleveland was without car service for three days.

WOMEN START FIGHT FOR JOBS—NATIONAL TRADES UNION TO MAKE CLEVELAND CASE TEST FOR NATION.

The National Women's Trade Union League last night announced through its president, Mrs. Raymond Robbins, that it would support the women street car conductors in Cleveland in their fight to retain their positions, which the National War Labor Board recently decided should be given up to men to end a strike. It will be made a test of the economic independence of women and the right to jobs they now hold as a result of the war.

Mrs. Robbins telegraphed to the women that "the league is standing by you in your fight for the right to work," and urged them to enter a formal appeal from the decisions of the National War Labor Board.

"The Cleveland case," said an officer of the league, "is but a symptom of a serious industrial possibility which will manifest itself in other occupations if this decision by the National War Labor Board is allowed to stand. It is monstrous that the Government itself should establish a precedent like this at a time so critical to the history of the whole world. The women of the country will resist it, of course, and the National Women's Trade Union League is prepared to go the limit to fight an injustice like this. We call upon all the women of the country to join us."

WAR LABOR BOARD'S DECISION ON WOMAN CONDUCTORS, TOPIC—SECRETARY MORRISON, OF FEDERATION OF LABOR, REGARDS DECLARATION THAT THEIR EMPLOYMENT IS NOT ESSENTIAL TO ROADS' SUCCESS AS PRECEDENT.

Organized labor is taking especial interest in the decision of the War Labor Board declaring the employment of women on the street railways of Cleveland not essential to the successful operation of the roads. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, asserts that in the judgment of the organization the precedent established by the board is likely to be followed all over the country.

"Organized labor has not suspended any of its rules; it has not held any of its fundamental laws in abeyance; it has simply acquiesced in certain things done by the Government, because by such acquiescence it was believed the war could more speedily be brought to a successful termination," said Mr. Morrison. "All rules which experience has shown are necessary to obtain for labor its just rights are still in full force and effect, and none has either been abrogated or suspended."

RETICENT ON FEDERATION ATTITUDE.

Mr. Morrison refused to say what the attitude of the federation would be regarding what are known in munition factories and among shipbuilders as "mushroom mechanics." These are young men who have not served their time as apprentices, but have, in many cases, taken on tasks that under ordinary circumstances are not assigned to men until they have spent four years acquiring knowledge of their trade.

"This is a matter too complicated for me to discuss at the present time. It requires a great deal of thought and exhaustive treatment," Mr. Morrison said.

Mr. Morrison intimated that when the various departments employed "mushroom mechanics" organized labor did not protest, neither did it consent to the proceeding. But the exigencies of the war required that it acquiesce.

It was pointed out to Mr. Morrison that if organized labor, now that the war is over, declines longer to "acquiesce" many thousands of boys who did the work of men during the war must return to the activities usually assigned to boys or go back to school.

REGARDED AS DIFFICULT PROBLEM.

"I can't comment on that phase of the matter," Mr. Morrison said.

In another responsible quarter it was stated that the problems of disposing of the woman in overalls and in uniform will be even more difficult of solution than the "mushroom-mechanic problem." Many thousands of women are working at lathes in factories, are employed as riveters by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or are engaged in other fields which before the war were not open to women workers.

"Women mechanics will have to leave the Shipping Board," an official of that organization said. "They are war-emergency workers. The war having ended, the emergency ceases to exist, therefore the woman mechanic or helper can not expect much longer to remain in this field."

EGGS FIRED AT "SUFFS"—LAFAYETTE STATUE AN UNCOOKED OMELET AFTER FEW HOURS—YOUNG GIRLS START RUMPUS—TWO MAIDS FROM THE WEST TEAR DOWN BANNER UNCOMPLIMENTARY TO WILSON BORNE AT MILITANTS' MEETING—THEY AND TWO MALES, ALSO DISTURBERS, TAKEN BY POLICE.

Facing a hostile crowd, suffragettes who met in Lafayette Square last night were forced to dodge an occasional volley of eggs thrown by soldiers, who jeered and heckled the speakers from the time they began their meetings at 1 o'clock in the afternoon until the meetings ended at 9 o'clock last night. Although none of the suffragettes was hit, the statue of Lafayette resembled an uncooked omelet.

Two war workers, Miss Margaret Rose Botting and Miss Nell Louise Bowen, both or 2030 F Street NW., led a crowd shortly after 8 o'clock which tore down and destroyed the "suff" banner.

GIRLS PAY $25 COLLATERAL.

After an hour in the house of detention both girls, who came from Illinois to work for democracy, were released on $25 each collateral. Clayton West, 1796 Columbia Road, and John Rankin, 14 S Street NW., also were arrested.

The banner which was torn down read: "We protest! Wilson has sailed away to aid democracy in Europe, while he with his party is responsible for denying democracy to 20,000,000 citizens of America. An autocrat at home is a poor champion of liberty abroad. We want democracy here!"

POLICEMEN CALL FOR HELP.

That there would be trouble was apparent shortly after the suffragettes assembled at 1 o'clock. The two policemen on hand at the beginning of the meeting were forced to call for reinforcements to hold the crowd in check. Soldiers and sailors set up rival meetings, sang and shouted.

The meeting was one of a series, held in preparation for the big demonstration on December 16, when women from every State in the country will demand immediate passage of the Anthony amendment.

STRUCTURES ON UNION STATION PLAZA.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a very short editorial from the morning Herald of this city, in which is discussed the question of investigating the construction of the buildings now in course of completion upon the Union Station Plaza, which I ask to have read. It deals with a matter which Congress should take cognizance of immediately and stop the needless waste of public funds.

There being no objection, the editorial was read as follows:

UNION STATION PLAZA HOUSING FIZZLE.

The Housing Corporation wants to spend $400,000 more to complete the 90 per cent completed housing project on the Union Station Plaza. Of this sum $100,000 is to go for construction and the remainder for laundry, café, and furniture.

Questionnaires to determine the expediency of completing this housing operation in face of a probable exodus of war workers are being sent to all Government departments by the Senate Committee on Buildings and Grounds, which is investigating the United States Housing Bureau.

It would be far more desirable if the Senate committee would quiz certain Housing Corporation officials as to the delays of their building programs. Their work has been characterized by unfulfilled promises. It appears that the Housing Corporation, as far as its work locally is concerned, is the one Government department during the war which did not satisfactorily accomplish what it set out to do.

To the inconvenience of 2,000 women war workers the buildings on the Union Station Plaza have met with a series of delays in the course of their construction. Originally the plan, according to promises, was to have these houses ready for occupancy months ago. Now they are but 90 per cent completed and past performances of the Housing Corporation do not warrant the granting of another chance to finish construction.

It seems to be admitted by the testimony to the Senate committee that the buildings between the Capitol and Union Station would only be occupied for a year, if now completed, and then be removed.

If the immediate comfort of 2,000 tired women war workers were assured, we would say go ahead and spend $400,000 more after already wasting $1,800,000 on this work, from which not a cent's worth of benefit will be derived aside from those who received this public money for labor and material.

But if the Housing Corporation will act with the same speed and judgment in spending an additional $400,000 on this project as they did in spending nearly $2,000,000, the buildings will perhaps be completed in time to tear them down.

The improper housing of the thousands of war workers, the certain neglect of some one responsible for the providing of proper accommodations, will always be remembered over the entire country by those who suffered as the one black mark on Washington's otherwise glorious war record.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12917. An act to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 358. A joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 356) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1918.

PEACE TERMS.

Mr. LODGE. I present a statement from the executive board of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, representing 46 leading patriotic war organizations. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1918.

The executive board of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, representing 46 leading patriotic organizations of the country, with an aggregate membership of more than 2,500,000 in all, has formulated, with the cooperation of experts in international affairs, "dictated peace" terms for adoption at Versailles, which include payment by the central powers of the full cost of the war, including reparation and indemnity for all damages and deaths, the former German colonies not to be returned, control of raw materials by the allies, and disarmament of Germany with exclusion from any league of nations until the discharge of all her obligations. It is the conclusion of the exhaustive study of the world peace question by the board. The terms are as follows:

Restitution and reparation:

1. Restitution of all indemnities levied and property taken by the central powers.

2. Reparation of all damage to property caused by the central powers, including depredations at sea.

3. Indemnities to cover civilians murdered or injured, including those (a) in invaded countries, and (b) on the high seas.

4. (a) The central powers to bear the cost of war to the allies—the war debts of Belgium, France, and Serbia to be paid first.

(b) Application of public and private resources of central powers to such payments and the control of the finances of the central powers until all restitution and reparation are carried out.

Territorial:

1. Alsace-Lorraine restored to France.

2. Italia Irredenta restored to Italy.

3. Lands under Turkish rule to be freed and their governments reorganized in conformity with racial conditions and under the protection of the allied powers.

4. Dardanelles to be under control of allied powers.

5. Serbia, Montenegro, Albania, Roumania, and Greece to receive territories rightfully theirs by racial, lingual, and national claims.

6. Independence of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, and Jugo-Slavia, including all districts inhabited by Poles, Czecho-Slovaks, and Jugo-Slavs.

7. Schleswig-Holstein to determine whether it wishes to return to Denmark; Duchy of Luxemburg to be independent, or joined to Belgium or France if her people so desire.

8. Order to be restored in Russia and provisions made for freedom from all Teutonic encroachments.

9. German colonies not to be returned to Germany.

10. Kiel Canal and Heligoland to be under control of allied powers.

General:

1. Treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk to be abrogated.

2. Navies of the central powers surrendered to the allies.

3. Disarmament of the central powers.

4. Necessary enemy territory to be occupied until restitution and reparation are effected.

5. Punishment not only of the ex-Kaiser but of the others responsible for the war and for the violations of The Hague Conventions.

6. International arbitration and league of nations as complement of policy of national defense. The central powers not to be admitted into the league until full discharge of their obligations under the treaty and until they achieve permanent establishment of free institutions.

7. Control of raw materials by the allies until the central powers are admitted to the league of nations.

This is a correct statement regarding the attitude, conclusions, and wishes of the executive board of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, which was organized February 21, 1917, to assist in the coordination of the work of national preparedness and patriotic service carried on by the various organizations in the United States.

The members of the executive board are: Edward Harding, chairman, Boy Scouts of America; Philip S. Post, committeeman at large; William S. Ellis, National Security League; Langdon P. Marvin, Military Training Comps Association of United States; Mrs. George Thacher Guernsey, Daughters of American Revolution; George Hewitt Myers, Army League of the United States; Edwin O. Holter, committeeman at large; Mrs. Lewis B. Stillwell, National League for Women's Service.

The represented societies are: Aeronautical Society of America, American Committee for Devastated France, American Defense Society (Inc.), American Rights League, Army League of the United States, Army Relief Society, Association of Military Colleges and Schools, America's Allies Cooperative Committee, Boys' Club Federation, Boy Scouts of America, Colonial Dames of the Seventeenth Century, Colonial Daughters of America, Daughters of American Revolution, Descendants of Signers of Declaration of Independence, Duryea War Relief (Inc.), General Society Daughters of the Revolution, High School Volunteers of the United States, International Lyceum Association, League to Enforce Peace, Military Order of Loyal Legion of United States, Military Order of Foreign Wars of United States, Military Training Camps Association, National Americanization Committee, National Association for Universal Military Training, National Civic Federation, National Committee of One Hundred, National League for Women's Service, National Security League, National Society of United States Daughters of 1812, National Society of Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, Naval and Military Order Spanish-American War, Naval Training Association, Navy League of the United States, Order of Founders and Patriots of America, Patriotic Service League, Power-Craft Association, Society of American Wars, Sons of the Revolution, Sons of Veterans United States of America, Special Aid Society for

EDWARD HARDING,
Chairman Executive Board.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Local Division No. 72, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Boston, Mass., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Republican Club of New York City, N. Y., praying that the German nation be not fed by the United States, and that German goods of whatever description be not received, and that this country shall have no commercial relations with Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NEW. I send to the desk resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., by the friends of Ireland, held on one evening of last week, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial in favor of free government for Ireland, adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Indiana at Tomlinson Hall, Indianapolis, Ind., Sunday, December 1.

As citizens of the United States, a Nation that has successfully battled for the ideals that stand for democracy and liberty of the world, we are interested in the welfare of all nations, including Ireland and England, and particularly so in Ireland, as she is our nearest European neighbor and as citizens of Irish blood constitute a very large proportion of our vast population.

We hold that there should be no hostility or antagonism between the Irish and English peoples; that, as neighboring States, they have many interests in common, and that the peace and welfare of these two peoples are essential to the tranquillity and progress of the world.

We hold with President Wilson "that no people should be forced under a sovereignty under which it does not wish to live," and that "all well-defined nationalities should have the right to choose their own form of government by free and untrammeled franchise, and decide by majority vote the form of government they desire," carrying into practice the time-honored American doctrine, "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

We hold that Ireland, our nearest European neighbor, is a "well-defined nationality," both racially, historically, and geographically. For more than 700 years she has steadfastly refused to recognize the English Government as the rightful government of Ireland. She has demonstrated her opposition to alien rule by revolts and rebellions every 25 years of that period, in which struggles her best patriots have given their lives and her unarmed people have made every sacrifice in the cause of liberty. Apart from this she has constitutionally battled for the right of a native government, and even under a limited franchise she has for the last 40 years returned to Parliament 86 out of 101 parliamentary representatives pledged to legislative independence.

We point to the fact that within the last year, at a convention of Irish representatives, selected by the English Premier, Lloyd-George, and presided over by that eminent Protestant Irish leader, Sir Horace Plunkett, a scheme for an Irish government was adopted by a decisive majority vote of more than 85 per cent of the delegates; that this decision, in the form of an official report, was submitted as requested to the English Government, which had promised to act on the report of said convention, and that no action whatever has been taken, and that the people of Ireland are now held in subjection to a rule of militarism and force, their leaders imprisoned and deported without charge or trial, and all the rights and liberties of free men denied them.

We hold that this condition is contrary to the expressed ideals of the nations that fought "to free the world from autocracy," abhorrent to the American people and to all lovers of liberty and directly contrary to the declarations of our President at the time the United States entered the war, declarations which he has reiterated and emphasized as recently as September 27 of this year.

This, being our conviction, and mindful of the devotion and loyalty of the Irish race to America from the days of the Revolution down to the present time, we citizens of Indianapolis, in mass meeting assembled, call upon our President on the eve of his momentous journey to the peace conference to insist that Ireland, like Belgium, Poland, Bohemia, Schleswig-Holstein, Finland, Serbia, and the Czecho and Jugo Slavs, shall have the right of self-determination.

Under whatever form of government the Irish people may establish, any minority of the Irish people can be fully protected by proper guaranty, and if any security for the good faith of the Irish nation be desired, as American citizens we urge the President of the United States to give that security or indorsement, to the end that Ireland's liberty and independence be secured by international agreement, and that the Irish and English peoples may enter "the new day of democracy" as friendly neighboring nations, their differences forever ended. The unhappy cause removed by the end of the domination of one of them by the other.

And that these resolutions be telegraphed to-night to the President and to our Representatives and Senators for introduction to-morrow in the Congress of the United States.

And, further, that our Representatives and Senators be, and they are hereby, requested to support in Congress this week the resolution introduced by Representative GALLAGHER, of Illinois, now before the Foreign Affairs Committee asking the United States to intervene at the peace council for self-determination for Ireland.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the desk a telegram in the nature of a petition to the Senate of the United States. If there be no objection, I should like to have the Secretary read the telegram, omitting the signatures thereto.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., December 9.

Hon. F. B. KELLOGG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution adopted at mass meeting held in Minneapolis December 8, 1918:

Whereas well-confirmed reports have reached us of terrible massacres of Jews in Poland and Galicia, where hundreds of innocent and helpless men, women, and children were murdered or burned to death by Polish soldiers; and

Whereas it is well known that certain influential elements in Poland not only connive at these atrocities against the Jews, but actually direct and encourage them; and

Whereas the rights to life, security, and the pursuit of happiness of 4,000,000 Jews, who have lived in Poland for hundreds of years and who have contributed to her industrial and commercial developments, are thus openly and flagrantly violated by the new Polish State, that has secured freedom as a result of the great sacrifices brought by America and the allies in the great war for democracy: Therefore be it

Resolved at a mass meeting of the Jewish community of Minneapolis assembled at the Kenneseth Israel Synagogue to protest against those outrages upon the Jewish people, That we appeal to the United States Congress to intervene on behalf of our persecuted people in Poland, and that this resolution be at once forwarded to both Houses of Congress in Washington.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of O'Connor & Van Bergen, of St. Paul; of William L. Henderson & Co., of St. Paul; and of L. J. Buchanan and sundry other citizens of Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed tax of 10 per cent on rentals of private wires in the pending revenue bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Janney, Semple, Hill & Co. and sundry other citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the early passage of the pending revenue bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Trades and Labor Council, of Winona, Minn., favoring the terms of peace as proposed by the President, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Pioneers of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Ramsey County, Minn., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., relative to the deportation of aliens who have withdrawn their applications to become citizens in order to escape operations of the draft, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Council of Seattle, Wash., remonstrating against the forced sale by the Government of properties in the State of Washington under the jurisdiction of the Spruce Production Division of the United States Signal Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Sectional Central Labor Council of Spokane, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation throwing aside the restrictions against importation of Asiatic labor, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., praying for the designation of November 11 as the proper day for national thanksgiving, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of Seattle, Wash., favoring the adoption of an amendment to section 202 of the pending war-revenue bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by the Retail Grocers and Butchers' Association of Cheyenne, Wyo., favoring the adoption of an amendment to section 202 of the pending revenue bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present resolutions unanimously adopted by the Board of Trade of Orlando, Fla.; also resolutions from the war-tax advisory committee of the National Association of Credit Men, together with a telegram from the president of the Credit Men's Association and the president of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Tampa, Fla., favoring the fixing of the amount of taxes to be assessed against the year 1918 at the earliest possible time, and praying for the speedy passage of the pending revenue bill. I ask that the resolutions lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Rotary Club of Battle Creek, Mich., praying for universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Slavonic Workingman's Aid Union, of Detroit, Mich., relative to the terms of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Education of Niles, Mich., favoring the establishment of a national department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Portland, Me., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit amateur wireless installation, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to offer a very brief minority report (Rept. No. 617, Part II), the minority consisting of myself, to the pending revenue bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I desire to present at this time the views of the minority (Rept. No. 617, Part III) of the Committee on Finance on House bill 12863, known as the revenue bill of 1918, signed by all of the minority, with the exception of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who, I am informed, will make a report expressing his own views.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I desire to state that I had the privilege of reading the report only a short time ago. Last Friday I reserved the right to offer further additional views prepared by myself upon the bill. I have not had the time to dictate my views since reading the reports which have just been presented, but I will do so within the next couple of hours; and I ask the privilege, when those views have been prepared, of handing them in at the desk and having them printed, if there be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say that after I have examined these several reports, if I find I am not able to subscribe to them I ask consent to submit my views upon the pending bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5058) to authorize the counties of Morton and Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bismarck, N. Dak., and I submit a report (No. 619) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 5170) granting a pension to John S. Dornblaser; to the Committee on Pensions.

EXCLUSION OF ALIENS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the draft boards in our section of the country in the discharge of their duties found a great many individuals who had declared their intention to become citizens who, under the law that we passed subsequently, declared their intention to renounce their citizenship in order to avoid military service. Our draft boards, our chambers of commerce, and various other organizations have urged that such persons be deported from the country. In order to carry out that view, in which I very heartily concur, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The bill (S. 5139) to expel and exclude from the United States aliens who, to escape military service, have withdrawn their declaration of intention to become citizens, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

CABLE SERVICE.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 376), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public service, whether information can be promptly asked for and received by cable, at the request of the immediate relatives of any officer or soldier in the overseas service of the country, where no word has been received from such officers and soldiers for more than six weeks, as to whether such officer or soldier was, on November 11, 1918, dead or alive.

ORDNANCE AND QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk providing for an investigation of the Bureau of Ordnance and the Quartermaster General's office by the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that the resolution be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 377) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs shall proceed at once to investigate the Bureau of Ordnance and of the Quartermaster General of the War Department with particular reference to the manner in which funds appropriated by Congress for ordnance and supplies have been expended by those offices during the present war with Germany; and that said committee shall report to the Senate the number of 3-inch and other artillery shells, small-arms ammunition, rifles, automatic rifles, light and heavy machine guns, light and heavy field artillery, with the necessary carriages and other parts and appurtenances thereof, and the amount, kind, quality, cost, and disposition of food, clothing, and other necessary supplies and equipment procured by the said Ordnance Office and the office of the Quartermaster General, respectively, and supplied during the said war to the military forces of the United States in France, and what portion of the same were procured in the United States and what portion in France.

Said committee is directed to further inquire and report to the Senate the cost at which said guns, ammunition, supplies, food, clothing, and equipment, or other articles referred to above, was procured, whether or not the supply of the same was adequate or overabundant, and whether or not in each case the prices paid for the same by the officials of said offices was reasonable and just; and said committee shall further inquire into the system and method of organization of said offices and the number of employees therein during the present war, the methods of selection and commissioning of officers and appointment of employees therein, the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the compensation paid to employees, the efficiency or inefficiency of the conduct of the business assigned to said offices, bureaus, and the various subdivisions, branches, and agencies thereof.

Said committee is further directed to report to the Senate any failure to procure adequate supplies, ordnance, or equipment in the matters mentioned above and any misconduct or abuse in connection therewith, if any, and shall ascertain and report to the Senate the exact name and identity of the officer or employee of the United States responsible therefor in any degree; and in case there was any failure of procurement or supply in respect to the matters aforesaid said committee shall report the cause of such failure and whether or not agents of the German Government were in any way responsible therefor.

For the purposes of this resolution the said committee is authorized to draw, by its chairman, on the contingent fund of the Senate to pay all necessary expenses properly vouched for by its chairman, to subpœna witnesses and documents, to administer oaths, and to do all acts and things necessary to the carrying out of the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as a reason for offering the resolution I submit, and ask to have printed in the RECORD, an article by a well-known newspaper correspondent of this city, Mr. P. H. Whaley. Among the statements made in that article is the following:

> The total shipment of 3-inch shells of all kinds sent from the United States to France during the whole period we were in the war was only about 3,000,000, and * * * this supply, under the intensive conditions prevailing, would hardly have met the requirements for a single month.

I beg leave to say just a word in that connection. In the case of a great manufacturing nation, such as the United States, whose manufacturers, mechanics, and scientists are noted for their efficiency, it would seem to be impossible that by mere inefficiency, by mere mistakes, such a tremendous failure as is alleged here could have occurred. The same failure occurred in the production and shipment to France of airplanes; and the same sort of mistakes were made in regard to the supplies which came under the activities of the Quartermaster General of the Army. So the query necessarily arises as to whether or not this colossal failure of a great and wealthy nation to supply its troops with essential ammunition, artillery, and ordnance was not caused intentionally, whether or not there were treasonable activities that were thwarting the efforts of the War Department. As a part of the resolution, I have asked the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into that phase of the question.

I remark in passing that, in my judgment, if half a dozen or so of traitors and spies had been executed under the law applicable to criminals of that kind in the early stages of the war many lives of better men would have been saved. I ask leave to have printed in that connection a brief statement purporting to give an inventory of the kind and character of clothing and other equipment now on hand, procured by the Quartermaster General's office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MUNITION OUTPUT SERIOUS FAILURE—NEGLECT TO SUPPLY ARMY OVERSEAS WITH GUNS AND MUNITIONS SHARPLY CRITICIZED—HARBORD SAVES DAY—SUPPLY OF 3-INCH SHELLS SENT DURING WHOLE WAR TIME NOT ENOUGH FOR A MONTH.

P. H. Whaley writes from Washington to the Chicago Tribune on the failure of the United States to furnish guns and munitions in sufficient quantities to our armies in France. He says:

In October the Ordnance Department began to be seriously disturbed about its failure to supply the Army in France with guns and munitions. Not only were the cables bringing complaints and urgent demands, but returning officers had begun to talk rather boldly.

Get-together plans were therefore discussed by Ordnance officers, many of whom were former civilians, and an effort was made to bring some sort of order out of the existing chaos. It was also proposed to take some measures to anticipate a probable investigation by Congress.

Under date of November 21 an Associated Press dispatch came through from France which filled most American citizens with pride and satisfaction. Those who knew the truth and had reason to fear an investigation did not know what to make of it. They did not know whether it was a first coat of whitewash or an indication of more trouble.

The dispatch contained a message of thanks sent by Lieut. Gen. Liggett, in command of the First Army, to Gen. Harbord, in command of the supply service, as follows:

LIGGETT PRAISES HARBORD.

"The First Army of the American Expeditionary Forces desires to convey its full appreciation for the great assistance afforded by the officers and soldiers of the service of supply during its recent battles.

"The battles of the Argonne and the Meuse were hard and continuous for nearly two months. During this period you never failed us. Food, ammunition, clothing, medical attendance, and other supplies always were at hand. Our confidence in your efforts was well repaid. The First Army of the American Expeditionary Forces congratulates the service of supply on its share in the great American success.

"Without your energy and push back of us our efforts would not have succeeded. You share with us the glory of our deeds."

INDEFATIGABLE EFFORTS NEEDED.

The significance of that dispatch was probably not lost on Gen. Harbord. He had, in truth, supplied the front-line troops with the artillery ammunition absolutely needed, but by what indefatigable efforts only he and the men associated with him and the commanding generals knew.

It was altogether proper that Gen. Liggett, on behalf of the First Army, should have thanked the supply service, because it was well known to Gen. Liggett that Gen. Harbord had been compelled to get ammunition from anywhere to compensate for that which he was expecting, but not getting, from America.

While the front-line ammunition that Gen. Liggett was so thankful for was flowing forward from the supply service, cables from that same service were also going forward to Washington urging that as French resources were being strained to the utmost America must deliver munitions at once or the proper volume of flow to the front could not be maintained. And there was no reserve.

SUPPLY WOEFULLY SHORT.

When it is known that the total shipment of 3-inch shells of all kinds send from the United States to France during the whole period we were in the war was only about 3,000,000 and that this supply, under the intensive conditions prevailing, would hardly have met the requirements for a single month, some idea of the alarming conditions which Gen. Pershing faced may be gained.

It will be said that "we got by," so what's the difference?

Pass the credit to Gen. Harbord and the supply service, as Gen. Liggett did. They "made good" when Washington fell down. Pass the credit to the French, who strained their resources to help out. But do not deceive the public by making it think that American ammunition was winning the momentous victories which led to the signing of the armistice. It was not true. It was humiliatingly untrue.

RUSSIAN SHELLS NOT SHIPPED.

Yet all this time there were thousands, even millions, of fully loaded shells on this side of the water waiting to be shipped. Most of them, it is true, lacked some essential part. Others which had been manufactured for Russia were in perfect condition, but the ownership of them was in question. The use of them might have offended Lenine.

All this time, too, the Ordnance Department of the Navy was working under high speed. Perhaps it was because the Navy never made a specialty of efficiency experts and systems.

Consider, for instance, the 20,000,000 or more small-caliber shell orders which were placed in Canada. No deliveries were ever made. The Canadian manufacturers seemed to be in doubt as to whether they were to manufacture the shells complete or simply build them in part and ship them to the United States to be finished. A great deal of dependence was placed on these Canadian orders.

COULD NOT PASS INSPECTION.

A firm in Indiana had a contract for some 10,000,000 small parts. It was expected to be producing about 20,000 of these parts a day, beginning months ago. After some thousands had been finished it was discovered that they were made wrong. They did not pass inspection and were worthless. More delay followed until the faults could be corrected.

This required days and even weeks. Finally production was begun again, just before the end of the war. Meantime otherwise perfectly good shells were waiting for the aforesaid parts.

There was a failure to coordinate. The production program was distributed among a number of firms all over the country. Under a perfect system of industrial organization and perfect shipments by railroad assembly might have been accomplished without unreasonable delay. But as a matter of fact, in an ordinary world the success of the program as outlined would have been a miracle. It was foredoomed to failure.

ALLIES KEPT ARMY SUPPLIED.

It is true that arrangements had been made with England and France to keep our Army provided with artillery and artillery ammunition for a certain period. Cargo space was required for things more vital at the moment than heavy artillery.

But both France and England had taxed their resources severely to supply ammunition for their own armies. France, in particular, had changed even her shipyards into munition factories. England was putting her young women into the loading plants. A year ago it was understood that America would soon be sending ammunition in quantities, possibly even supplementing the supplies of the allies.

Twenty months after the opening of the war England was producing shrapnel shells in vast quantities, millions a month. The complaint of Lord Northcliffe was not as to the quantity of production, but as to the policy which insisted on shrapnel instead of high-explosive shells.

PLANS CALLED FOR PRODUCTION.

The United States 18 months after entering the war, although dozens of factories had been making munitions for the allies during the preceding years, was actually delivering virtually no ammunition at all at the front. It is almost inconceivable. If the plans had not called for any production it would have been a different matter. But they did call for production. They called for deliveries which should have been made months ago. There was simply a collapse.

The chameleon had nothing on the Ordnance Department. It had a positive genius for changing its designs. No sooner would a big plant get its equipment and tools together and begin quantity production than orders would come from Washington to hold up operations. In a day or two some officer would arrive with new drawings.

WORK WAS EXPENSIVE.

The workmen would sit in the yard and wait until the tools and machinery could be changed. It was expensive work, but the Government paid the bills.

Indeed, the changing of plans was carried on to such an extent that some factories actually spent more time readjusting their machinery than they employed in production. Others simply threw up their hands and their contracts.

Some firms that had promised complete deliveries by June were hardly beginning deliveries in September, although they were manufacturing vital parts.

Ordnance production has become a sort of picture-puzzle game, which must have been amazingly interesting to some of the experts, but which daily became more and more of a threat to American lives and American success in battle.

When it became apparent that the facts were likely to become known the lid was clamped down closer than ever. The censorship at least was in working order. But with the signing of the armistice it became clear that the facts would eventually get out.

PLANNED DEFENSE IN ADVANCE.

There is evidence to show that it was hoped by carefully prepared publications to build up a defense in advance, and thus belittle the final exposure. The publication of these articles will prevent that. Also there are men in the Capitol who are acquainted with the startling conditions which have existed, and they will resist any attempt at whitewashing.

"I am not worried now," Secretary of War Baker said, "about any possibility that may have existed regarding a shortage of shells."

"The whole ordnance program," he added, "was in progress of development and had not reached the peak of delivery. It was rapidly progressing, making marked improvement, in delivery and transportation every week."

INDEPENDENCE OF ARMENIA.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, which, with the accompanying paper, I ask may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 378), as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate, Armenia, including the six vilayets of Turkish Armenia and Cilicia, Russian Armenia, and the northern part of the Province of Azerbaijan, Persian Armenia, should be independent, and that it is the hope of the Senate that the peace conference will make arrangements for helping Armenia to establish an independent republic.

It is also the opinion of the Senate that provision should be made for the Syrians and other Christian populations of Asia Minor, and that those portions of Asia Minor where the Greeks are predominant should be placed under the control of the Government of Greece.

INDEPENDENCE OF COUNTRIES ON THE BALTIC COAST.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 379), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate, Lithuania should be separated from Russia and given independence, and that the same right should be extended to the Letts and to Esthonia. All these people should have liberty and independence and their possessions on the Baltic coast make their independence a condition of great importance for the future freedom and peace of the world.

INDIAN GRAZING LANDS IN UTAH.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 381), which was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Whereas in the counties of Duchesne and Uinta, in the State of Utah, there is a large body of Indians lands known as Indian grazing lands, which has not been allotted in severalty to the Indians of the Ute Tribe, which lands adjoin the Ashley National Forest in the State of Utah; and

Whereas said lands are valuable for grazing purposes and contain areas which are also specially adapted to agricultural use and occupation; and

Whereas said lands are not being utilized for any beneficial purpose and are excluded from the use of the white settlers in said counties; and

Whereas the said Indians for whose use said lands have ostensibly been set apart are unable to occupy or make any economic or beneficial use of the same; and

Whereas said Indians for whose use said lands have been segregated and set apart are not making an economic or adequate use of said lands, and will not in the future be able to make an economic or adequate use of said lands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the present status of the so-called Indian grazing lands in Duchesne and Uinta Counties, Utah, and what means may be taken to extinguish the Indian title to said lands and open the same to use, settlement, and occupation, and whether it is convenient and advantageous to add said lands, or any part thereof, to the Uinta National Forest.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, my colleague, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], in New York City, delivered an address to the National Association of Life Insurance Societies, on the 5th of December last, which was very learned, and which I think is a great contribution to those who are studying the problems which will arise after the war. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BY SENATOR THOMAS DECEMBER 5, 1918, TO THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PRESIDENTS OF LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETIES AT NEW YORK CITY.

"The swift and dramatic close of the great war is justly celebrated as the mightiest military achievement of the centuries. Peace has come to the afflicted nations with a suddenness they never dreamed of. We rejoice that the great conflict has ended with victory and that our appalling sacrifice of blood and treasure was not made in vain.

"Our triumph is over Imperial Germany and all that she arrogantly typified. Her conquest makes the world safe for democracy. A greater task now confronts us. We must make democracy safe for the world. This task has long been obvious, but it was visioned upon the horizon of a remote future. The mighty force of recent events has thrust it in our very faces. We shall have prevailed with the struggle for self-government only when we shall have thoroughly performed this added duty.

"We expected that ample time would be given to prepare for the larger task. But the unexpected happened. Germany broke with her first great disaster. What seemed a mighty engine of military power, strong beyond imagination, lacked the cohesive force of a lofty national morale, and crumbled into dust before the battle shock of a unified alliance.

"We were not prepared for war with Germany, but we overcame her. We are not prepared for the new contest, but we shall conquer again. Democracy's last external peril disappeared with the despotism of the Kaiser. Her remaining ones are internal. They inhere in her theories of government and thrive by her toleration. They ran riot in her dominions before the war. They raised their sinister heads during its prosecution. They are now before us and around us. America, the greatest of democracies, must safeguard its fundamental principles. Her Statue of Liberty enlightening the world is more than symbolic. It is actual. It typifies the America of the twentieth century.

"What is democracy? The term can not be defined with exactness. It can best be comprehended by the process of elimination, by asserting what it is not. Democracy is not militarism nor anarchy. It is not socialism nor lawlessness. It does not confer absolute freedom, for that is inconsistent with equality of right. It does not require a republic; for the development of its principles are strangers to many of them, while its blessings are enjoyed by the subjects of many monarchies.

"Democracy is synonymous with ordered liberty, which respects and safeguards the rights of all. Its congenial structure is republican, and Elihu Root has finally said that republican government is organized self-control. Henry Ward Beecher declared the real democratic idea to be not that every man should be on a level with every other, but that everyone shall have liberty without hindrance to be what God made him. Any condition interfering with this conception is an unhealthy one. It may be deemed essential to class interest, but it is not democratic.

"I can not in the limited time at my disposal present more than a bare outline of some of the actual and potential problems surrounding and confronting the United States, upon whose solution its welfare and integrity largely depend. Some of these are of prewar birth, some forged in the red furnace of war.

"Democracy finds its natural expansion in social, economic, and political development. From the friction thus engendered come the ills which threaten its integrity. These lines of development must now pass through a period of readjustment before they again become normal. It is in this interval that we should ascertain our condition and set our national house in order, that other nations may guide their future by the lamp of our experience.

"Perhaps the most insidious danger to republican institutions is the indifference of the citizen to his public duties. The beneficiaries of free government become indulgent and comfortable; their responsibilities grow irksome and annoying. Their vigilance relaxes in their struggle for material things. Their time is absorbed in the pursuit of gain. The diversion of their energies from the needs of government is the opportunity of privilege, and privilege undermines democracy. The ills of the body politic will continue until the people awake to a full sense of civic obligation and realize that theirs is the business of government. To bring about this condition is a fundamental factor in the public equation.

"The war leaves us the legacy of a stupendous debt. It will reach, if it does not exceed, $35,000,000,000, or twice as much as the combined debt of the allied nations, including Russia, when the war began. The annual interest upon this stupendous sum will be $1,400,000,000, nearly twice the net total of the Nation's annual prewar expenditure. This means a vastly increased rate and radius of taxation. The people must bear the burden, for Germany can not make indemnity. They will bear it willingly if economy in public administration and the application of every dollar to the public needs shall become the policy of the Government. They will not and should not be content if the gross extravagances of the past continue. In 1910 Senator Aldrich declared that ordinary efficiency in public administration would annually save the people $300,000,000. It would now save twice that sum. If the taxpayers of America will unite in demanding a radical revision of our public service, a consolidation of duplicating bureaus, and the institution of the budget system in appropriations, it will be done. If they will also rigidly supervise public expenditures, taxation can be largely reduced. If they fail to do this, our appropriations will keep increasing, for every demand made upon the Treasury is complied with when political or organized force is behind it, and everything in these days is organized except the man who pays the taxes. Moreover, the huge debts of the nations, however well their revenues are managed and applied, will always be a fruitful source of disaffection. To those possessing none of it, yet paying taxes to meet its fixed requirements, the impulse toward repudiation may ripen into an insistent clamor. Once begun, it may spread like the virus of influenza, from nation to nation and from public to private obligations. Nothing could be more disastrous to a people than the success of such a movement, which will inevitably arise, whatever our policy. It is certain to materialize if in our financial administration we do not at all times apply sound principles to taxation and exercise a wise and frugal economy in expenditures. Nothing is more difficult in a republic than this if public interest is lax or nonexistent.

"Readjustments toward normal conditions must inevitably react on war prices and wages. The first will not be disturbing, the last may prove alarmingly so. Lowering of salaries and wages, though absolutely essential to a falling market, is always opposed by the wage earner and frequently to the extremes of violence. The higher these have risen the more bitter the opposition to their diminution becomes. This inevitable situation should be promptly recognized and every effort made to prepare against it. Labor should be urged to acquaint itself with the economic laws which compel the change and with its compensation in lowered cost of living. And the change should come as gradually and as universally as possible. These precautions may be taken without difficulty, with little trouble and with less expense. Their importance is self-evident. The most prejudiced and sometimes the most ignorant of men will listen to the persuasive influence of sympathetic discussion if interposed before their resentment becomes inflamed by a sense of injustice.

"Our immigration laws have been largely molded by political and economic considerations. The same is true of those relating to naturalization. Much of our immigration has represented the best of Europe. These have been of inestimable value to the country. They have cast their lot in America for all time, sharing our burdens and responsibilities and aiding in the great task of building a new nation upon a virgin continent.

"But the demand for labor and the need for ballots have flooded our shores with a mass of humanity apparently unassimilable. Politics bars only the Asiatic from our ports. Others are herded by trans-Atlantic steamship lines and delivered to our clamoring industries, which exploit their labor and neglect their souls. Their moral, material, and educational welfare receive scant consideration. They find no companionship beyond their own ranks, form themselves into racial groups, adhere to their national customs and language, learn nothing of American life or policies. They are as strangers within our gates, despised of employers and the public, doomed to the exactions of toil without lot or part in the land of their adoption. They measure our institutions, if they think of them at all, by the limited range of their unhappy experiences. Their conceptions of freedom and of citizenship can not be higher than their contact with the boss and the paymaster. They may at times inspire our curiosity or excite our distrust, but our sympathy and comradeship not at all. They attract the notice of political machines which encourage their naturalization to obtain their votes. This stamps the right to cast them as an asset of money value. They supply a rich and inviting soil for every social and economic fungus growth which hatred or ignorance may seek to propagate. Their colonies have become national plague spots, breeding places for all the ugly disorders of the century. They are dupes of the designing and the criminal, enemies of the established order ripening for revolt or revolution. They perceive all too easily the inequalities of society, the chasm between the very rich and the very poor, the power of combined wealth and the helplessness of the laws. Envy, hatred, neglect, the disdain of the community, and a blind sense of injustice, combine to inflame their animosities and expose their passions to suggestions of the torch and the sword as the sole arbiters of social and economic injustice.

"The disruption of the central powers, followed by the establishment of popular government for their liberated peoples, will doubtless remove all restrictions upon their continued emigration. The burden of debt, coupled with unsettled economic conditions, will encourage the western movement of their population. The added stimulus of the great steamship companies, eager for their old steerage traffic, may rapidly reestablish the high tide of antewar immigration. If it is to be checked, the dam must be erected on this side of the Atlantic, and no time should be lost in its construction.

"What are the dimensions of this evil? We are informed by the last census that our foreign-born population numbered 13,000,000 in 1910, or nearly one-eighth of the whole. Of these 6,000,000 were males of the voting age. The number attending English schools was very small. Most of them are packed in the crowded centers of our population. In this mighty city of prodigious contrasts are vast numbers of them. Every nationality is represented, and their illiteracy is appalling. It has Italian colonies, Yiddish colonies, Russian colonies, Austrian colonies, Greek colonies. Your East Side is a vast mosaic of races, clannish, clinging to their native speech, strangers to our language, jealous of their own customs and disdaining ours. From Twenty-third Street south and First Avenue east there is nothing American. In that densely peopled region the English language is as lonely as the late Kaiser in Holland. Similar conditions may be found in Chicago, in Philadelphia, in Pittsburgh, in San Francisco, in nearly all the great cities. Save the struggle for existence these people have nothing in common with the native American.

"Your city typifies the general situation. It contains the germs of every social and political disorder. Part of its press are constant and competent sowers of sedition. Among these people class distinctions are magnified, and discontent and lawlessness encouraged. From such congenial soil was bred the Black Hand and the I. W. W., consecrated by their founders to pillage and murder. The red flag of anarchy is their symbol and war against the social order their shibboleth. A powder magazine unguarded, exposed to perils of accident or design, is not more dangerous to the community.

"Into the face of this sinister menace wealth flaunts the orgies of the great white way. It thus supplies the East Side with text and justification. A population, sullen with the discontent of poverty, confronted with the vulgar and ostentatious display of lavish extravagance, will not always remain quiescent. When the extremes of the Nation's social life jostle each other too harshly an explosion is inevitable. Such conditions can not endure. No government can be secure when the lives and tendencies of its people are essentially wrong.

"Bolshevism has given the world a hideous illustration of the fundamental truth that when liberty is divorced from law justice disappears. The freedom of unrestrained license is the only freedom of the mob. Under the sway of that many-headed despot crime holds high carnival. Robbery, rape, and murder are daily pastimes. The only authority is that of the strongest, and community life is transformed from a protection to a menace. It is to this chaos that international socialism would lead the world. Russian anarchy is popularly ascribed to the oppressions of the Romanoff dynasty, whose downfall shattered the foundation of the Empire. That is largely true. Yet it is a sinister fact that, excepting Lenine, nearly all the leaders of Russian bolshevism graduated from the swarming centers of New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. Trotsky, Volodarsky, Vritzky, Martoff are some of them. Their bloody program was formulated here, and here they proposed to test it when opportunity beckoned, and Russia became their victim. From that continental slaughterhouse they salute their accessories in America and urge them to the commission of similar atrocities.

"The assimilation of races, so essential to a national unity, can not be effected under conditions now prevailing. While they continue our citizenship must be heterogeneous and discordant. A polyglot people, without geographical separation, with conflicting aims and ideals, united, yet socially, morally, and economically antagonistic, can not endure in a republic. Racial classification is the precursor of racial animosities, and racial animosities imperil the national safety.

"But our trend toward class distinctions is not wholly ethnological. It proceeds as well along other lines and finds expression in trades, in agriculture, in legislation. Our Federal laws bristle with clauses recognizing and favoring them. In matters of penalty, revenue, trusts, transportation, and appropriation we frequently exclude foreigners, workmen, Government employees, fraternal organizations, and some others from punitive and burdensome enactments. We also extend them privileges not conferred upon others less potential in numbers or influence. The equal protection of the laws will, if this practice be not abandoned soon, be honored more in the breach than the observance.

"The laws are potent for the protection and welfare of the citizen only as they are uniform in their application, just in their mandates, and respected by the people. Laxity in their enforcement and indifference to their requirements have long been a conspicuous and sinister feature of our national life. This is particularly true of the criminal law. The disparity between homicides and convictions will serve to illustrate the assertion. Their proportions are as 30 to 1, and those due to labor controversies seldom reach the stage of a formal indictment. The expense of modern litigation, crowded dockets, and the law's delays may be largely responsible for the low level of public respect for statutes and constitutions; but whatever the cause the evil is a serious one. The public safety depends upon the public order; the public order rests upon the sanction and the mandate of the law; and the law is made contemptible whenever its protection is denied to the meanest citizen.

"To this condition we must plead guilty, for it is a melancholy fact that the citizen frequently is denied the equal protection of the laws, either by exposure without redress to acts of violence or through the tedious and expensive processes of legal machinery. Both mean a denial of justice, and Burke said that a government not founded on justice labored under the imputation of being no government at all.

"During the past four years Germany has met our protest against her many successive barbarities with the retort that lynchings and burnings in the South and promiscuous murder in our labor disputes were quite as shocking exhibitions of American methods in time of peace as her own atrocities in time of war. And we must concede in deep humiliation that in such things the two peoples occupy the same low level. This condition justified the President's protest to his fellow countrymen of last August:

> "That every American who takes part in the action of a mob or gives it any sort of countenance is no true son of this great democracy, but its betrayer, and does more to discredit her by that single disloyalty to her standards of law and of right than the words of her statesmen or the sacrifices of her heroic boys in the trenches can do to make suffering peoples believe her to be their savior. * * * I can never accept any man as a champion of liberty either for ourselves or for the world who does not reverence and obey the laws of our own beloved land, whose laws we have ourselves made. He has adopted the standards of the enemies of his country, whom he affects to despise.

"Recent events show that the President's lofty rebuke has not been wholly effective, for in some communities mob murders have not ceased. Did they accomplish the end which is said to justify them, they would still be horrible. But the only effect is to prompt their repetition. And they are a hideous reproach upon Anglo-Saxon civilization.

"If our organic act means anything, every citizen is free to work according to his own desire. He should be subject only to the limitations of the law. To interfere with this right or permit others to do so with impunity is to undermine the foundations of our political structure. A law which does not throw the shield of its protection around him is worse than useless. It is a wanton delusion. On the other hand, ample punishment for the commission of crimes is provided and safeguards as well for the shielding of the innocent. All that is needed is their vigorous enforcement. If they are not applied, the fault is with the community much more than with the criminal. Let no man, therefore, justify his contempt for the law by pleading its nonenforcement. For that he is in part responsible.

"With all due allowance for considerations peculiarly applicable to the negro, he is entitled to the guardianship of the white man. His career has been a bitter one. He has been sinned against far more than sinning. He did not intrude himself upon us. He was brought here as a prisoner and slave. He earned his freedom 50 years ago by his devotion to his master's family in the dark period of our Civil War. He has since struggled upward against fearful odds. The great war gave him the opportunity to prove his devotion to his country, and well has he improved it. He has proved his loyalty to the flag under whose folds he has not always found protection. His blood, with ours, has consecrated the vast French battle ground from Chateau-Thierry to Sedan, and the armistice found him in the very vanguard of the western front. Surely such a record inspires our admiration, as it should command our gratitude. Who will deny that the negro has earned his right to the equal protection of his country's laws?

"Ours is a land of waste, and waste is the enemy of thrift. Some one has said that with our resources the French would have saved enough since the century began to pay her own and Britain's war expenses. The war has brought us the wisdom and the simplicity of thrift. We should make it a national virtue. It is the best cure for discontent, and grows with its practice. A thrifty man need make no search for something to relieve his needs. He has it. It is a fact of the highest significance that modern socialism discourages thrift. It is the foe of disorder; a virtue that becomes hostage to fortune. Hunger is stranger to it, and hunger never breeds reforms. Hunger breeds riot and bloodshed. The supernal wisdom of Jesus is clearly revealed to man in the Lord's Prayer, whose first supplication is, 'Give us this day our daily bread.'

"In America hunger is a social crime. Out of our abundance we can feed other continents. The fault lies in distribution. Food decays for lack of consumption in one section, while people starve for want of it in another. If private control of transportation can not solve the vital problem of its distribution public control must. If our railroads are inadequate, we must construct more. If rates are prohibitive they must be lowered. Democracy requires food, and part of her mission is to secure it.

"Corporate mismanagement and consolidations, huge issues of fictitious capital, corners in foodstuffs, manipulation of stock markets, fortunes realized overnight through financial jugglery, preponderant control of money and credits disfigured the commercial history of the two decades preceding our declaration of war. They constitute a sordid and humiliating chapter of greed and financial profligacy, and amply justify the wave of public disapproval, culminating in political revolt and codes of primitive legislation. Congressional and bureau investigations have disclosed sorry spectacles of mismanagement and of trusts betrayed by men of great wealth and commanding influence for their personal and financial aggrandizement. Public confidence in the integrity and patriotism of their class has been seriously impaired.

"These practices can not be too seriously criticized. They have inspired as they have justified every extreme of agitation. They have been condemned alike by radical and conservative. It is not too much to say that they have done more to inflame public sentiment, breed anarchy, and stir up socialist propaganda than any single influence of the century. It is the anarchy of capital. It is bolshevism in high life. Such operations can not be resumed if we hope to preserve free government in America. Otherwise than in the fortunate development of mines, great wealth may be suddenly acquired only through sinuous and criminal manipulation. Its frequent occurrence demoralizes the people. It begets discontent and compels imitation. The effort to get rich quick becomes infectious. Men look with disdain upon the slow but legitimate processes of accumulation and drift from plodding industry to the stock ticker and the exchanges. And as the vast majority of the seekers for sudden wealth are predoomed to failure they will sooner or later join the ever-increasing army of the discontented and reproach the social order for their misfortunes.

"The well-to-do element of the country is its most influential class. It occupies the great domain of leadership and constructive development. It can ill afford to weaken the social and economic structure. It can not commit or countenance methods which breed discontent and unsettle confidence. It is the exponent, the guardian, and the director of material and financial integrity. Its position in the whole domain of the national activities is commanding. What it does or abstains from doing is therefore of great concern to the public and of prime importance to itself. When confidence in its honest or public spirit is impaired or overthrown the hour of upheaval will come. I therefore affirm that the suppression of the financial malversations so prevalent during the past quarter century is an insistent and overshadowing duty. Bolshevism and its kindred evils are their legitimate offspring. They supply the soap-box orator with his best ammunition and silence the protests of those who would eliminate him. You have purged life insurance of its financial sins. The bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and masters of traffic must profit by your example if indeed they have not already done so.

"Finally, the chasm between labor and capital must be spanned. This can not be done by force, by class resentments, nor by recrimination. It is a most serious problem, as it was before the war. Each of these great forces must understand the other's viewpoint. Both must realize that they are complements and coworkers of progress. Without the one the other is moribund. Neither can be discarded from the economies of trade and industry. Cooperation between them is indispensable to the public and private well-being. They must become partners in the largest sense, each exercising its legitimate functions for a common purpose. To assert this is a simple performance; to bring it about is a task for Titans. But it must be done.

"I have sketched in outline some of the difficulties with which the return of peace confronts us. The perspective is somber but not at all discouraging. Every generation has its tasks, and if ours is unduly burdensome its performance will place posterity under a larger obligation. Let us, therefore, one and all, clear the situation and strive to make our beloved country all that its ideals require. We must institute and enforce a rigid economy in public administration. We must unify our citizenship. We must have a common language with which all men and women must be made familiar. We must bring our institutions and traditions home to the understanding of everyone. We must extend the hand of sympathy and encouragement to every alien in the land, give him a stake in the country's affairs, and imbue him with the spirit of America. We must discourage the community life of the foreigner by teaching him the need for assimilation. We must require him to become naturalized within a fixed time after his arrival or return whence he came. We must make him learn the English tongue and become reasonably familiar with the requirements of citizenship as a candidate of naturalization. The splendid type of soldier which these people have contributed to the war is a happy augury of what their development will be when our citizenship realizes and performs its full duty toward them. We must suppress all associations devoted to the commission of crime and the advocacy of disorder. We must radically change our immigration laws. We must have no ensign but the Stars and Stripes. We can have no companionship with the red flag of anarchy and revolution. We must assert and enforce the equal protecton of the laws, do away with the mob, and gibbet the lyncher. We must teach the great truth that organized and ordered society is essential to man's existence and that protection of life and property is the basis of all governments worthy of the name. We must demonstrate that the strict observance of law is necessary alike to the happiness of nations and the security of communities. We must make treason odious. We must harmonize the discordant factions of industry and commerce. We must, if need be, forget party ties in the stress of tremendous obligation. We may each and all, faithful to our traditions and reverencing our ideals, struggle as Democrats and Republicans for the supremacy of our convictions, but we must remember that we are, above all, Americans, whose first and final duty is to perpetuate the welfare and shape the destiny of the great Republic. The ark of democracy's covenant was committed to Anglo-Saxon keeping long ago. Our fathers have proven worthy of the trust; we, too, must keep the faith. Henceforth the United States shall be a great training ground for the growth and development of a stalwart and genuine democracy."

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 12863, commonly known as the revenue bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be taken up for the purpose of disposing of committee amendments first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not object, provided it be understood that amendments that are objected to may go over for the present.

Mr. SIMMONS. That has always been the practice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suppose it has been the practice; but I should like to have it understood by unanimous consent, since we are taking up the bill without reading.

Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me just a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The unfinished business is here on a motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute I proposed was adopted. I realize the importance, I think, of that bill and the much greater importance of the revenue bill, and as far as I am personally concerned I have not any desire to interfere with the revenue bill. I think it ought to have first place. At the same time I should like to have the motion to reconsider disposed of, but I am not willing that it shall be disposed of when there is less than a quorum here, and I do not want to have it disposed of at any time when I may not be here, because I shall have something to say upon the subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator through?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12863, commonly known as the revenue bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smoot
Bankhead	Kellogg	Page	Spencer
Borah	Kendrick	Penrose	Sterling
Calder	Kenyon	Poindexter	Sutherland
Chamberlain	King	Pollock	Swanson
Culberson	Kirby	Pomerene	Thomas
Curtis	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed	Trammell
France	Lodge	Robinson	Underwood
Gay	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gronna	McKellar	Shafroth	Walsh
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Hardwick	Mulkey	Simmons	Weeks
Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Md.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smith, S. C.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I should also like to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is detained from the Senate by illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds with his remarks, if I do not interrupt him too much, I should like to ask him what steps he has taken to have more copies of the bill printed, as well as the report of the committee? Besides, men all over the country want copies of the bill, and the supply is practically exhausted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that owing to the great size of the bill, comprising 278 pages, by Senate resolution we have been unable up to this time to get more than about 5,000 copies printed. I was contemplating introducing another Senate resolution for the printing of 5,000 more copies. If the Senator desires he may introduce such a resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. I am not particular about that, if the Senator wants me to do so. I should like to have included also copies of the report of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done in a separate resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. We will prepare such a resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. At the request of the chairman of the committee I will offer such a resolution, and I hope the Senator will offer a similar resolution for the printing of the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send the resolution to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The resolution (S. Res. 380) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 310, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, entitled "Revenue bill of 1918," for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will not prepare a concurrent resolution for the printing of 15,000 copies of the bill with the report? The demand from the House, I am told, is such that it has exhausted the 5,000 copies which have already been printed, with the Senate receiving only a very few copies of that number. I am informed that there is already a demand for about 10,000 copies of the report. That can not be supplied by a simple Senate resolution. I ask the Senator if he will not prepare a concurrent resolution providing that 15,000 additional copies shall be printed with the reports that have been made upon the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I would suggest, as the chairman of the committee is overwhelmed, as we all know, with his task, that the Senator from Utah prepare the resolution and relieve the chairman to that extent.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be very glad to prepare it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say that I conferred with Senators this morning about the preparation and introduction of a concurrent resolution for that purpose. If the Senator from Utah will be kind enough to prepare it and introduce it, I will agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will do so in a very little while.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to suggest in this connection that we ought to have 25,000 copies provided by the resolution the Senator from Utah is going to introduce.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct. The demand for copies of the bill is very heavy.

Mr. PENROSE. Every cashier of every bank in the country and every business man has to have a copy of the biill.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I suggested 15,000 copies was because we have already ordered by the Senate 10,000 copies, and that would make 25,000 copies. I base my statement for that number upon the fact that we had 25,000 copies of the bill of 1917 printed and they were not all distributed, and I thought perhaps 25,000 copies would be sufficient.

Mr. PENROSE. The taxes were very much lighter in the act of 1917. These taxes, in some cases satisfactory, are staggering, and the bill will be read much more carefully than any preceding act of Congress on internal-revenue legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will make the number in the resolution, then, 25,000.

Mr. PENROSE. As has been suggested by one of my colleagues near me, the taxpayer will probably wear out two or three copies before he understands it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether provision has been made for printing the views of the minority with the rest of the report?

Mr. SMOOT. I intend in the joint resolution to provide that the report of the majority, with the views of the minority, together with other views which may be offered, shall be printed in connection with the report.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that the resolution which was agreed to provided for the printing of 10,000 copies of the report, together with 10,000 extra copies, and I want to know whether the report as it will be printed under that resolution will contain the views of the minority.

Mr. SMOOT. I was only speaking of the resolution I intend to offer. It will provide for the printing of 25,000 copies of the bill and also for printing the same number of copies of each of the reports that has been made upon the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is that all to be in one document, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will say that the concurrent resolution has not yet been offered to the Senate, but I have promised the Senator from North Carolina that I would prepare the resolution and offer it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to suggest that it would probably do better, for the purposes of a wide circulation, whatever purpose that may be, that it should be confined in the same resolution to the report and the bill, and let it go as one document; that instead of dividing it into four, five, or six parts, it should all be in one document. Then I think there would be no objection to the publication of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator from Utah that the bill could easily be printed in the style of the report, that it would take a good deal less paper, and that it would be more convenient to have the majority report and the views of the minority and the bill all in one document. It seems to me everyone who will have the bill will want to see the report, and in that way it would be a saving of paper, and it seems to me it would facilitate the examination of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Twenty-five thousand copies will be printed in the form the Senator indicates, as provided in the resolution passed a few days ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There was some confusion in the Senate. I understood that the resolution provided for printing 10,000 copies of the bill and the report. If that is true and that has passed, then we will have a provision for the printing of 10,000 copies of the report without there being attached to the report the views of the minority. I wish information from the Chair about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 380), as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 310, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, entitled "Revenue bill of 1918," for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then there has been no provision up to the present time for the printing of the report. I suggest to the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Utah, as has already been suggested by the Senator from Arizona, that in the preparation of the document the report and the views of the minority be printed as a single document.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that the Senator from Utah prepare it, and we will then see how it reads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has indicated to me a desire to present some matter to the Senate, which he says will take him probably 20 or 25 minutes. I will yield to him for that length of time, as I am just a little weary now, and will then resume.

WOODEN-SHIP CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from North Carolina for yielding. I did not want to interrupt the consideration of the pending bill, but since it suits his convenience for me to present this matter now, I will attempt to do so very briefly.

We have heard a good deal of discussion with regard to the construction of wooden ships, and there has been evidently, as it seems to me, a pronounced propaganda intended to discredit wooden ships very largely. There is also an indication that there have been more contracts let for the construction of wooden ships than the Shipping Board now feels it would be wise to carry out, and they are considering the cancellation of some of the contracts for wooden ships. I am not urging that any new contracts for wooden ships should be made by the Shipping Board. It is probable that the better type of ship is the steel ship and a larger ship than has been heretofore contemplated, and I am not proposing to interfere with that program; but I do insist that the wooden ships which have been constructed and the wooden ships which may be constructed are neither unseaworthy nor valueless, and I do insist that the shipyards of the country and the industry should not be abandoned or stifled by way of resorting to other methods of construction or by reason of this effort to discredit the wooden ship, and that if the Shipping Board itself concludes to build hereafter different forms or types of ship and confines its operation largely to steel, still there is work to do for the wooden-ship yards. For instance, we need tugs. I think experts generally will agree that the wooden tug is quite as standard and quite as valuable a boat as the steel tug, and in some instances it is superior to the steel tug. There is also needed wooden construction for pontoons or for building dry docks or for building smaller craft, and I do not want the impression to go out that the wooden-ship yards are to be wholly abandoned in this country and that that industry is to go to pieces. I have some views on that matter which I think it timely to suggest now. I shall be as brief about it as possible.

THE WOODEN SHIPS.

The well-known naval architect and marine engineer of New York, Mr. Theodore E. Ferris, says:

> Ship property probably has more critics and less originality in its production than any other commercial constructive industry.

He gives reasons.

Some years ago the wooden ship was to a large extent discarded, superseded by steel vessels.

Then arose antagonisms to the wooden ships largely founded on prejudice, and there have been reasons operating against any correction of this prejudice. A great deal of misinformation has been added. There was strong opposition to the building of any wooden ships when the United States Shipping Board was hurrying to construct vessels which might serve the country in the hour of its greatest need. When, finally, it was announced that the board would build some wooden ships there was a storm of protest and dreadful predictions of failure filled the newspapers. It was in vain called to mind that for more than 2,000 years the wooden ship had sailed the seas, and the commerce of nations since the days of Tyre had largely depended upon wooden ships. To be sure, the large, modern passenger or cargo carrier built of steel is superior to the wooden vessel of approaching dimensions. But that the wooden vessel of smaller size, quick construction, whether sailer or steam, is a most useful and valuable vessel, standard in every way, there can be no possible doubt. Mr. Ferris designed a 3,500-ton wooden steam vessel and contracts were let to build them by the Emergency Fleet Corporation formed by the Shipping Board. There were some of the Hough type and some of the Dougherty type; in all 730 contracted for. They were laid down for emergency ships for oversea service and otherwise for general, all-around cargo business.

There have been delivered up to the 20th of November 98 of these wooden steamers completed. Of these, 76 have already carried cargoes or have sailed in ballast for loading ports. The others are being made ready for service; 367, including the 98 already referred to, have been launched. In addition to these 367, work has commenced on 193, and they are in partial frame or better. Contracts have been let, but work has not started, on 171. The Shipping Board has actually canceled 48 of these contracts and has authorized the cancellation of 100 more.

This has been done because it has been found that the board will have more of those ships than it can economically utilize, particularly when it takes into consideration the 400 steel ships built on the Great Lakes of about the same size and capacity.

No doubt, too, the board is influenced by the propaganda against wooden ships and the many false reports put in circulation concerning them, thus influencing the public mind to conclude that they are unseaworthy and almost worthless.

Some of the wildest, most absurd rumors have been put in circulation about them that could be conceived.

I have a complete list before me showing the record of each one of these ships which has been delivered.

The first one, North Bend, built by Kruse & Banks, of Coos Bay, Oreg., was immediately placed in the trade between the Pacific coast and the Hawaiian Islands, carrying general cargoes outward and sugar inward, first sailing from San Francisco to Honolulu June 3 last with coal. She sailed September 17 from San Francisco for New York with a general cargo, and from New York with general cargo for Cristobal November 2, arriving November 13.

The next one, Biloxi, built by Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg., sailed the day she was delivered from Portland with lumber for San Francisco. Since then she has been operating between San Francisco and Honolulu until October 22, when she sailed for Chile, presumably to bring nitrates to Atlantic or Gulf ports.

These ships have been bringing coal on the Atlantic coast, nitrates from Chile, general cargoes on the Pacific coast to and from ports on the Pacific to ports on the Atlantic, lumber, sulphur, and other cargoes from the Gulf, coastwise, and, so far as I can learn, their performance is looked on with favor. Some of these ships have gone to dry dock for caulking, and one or two with rudder or engine trouble, but there has been no more of this than might be expected, no matter what the type of construction. So far as losses, beaching, and wrecking are concerned the facts are there have been just three total losses, to wit, the steamer Coos Bay, built by Kruse & Banks, foundered on September 11, 1918, during heavy weather, while bound from San Francisco to the west coast of South America in ballast; the steamer Black Ford, built by Gray's Harbor Motorship Co., was abandoned at sea during the same heavy weather of September 11 and drifted ashore on the west coast of Mexico on September 25. She was bound in ballast from San Francisco to the west coast of South America.

The steamer Dumaru, built by Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg., while bound from the Pacific coast to the Philippines, was, in the vicinity of the island of Guam, struck by lightning on October 16, her cargo of oil exploded, and she was burned. This is the evidence of "unseaworthiness"—three losses, two from storm and one from lightning, since last June.

I think we should be governed by the facts. What we want is the truth. No matter whether that be favorable or unfavorable, good or bad, the truth should be known. We are in a position to know the facts because these ships have been in actual operation. They have actually been carrying dry and perishable cargoes. They have been operating successfully. Whether they have been operating economically and make a good business showing I have not complete data to prove. That can be supplied undoubtedly by the Shipping Board.

It has been announced that the board is willing to sell some of these ships because they are not required for any particular service. Can that be the reason for denunciation of them and the studied effort to discredit them? Be that as it may, a responsible party, an experienced ship operator, tells me that he is ready to buy a few of them at $725,000 each.

They are not adapted to trans-Atlantic service, where it is necessary to bunker for the round trip. The coal they would be obliged to carry would take up too much space and reduce too much the space for cargo. They are not of excessive draft. They weigh no more, equipped, than the steel ships which carry water ballast. They perform equal to the steel ships under like conditions. They are intended to operate overseas and to the West Indies, carrying all sorts of commodities, dead-weight cargo, such as sugar, cement, nitrates, coal; and being of the well-deck type, deck loads can be carried, such as barreled goods, structural steel, cars, boilers, machinery, lumber, and wood in the wells.

The well-deck or three-island type of ship, which these are, has been accepted by the merchant marine of the world as the all around most useful cargo ships, as Mr. Ferris claims. The Norwegians, who rank among the most expert ship operators, have adopted them almost universally. This is largely true of British owners.

Of course, vessels may be wanted for specific trades for which these would not be suitable.

For instance, if it is desired to carry bulk cargoes of large cubic and small dead-weight such as package freight, like cotton, with no deck load, you would want a different kind of ship. The cubic ship would be best for that service.

If it is desired to make full cubic ships out of these vessels, that could be accomplished at any time by closing in the wells.

They can be made complete two-deck vessels by closing in the forward well.

The cargo capacity could be increased by placing the machinery aft, instead of amidships, but this would not be advisable when the service is to be ocean service. Mr. Ferris favors a larger ship of this type. It is conceivable that heavy engines, racing in a rough sea, might shake, strain, loosen up the parts, and tend to rack a big ship of wooden construction. Certainly, however, wooden construction up to, say, 350 feet keel has been thoroughly demonstrated to have real merit and unquestioned value and is approved by all of the maritime nations of the world.

What I complain of is the effort to stifle or destroy an important industry in this country when there is no reason or sense in such a course.

Shall every wooden-ship yard of the country be put out of business because of this absurd and false propaganda, to the effect that the wooden ship is a failure and no more wooden construction should be allowed? We have the material and now the trained workmen, the well-equipped yards. Are these to be utilized, an extensive and highly important industry maintained, or, by reason of prejudice, ignorance, or misrepresentations, these resources, facilities, and opportunities must be wasted and abandoned?

Any other nation with the slightest appreciation of what the use of the sea means would rejoice and take full advantage of such material and facilities. Surely we will not be so blind or prodigal as to discard them. Foreign countries will keep our wooden yards busy if we will permit them to do so. Shall we play the dog in the manger, reject wooden construction, and then say our builders shall not construct for foreign account? In my judgment, we should build wooden tonnage for Americans and for foreign account, and remove all unnecessary war restrictions upon operation. The sooner this policy is adopted the better.

Mr. President, I have submitted some of the criticisms which have come to me, which have been reported in the newspapers, and which have been founded upon rumors largely to Mr. Ferris, the well-known expert and naval architect of New York, who designed the 3,500-ton Ferris type of wooden ship which was adopted by the Shipping Board. I have his reply to some of those rumors and reports which I formulated and submitted to him, which I desire to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I submit his letter of September 27 and also his letter of December 4.

I have also a statement from the Shipping Board, entitled "Performance of the 98 wooden steamships delivered to the Emergency Fleet Corporation up to November 21, 1918." I should like to have that also inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator, and permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, September 27, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: Your interesting letter of the 14th instant was duly received, and I have not replied before this date owing to absence.

The criticism set forth by the shipbuilder and operator that has called on you, and these criticisms as you have frankly stated them to me are indeed somewhat sweeping.

I do not know if you are aware that ship property probably has more critics and the least originality in its production than any other commercial constructive industry, this because of the diversities of the trades in which the ships are employed, difference in commodities carried, and methods of loading and discharging not at all common to the various commodities transported. That is, the cargo ship that comes nearest being common to all trades is what is known as the well-deck, or three-island, type of ship. While in the line business, the ships are more or less of a specific type and character for the service in which they are to be engaged. Further, great pride usually connected with the design and building of ships tends in the main to cultivate criticism and jealousy. Also we find that most everybody that has to do with ships feels they know all about them, both as to design, construction, and operation, and proper types for specific trades, whereas the facts are, as the past has shown, the worst failures are where the owner and operator thought he knew the design and construction and dictated it; in other words, was the homemade naval architect. The results with the ships thus produced has proven that little knowledge was dangerous.

For the past 15 years in my work in designing and building of merchant vessels it is conceded I have had more experience than any other one person in learning the requirements and coping with the steamship operators, and the facts are I have yet to experience a failure with a merchant vessel. There is ample record of the ships turned out at my hands, both as to number of ships and types.

To point out how opinions will differ as to what is proper and correct in a ship for a specific trade: For some seven years past a large steamship interest with subsidiary operating companies, each one managed separately by its president, I have endeavored, without success, to get them to agree on one standard cargo ship that would in their opinion meet the requirements of all. Up to the present time this is a failure and seems to be impossible. Two of the subsidiary companies handle bulk freight carried under decks. The other two subsidiary companies carry dead-weight cargoes and deck loads and are more or less in the line of tramping business.

Now, as to the wooden ship, I do not know if you fully appreciate—and which is probably because of the wooden ship having been discarded; that is, practically superseded by steel vessels some years ago—the trouble in maintenance of the wooden ship experienced by some of the old school of operators. To bring the wood ship back now and have it looked upon with favor is a difficult matter. We all know how difficult it was to get owners to believe in the iron ships when they first came into existence, and this we are now in a way repeating with the wood ships. There exists to an extent an antagonism against the wood ship which to a great degree is prejudice and a great deal is assumed without fact. For instance, a wood ship goes into dry dock and the critics just seem to feel free to say it was because she is leaking or had some structural weakness that caused her to leak, or other similar defect made up to nourish assumptions already founded on false premises and their expectations of what the wood ship was going to be.

It has plainly come to my realization—perhaps more so on account of being unaccustomed to it—that in a national matter where public money is being spent there seemingly is great criticism. Everyone would have done different, has different ideas, suggestions, and results than the fellow who was called upon to do it. No matter how faithfully the work had been done, he would be wrong in the eyes of these people. It seems to me, and in this I am sure you will concur—that you should know the real facts about these wooden ships. Never mind whether the facts indicate good or bad, the actual truth is what I am sure you want. Opinions and criticisms are numerous and in the same category as offered advice, which, according to the old saying, the latter usually has a bad odor. These opinions have no place in the premises; actual facts and the truth is the only matter to be considered with the proving up of these ships in actual operation, whether or not they will carry dry and perishable cargo, operate economically, and show themselves to be a good commercial proposition.

Section 1 of your letter states: "That there are five wooden ships, Ferris type, completed and started out for business. They are now somewhere in dry docks between Beaumont and Boston. Each one of them proves a practical failure."

The facts are, in accordance with information I have, there are to date, or, rather, as I understand it September 15, 353 ships, including requisitioned ships completed, a total of about 2,110,000 dead-weight tons. Of these 353 ships 41 are of wooden construction, and out of the 41 wooden ships I should say, approximately, 30 of them are of the "Ferris" type. Of this number some 15 or 20 are from Atlantic coast and Gulf yards and are now in service or practically ready to start on a voyage, certain ones having already made complete voyages. There have been to date, so far as I know, none of these ships pronounced as "practical failures." Quite to the contrary, their performance is looked upon with more or less favor, these about the facts and the above-quoted statement is quite untrue.

Section 2 of your letter states: "They leak so badly they have been obliged to put in dry docks and were found to have from 2 to 10 feet of water in them."

It is my understanding that each and every ship completed at the finishing yard was ordered to be dry-docked, to be given the once over, and see that they were all right before going to sea. In fact, this procedure is not uncommon in any and all vessels. There are exceptions, however, in the case of steel ships, where they are finished and go to sea without a docking before proceeding to sea.

In some cases, in fact I might say a number of cases, as I understand the situation, several of the ships being the first built and going through the pioneer work of the first building, have when on the dry dock had some work done on them; more fastening or original fastening put in around stern. These ships, as you know, are single screw, and when racing in a seaway the fastening around the stern must be of a most secure nature.

The keels of practically all these ships were laid purposely with a sag of about 6 inches. While I do not know the details, I hear that one of the ships when docked was laid on straight keel blocks, which, of course, straightened her out and caused her to leak. There has been some few cases where the ships leak some. This was due only to calking and not from any other cause except the one above mentioned. As to any of the ships having 10 feet of water in them, I believe this is absolutely untrue. Anyone making such a statement, I think, ought to be called upon to produce the facts.

Section 3 of your letter states: "That they are excessively heavy and of excessive draft. The timbers are too large and too numerous in them, and the material in them has not been properly distributed, both as to the wood and the steel."

The facts are that none of these ships are of excessive draft over what they were originally intended to be. Quite to the contrary, from information I have, they carry in excess of the intended dead weight about 200 tons and they trim properly under light conditions. That is, they draw a sufficient amount of water aft that propeller wheel is properly immersed, so as to perform at sea without ballast. Would explain right here that a wood ship has no means for water ballast; that is, double bottom similar to steel vessels, to put them down when light. It is obvious, therefore, that a wood ship's increased weight—that is, weight of the equipped ship over that of a steel ship—about makes up the weight of water ballast in a steel ship. The wood ship, if of proper model and trim, will perform equal to the steel ship under light condition—the steel ship with water ballast and the wood ship with no ballast—provided the machinery is placed amidships in the latter.

I can appreciate that to anyone looking at these ships under light conditions they may appear to be of excessive draft. But anyone who is not from the Lakes and has actually had experience in operating ships in ocean service knows or should know fully this condition.

As to the timbers in this ship being too large and too numerous and the material not properly distributed, the facts are the instructions in designing these vessels were that they were to perform in ocean service. Please understand this statement takes no account as to whether the ships are large enough for overseas service. Further, received instructions that they were to receive the highest class of the American Bureau of Shipping. The Classification Society is in the main responsible for the size of timbers, number and distribution of material. It is my judgment, however, and it always has been, that if these ships are going to operate overseas and some of them, say, to the West Indies carrying all sorts of commodities, I mean dead-weight cargo, such as sugar, cement, etc., that their construction is not too heavy especially in the pioneer wood-ship building, where something has to be allowed in this respect to offset some inferior workmanship, fastening, etc., and especially in cases where the ship is built of soft wood; that is, we class yellow pine as soft wood.

It is true considerable timber could be cut out in the way of shelf logs were it possible to obtain knees in place of them. If these ships were for moderate coastwise service only and for package-freight service, such as on the Great Lakes, their scantlings could probably be reduced to some extent, and might to a moderate degree in the present situation when the builders become more skilled in the fitting and fastening of timbers. For anyone only acquainted with wood-ship building on the Lakes, where oak is universally used, to them no doubt the scantlings of yellow pine appear too large and numerous.

Section 4 of your letter states: "That comparatively slight changes in design would give a ship at a saving of 20 per cent in material, at a saving of that much in the cost, 20 per cent of the cost, at an increase of cargo capacity of something like 25 per cent."

I can not imagine how a slight change in the design can possibly effect a 20 per cent saving in material unless the classification societies requirements for scantlings was abandoned or unless a different grade of timber was used; for instance, oak instead of soft wood or yellow pine. In this type of construction little can be done in reducing scantlings and still meet the requirements of the classification societies. It is a fact, however, that a considerably larger ship could be built with no great material increase in scantlings. If a type of construction was adopted, such as diagonal wood strapping, the majority of the yards building these ships could not have done the work.

As to increased cargo capacity, this is simply a matter of type. To explain, if the machinery was placed in the stern of these ships similar to Lake practice, the after well closed in there would be gain in cubic capacity by eliminating the shaft tunnel and using part of the after-peak tank for auxiliaries and a further gain due to closing the after well. This would result in increased draft of the ships under free-board regulations and in return increased dead weight. The cubic capacity could be further increased by closing in the forward well and making them complete two-deck vessels. The present ships were not laid down without due consideration of the above and without due consideration of the losses against the gains. Further, the machinery could be retained amidships and the wells closed in and thus increased cubic and dead-weight capacity would be gained.

Now, as for a wood ship with machinery placed aft for ocean service—that is, a coal burner, which she must be, because it is not possible to carry fuel oil in wood hulls without enormous expense in providing metal tanks. Such a ship, due to weight of machinery and coal bunkers in the stern, I claimed from the start would not perform satisfactorily in ocean service, and have no reason to retract from this. The strains on the ship are too enormous; due to bunkers burning out with no ballast tanks to pump up, trim can not be maintained, and performance is decidedly unsatisfactory.

The flush-deck vessel for general cargo service on the Lakes is looked upon with favor, but for service to the West Indies, and, in fact, overseas, the well-deck type of ship has stood up against them all, having the ability to carry all kinds of cargo up to density of 60 cubic feet per ton, and in addition has sufficient stability to take care of a deck load. Lake operators know little or nothing about deck loads, which have become more and more permanent in our American cargo ships for service to the West Indies, etc. Barreled goods, structural steel, cars, boilers, machinery, and such commodities, including lumber and wood, are carried in wells of these ships as deck loads, which the flush-deck ship can not get away with.

Section 5 of your letter states: "Particularly the heavy keelsons running parallel on both sides of the main keel and extending some 3 feet up in the ship would necessarily interfere greatly with the discharge of cargo and are considered as being unnecessary."

It is true these girder keelsons are of some slight obstruction, but a statement that they are some 3 feet up in the ship is absolutely untrue. The fact is they extend up in the ship 16 inches and are put there for strength.

Further referring to section 5: "All the heavy timbers he considers are much too large." "He does not believe the ships will be of material value as a part of our mercantile marine. The machinery and furnishings are superb. The hull is of a design which builders discarded in 1882, but in less than a week the design could be altered so as to effect the advantages and economies mentioned."

I have made mention in the foregoing regarding the heavy timbers, and as for the ships being no material value in our mercantile marine, this can only be answered as time goes on. Their operation will have to prove this. If they show they can carry dry and perishable cargo and operate economically, then if they are not of any value it is because of two things, bad management in operation or units too small to be profitable. As to the design being discarded in 1882, do not know just what is meant by this; if it is the type of ship, would state that it has never been discarded. The well deck, or Three Island type of ship, which these ships are, have been accepted by the merchant marine of the world as the all around most useful cargo ship. The Norwegians, who rank among the keenest of ship operators in the world, have adopted them almost universal. Except as to some modifications, this also applies to English owners, who in some cases adopted long poops or quarter-decks, and in all cases the machinery is placed amidships. While it is true alterations could be made to the design, but as it affects materials ordered and the whole program of construction, vast time in delay and confusion can not other than but occur.

Permit me to make it clear that when these ships were laid down the distinct understanding was that they would be emergency ships for overseas service, and otherwise for general all-around cargo business. If it is now contemplated that the vessels as a whole or certain ones of them be employed in specific trades, for instance, the carrying of bulk cargoes of large cubic and small dead weight, such as package freight coastwise, cotton, etc.—no deck loads—their type is not especially adapted to this sort of business. For this service what is known as a cubic ship is best. The criticisms that have been made as to the capacity of these vessels can not be in common sense unless the party has distinctly in mind the employment of the ships in a specific service of this character.

Your reference that "since these five ships are in the water and actual experience with them has taught something, do you not think it would be well to look one of them over some time soon and consider the design further and any possible changes"? Beg to say I have followed the wooden ships as well as the steel ships because of my great interest and strenuous efforts in behalf of the Government. Of course, having no official connection, it is not possible to know a great deal in detail. On about September 3 I went over the wood ship Alvada while she was here in New York and am inclosing you copy of letter written Mr. James O. Heyworth, manager Division of Wood Ship Construction, at that time as a result of my inspection of this ship.

I think you should have any and all information that might be of interest or bears on the facts. However, may I ask that you kindly treat the letter as confidential? I have no interest in the whole matter except honest work and dealings in my profession at my hands, realizing years ago that no other can be lasting.

In the case of the Alcada it is interesting to know that while I was around the dock previous to going aboard there were reports circulating that she had 2 feet of water in her. I mention this to point out what I referred to in the first part of this letter. The fact is, as I verified it, the ship had not been leaking. She did go to dry dock, however, to take her rudder off and fit on it a reinforcing strap, but for no work on account of leaking.

In connection with my reference to the performance of these wooden ships, it is my understanding that 24 of them have been assigned for a voyage to Chile to bring back nitrate and about 15 out of the 24 are of the standard "Ferris" type. A cargo of nitrate will be an excellent test, provided the ships get in a good stress of weather on the return voyage. When these ships arrive at the Atlantic ports we will then know how they can stand up to their work.

I understand from recent reports that one of the Hough type of ships has foundered at sea off the Pacific coast. This is the ship of straight timber construction that was so much agitated in the early part of the wood-ship program. I am inclosing certain letters which dealt with that class of ship at that time, which perhaps you would be interested to note.

In closing, would say that it is my view, because of the experience gained in wood-ship construction, if the building of wood vessels is to be continued, a larger ship should be adopted. In the main, I believe it would be unwise to entertain any alterations to the present 3,500-ton wooden ships, for no specific gain can be made unless classification is waived or some of the ships are wanted for specific bulk freight trade, as I have referred to. In fact, if it is desired to make full cubic ships out of them, this could be accomplished at any future time by closing in the wells.

Respectfully, yours,

THEO. E. FERRIS.

NEW YORK, December 4, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Esq.,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United State Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I regret the delay in replying to your favor of the 29th ultimo, which was due to my absence. Have received in this morning's mail copy of your statement on the wooden ship, which I think is exceedingly good, and it was thoughtful of you to send copy of same to me.

You refer to report you have from the board which shows rumors that "the ships are failures; they leak, have engine trouble, rudders must be replaced with steel or iron; a lot of them beached and others in dry dock, etc., etc.," and you mention that such rumors are basely false. They are not only false but certainly harmful in a national matter, and those who will indulge in them are not truthful, have little interest in actual facts, and bent on circulating criticism. I do not suppose you could ever get any steel-ship builder to see any good whatever in wooden ships.

You ask for permission to use, if you discuss the matter in the Senate, my letter of September 27. I have no objections to this at all, except, of course, the confidential portions where same might possibly involve some other persons, and naturally I would want to see this avoided. So far as I am concerned, would greatly appreciate keeping out of any possible controversy, but would not shirk one if facts and truth were at stake.

You ask if I have any later facts as to operations, seaworthiness and commercial business showing they have made. Regret to say I have nothing more than general information. The ships that came from South America with nitrate I understand did very good work; in fact, seem to prove that none of the standard wood ships thus far have shown the slightest structural weakness. In fact, quite to the contrary, and some of them have been in pretty heavy weather.

It is correct, as I get the information from the American Bureau of Shipping, that there has been some trouble with rudder stocks, which was partly due to not having obtained the best material for them and partly on account of steering gear overrunning and putting improper twist on the stocks. I had some correspondence with Mr. Heyworth about this, and inclose copies of the letters, which are self-explanatory.

I telephoned to-day to the marine superintendent of one of the operating companies that has 16 of the wooden ships—14 of the standard type and 2 of the Hough type. Twelve of these ships have been running between New York and Galveston and there are 4 not quite ready yet. These 12 ships that have been running between New York and Galveston are carrying general cargo, and some of them, in addition to running to Galveston, have gone over to the West Indies. This marine superintendent, who certainly is a capable judge, tells me that the ships are doing very good work, have absolutely no structural weakness, and are stanch in every respect. In some cases they have had caulking to do on the ships, but that this was to be expected. He also says the ships load and discharge cargo very satisfactorily.

I also have information from the Pacific coast, where several of the ships there have carried sugar cargoes between Honolulu and San Francisco. A sugar cargo is a very particular one, for a small amount of water usually results in considerable damage, as it penetrates through the bags of sugar and the bags are thrown out and classed as damaged cargo. I understand there was no damage in these sugar cargoes. Therefore these ships could not have leaked very much.

You inquire as to what is the length of the keel in the Ferris type 3,500-ton ship. Beg to say these ships are 268 feet on the keel.

Your mention that one correspondent is inclined to limit wooden construction to 220 feet keel length is interesting, and can only say, if this correspondent really believes this, he is not conversant with wood-ship building as we now know it.

During my connection with the Government shipbuilding program, and that part in connection with the wooden ships, believe I came in contact with pretty much all the various proposed methods of construction. Also made quite a study of what had been done in wooden-ship building. Not only did I meet and converse with practically all the wooden-ship builders of the country but also have gone among the yards on the Gulf and Atlantic coasts and also on the Pacific coast.

While I dislike to say so, I must confess that the old tradition wood-ship builders of this country—they were few—represent the great diversity of opinion as to proper wood-ship construction, and certainly were a self-opinionated lot of men. Really based on what we have proven in the Government wooden-ship-building program, these men did not know the fundamental engineering principles entering into a vessel built of wood. In laying down the Government ships flat floor—that is, without much dead rise—so as to get floor timbers without butts, throw girder load from bilge to bilge, and systematically steel-strapping the ships, we have produced the only wooden ships ever built in this country that have not shown any tendency to hog, or rather push the bottom up. Further, the wood-ship-building regimen that came from the Pacific coast at the beginning of the Government shipbuilding program emphatically stated that sternposts and deadwoods could not be constructed of wood to hold a single-screw arrangement, and it was their idea that all self-propelled wood vessels would necessarily have to be twin screw. In the standard Government wood ships, which are single screw, the sternposts and deadwoods are standing up admirably, and the racing of the larger propeller wheel has not shown any bad effects thus far with these ships. Further, the universal claim that propelling machinery in a wooden ship, due to vibration, would rack and loosen the vessel's hull is not the case. The ships show no sign whatever of any trouble in this respect.

Of course the wood ship can not commercially be put on a parallel with the steel ships. I say commercially because a wood ship weighs about 15 per cent in excess of steel vessels of equal dimensions, or carries 15 per cent less cargo with the same amount of propelling power expended. Their upkeep and maintenance are somewhat more, but for any person or body of men to contend that because a ship is built of wood she is a failure and is of no commercial value is ridiculous and can only be based on purely prejudiced deductions.

My great regret with the Government wood ship is that we were allowed to be a little too much influenced by the so-called practical wood-ship builder, who, as it has turned out, did not even know the fundamental principles. By their influence we limited the size of the ship to 268 feet long, and I now feel absolutely sure that just as satisfactory a wood ship can be built up to 320 feet long of 5,000 to 5,500 tons dead-weight carrying capacity, which in unit size is very much more attractive than the 3,500-ton wood ship and would do well overseas. It is also to be regretted that these wood ships could not have been fitted with Scotch boilers instead of water-tube boilers, the latter being forced upon us because of the emergency and the stated impossibility to get boiler plates, furnaces, and tubes, together with the necessary facilities to produce Scotch boilers. This, in fact, applies to many of the steel ships, and I do not believe, and never did, that the water-tube boiler will be a permanent thing in any cargo ship, the Scotch boiler being practically the only one for this class of ship.

Respectfully, yours, CHAS. E. FERRIS.

PERFORMANCE OF THE 98 WOODEN STEAMSHIPS DELIVERED TO THE EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION UP TO NOVEMBER 21, 1918.

[Compiled by David L. Ewing, Assistant Director of Operations, United States Shipping Board, Emergency Fleet Corporation, Washington, D. C., November 22, 1918.]

WOODEN SHIPS DELIVERED TO EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION.

North Bend (Hough type). Builders, Kruse & Banks, North Bend, Oreg. Delivered May 27, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco June 3 for Honolulu with coal; arrived June 13. Sailed from Honolulu June 23 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived July 5. Sailed from San Francisco July 26 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived August 5. Sailed from Honolulu August 14 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived August 27. Sailed from San Francisco for New York September 17 with general cargo; arrived October 18. Sailed from New York November 2 for Cristobal with general cargo; arrived November 13.

Biloxi (Hough type). Builders, Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered June 26, 1918. Sailed from Portland June 26 for San Francisco with lumber; arrived June 29. Sailed from San Francisco July 16 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived July 27. Sailed from Honolulu August 8 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived August 21. Sailed from San Francisco September 8 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived September 19. Sailed from Honolulu September 25 for San Francisco with general cargo; arrived October 7. Sailed from San Francisco October 22 for Arica in ballast.

Wasco (Hough type). Builders, Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered June 30, 1918. Sailed from Astoria July 1 for San Francisco with lumber; arrived July 4. Sailed from San Francisco July 17 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived July 28. Sailed from Honolulu August 2 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived August 20. Sailed from San Francisco September 6 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived September 17. Sailed from Honolulu September 25 for San Francisco with general cargo; arrived October 5. Sailed from San Francisco October 22 for Chile in ballast; arrived November 17.

Quidnic (Hough type). Builders, Kruse & Banks, North Bend, Oreg. Delivered June 30, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco July 7 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived July 19. Sailed from Honolulu July 24 for San Francisco with general cargo; arrived August 5. Sailed from San Francisco August 18 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived August 29. Sailed from Honolulu September 1 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived September 17. Sailed from San Francisco September 25 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived October 6. Sailed from Honolulu October 13 for San Francisco with sugar and pineapples; arrived October 25.

Kasota (Hough type). Builders, Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered June 30, 1918. Sailed from Portland July 5 for San Francisco in ballast; arrived July 14 Sailed from San Francisco July 29 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived August 9. Sailed from Honolulu September 12 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived September 26. Sailed from San Francisco October 25 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived November 6. Sailed from Honolulu November 8 for Manila.

Wishkah (Grays Harbor type). Builders, Grays Harbor Mercantile Ship Corporation, Grays Harbor, Wash. Delivered June 30, 1918. Found to be leaking. Sailed from Seattle September 2 for Honolulu with lumber; arrived September 14. Sailed from Honolulu October 20 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived October 31.

Quinault (Ferris type). Builders, Seaborn Shipyards, Tacoma, Wash. Delivered July 7, 1918. Sailed from Seattle July 9 for San Francisco. Sailed from San Francisco July 24 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived August 1, 1918. Sailed from Honolulu August 11 for San Francisco. Ran out of coal 250 miles out. Towed in by Point Lobos. Arrived at San Francisco August 24, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco September 14 for Honolulu with general cargo; arrived September 23. Sailed from Honolulu October 2 for San Francisco with general cargo and sugar; arrived October 11.

Blandon (Hough type). Builders: Grant, Smith, Porter Ship Co., St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered July 17, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco July 27, 1918, for Portland with general; arrived July 30. Sailed from Astoria August 8 for San Francisco with general; arrived August 12. Sailed from San Francisco August 15 for Portland with general; arrived August 18. Sailed from Portland August 23 for San Francisco with general; arrived August 26. Sailed from San Francisco September 1 for Astoria with general; arrived September 6. Sailed from Astoria September 11 for San Francisco with general; arrived September 15. Sailed from San Francisco September 19 for Portland with general; arrived September 23. Sailed from Portland September 23 for San Francisco with general; arrived October 5. At San Francisco dry docking October 5. Sailed from Astoria October 16 for San Francisco with general; arrived October 25. Sailed from San Francisco October 26 for Portland with general; arrived October 29. Sailed from Portland November 5 for San Francisco with general; arrived November 7. Sailed from San Francisco November 14 for Portland with general; arrived November 18.

Boilston (Hough type). Builders: Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered July 26, 1918. Sailed from Portland July 27 for San Francisco in ballast; arrived July 31. Sailed from San Francisco August 7 for Honolulu with general; arrived August 18. Sailed from Honolulu for island ports September 1 with general; arrived September 10. Sailed from San Francisco September 24 for New York with sugar. Sailed from San Francisco October 1 for New York with sugar. Sailed from San Francisco October 2 for Baltimore with quartermaster supplies; arrived Balboa October 20. Sailed from Cristobal October 21 for Baltimore with general; arrived October 31. Sailed from Baltimore November 12 for Philadelphia with ballast; arrived November 15. Sailed from Philadelphia November 21 for Houston with general.

Kaskaskia (Grays Harbor type). Builders: Grays Harbor M. S. Corporation, Grays Harbor, Wash. Delivered July 27, 1918. Sailed from Hoquiam July 27 for Seattle; arrived Seattle dry dock August 2. Sailed from Seattle August 11 for Comox, British Columbia, with ballast. Sailed from Union Bay August 17 for Honolulu with coal; arrived August 29. Sailed from Honolulu September 10 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived September 19. Sailed from San Francisco October 8 for Honolulu with general; arrived October 17. Sailed from Honolulu October 23 for San Francisco with general; arrived November 2. Sailed from San Francisco November 15 for New York with Navy canned goods.

Kickapoo (Hough type). Builders: Kruse & Banks, North Bend, Oreg. Delivered July 29, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco August 6 for Honolulu. Returned to San Francisco—rudder trouble. Sailed from San Francisco August 9 for Honolulu with general; arrived August 21. Sailed from Honolulu September 2 for San Francisco with pineapples; arrived September 20. Sailed from San Francisco October 16 for Arica with ballast; arrived San Diego October 18 for repairs. Sailed from San Diego October 25 for Arica, repairs completed; arrived Arica November 15; arrived Caleta Caloso November 16.

Coyote (Ferris type). Builders: Foundation Co., Newark, N. J. Delivered August 1, 1918. Sailed from New York August 16 for Norfolk with general; arrived August 18. Arrived Bermuda August 28; grounded at Bermuda September 9, 1918; arrived Norfolk September 17 light. Sailed from Norfolk September 29 for Providence with coal; arrived October 1. Sailed from Providence October 16 for Norfolk with ballast; arrived November 18. Sailed from Norfolk October 22 for ———; arrived Norfolk October 24 with cargo coal.

Wahkiakum (Ferris type). Builders: Seaborn Shipyards, Tacoma, Wash. Delivered August 2, 1918. Sailed from Seattle August 14 for Honolulu with general; arrived September 2. Sailed from Honolulu for San Francisco September 8 with sugar; arrived September 18. At San Francisco repairing September 27. Sailed from San Francisco October 19 for Honolulu with general; arrived October 31.

Callooh (Hough type). Builders: Grant, Smith & Porter Ship Co., St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered August 7, 1918. Sailed from Portland August 7 for San Francisco with lumber; arrived San Francisco August 10. Sailed from San Francisco August 20 for New York with general; arrived September 20. Sailed from New York October 2 for Norfolk with ballast; arrived October 4. Sailed from Norfolk October 13 for Habana with coal; arrived October 17. Sailed from Habana October 20 in ballast; arrived at Galveston October 24; arrived at New York November 4. Sailed from New York November 9 for Brunswick with general; arrived November 13.

Moritz (Hough type). Builders: Grant, Smith & Porter Ship Co., St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered August 12, 1918. Arrived at San Francisco August 17 with general. Sailed from San Francisco August 23 for Honolulu with general; arrived September 1. Sailed from Honolulu September 10 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived September 22. At San Francisco idle October 5. Sailed from San Francisco October 8 for Arica without; arrived November 1. Sailed from Iquique November 12, 1918.

Calala (Ballin type). Builders: Supple & Ballin, Portland, Oreg. Delivered August 13, 1918. Sailed from Astoria August 17 for San Francisco in ballast; arrived August 19. Sailed from San Francisco August 30 for Honolulu with general; arrived September 8. Sailed from Honolulu September 21 for San Francisco with sugar; arrived October 1. At San Francisco idle October 5. Sailed from San Francisco October 17 for Honolulu with general; arrived at Balboa November 3. Sailed from Cristobal November 9 for New York with salmon; arrived Norfolk November 18. Sailed from Norfolk November 21 for New York with general.

Bellota (Ferris type). Builders: R. J. Chandler, Wilmington, Cal. Delivered August 13, 1918. Sailed from Los Angeles for San Francisco; arrived August 11. Sailed from San Francisco August 31 for Honolulu with general; arrived September 9. Sailed from Honolulu September 13 for San Francisco with pines and sugar; arrived September 26. At San Francisco repairing October 11. Sailed from San Francisco October 17 for Honolulu with coal; arrived at Honolulu October 28. Sailed from Honolulu October 31; arrived at Honolulu November 5. November 18 lost rudder 280 miles out of San Francisco; tug Tatoosh ordered to assist.

Blackford (Grays Harbor type). Builders: Grays Harbor M. S. Corporation, Grays Harbor, Wash. Delivered August 23, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco August 29 for Arica; put in at San Francisco for bunkers September 2. Sailed from San Francisco September 4 for Arica; arrived at San Pedro September 7, engine trouble. Sailed from San Pedro September 10 for Arica without; drifted ashore at Mazatlan September 25.

Mojave (Ferris type). Builders: Seaborn Shipyard, Tacoma, Wash. Delivered August 24, 1918. Sailed from Seattle August 27 for Arica without; arrived San Diego September 1. Sailed from San Diego September 3 for Arica; arrived at Callao September 23. Sailed from Callao September 28 for Arica. Sailed from Arica October 1 for loading port; arrived at Junin October 3. Sailed from Junin October 18 for Balboa; arrived at Callao October 22. Sailed from Salina Cruz November 8 for San Francisco; arrived San Diego November 16. Sailed from San Diego November 16 for San Pedro with general.

Yehama (Hough type). Builders: Fulton Steamship Co., Wilmington, Cal. Delivered August 26, 1918. Sailed from San Francisco September 1 for Honolulu. Sailed from San Francisco September 1 for New York; arrived at Mazatlan September 8. Sailed from San Francisco September 9 for New York; arrived at Balboa, Canal Zone, September 20; general. Sailed from Cristobal September 22 for New York with general; arrived at New York October 1. Drydock at Pier 36, Barber Line, Brooklyn; at New York October 11, repairing. Sailed from New York October 19 for Norfolk with general; arrived October 22. Sailed from Norfolk October 30 for Cuba. November 15 fire broke out in forward hold at Habana and did considerable damage. Will return to States for permanent repairs.

Coos Bay (Hough type). Builders: Coos Bay Shipbuilding Co., Coos Bay, Oreg. Delivered August 27, 1918. At San Francisco repairing August 30. Sailed from San Francisco September 3 for Arica without. United States Navy ship Nanshan reports that she disappeared from view at 2 a. m. September 16 at 22° 1' latitude north and 110° 10' west.

Dumaru (Hough type). Builders: Grant, Smith & Porter, St. Johns, Oreg. Delivered August 28, 1918. Sailed from Astoria September 2 for San Francisco in ballast; arrived September 4. Sailed from San Francisco September 12 for Seattle with general; arrived at Seattle, Honolulu, September 23. Sailed from Honolulu September 25 for Manila. October 16 destroyed by an explosion of oil cargo by lightning near Guam.

Red Cloud (McClelland type). Builders: Merrill Stevens Co., Jacksonville, Fla. Delivered August 28, 1918. Sailed from Jacksonville September 15 for Port Arthur with light; arrived September 24. Sailed from Port Arthur October 4 for South Norwalk with lumber; arrived at New York October 21. Sailed from New York October 21 for South Norwalk with general; arrived at New York October 30.

Nemecki (Ferris type). Builders: Tampa Dock Co., Tampa, Fla. Delivered August 31, 1918. Sailed from Jacksonville September 10 for Norfolk with light; arrived September 14. Sailed from Norfolk September 17 for New York with light; arrived September 18. October 5 operators say will not be ready before 19th or 20th of October; now expected to be ready the 28th or 29th. November 15, 1918, returning to New York with general. Sailed from New York November 15, 1918, for Newport News with ballast; arrived November 17. Sailed from Norfolk November 20, 1918, for Bermuda with coal.

Dancey (Ferris type). J. W. Murdock, builder, Jacksonville, Fla. Delivered August 31, 1918. Sailed from Jacksonville September 21, 1918, for Norfolk; arrived September 25, 1918; light. Sailed from Norfolk September 29, 1918, for Baltimore; arrived September 30, 1918; ballast. Sailed from Baltimore October 19, 1918, for Boston; arrived at New York October 22, 1918; coal. Sailed from New York October 28, 1918, for Boston; arrived November 2, 1918; coal.

Appalachee (McLelland type). Merril Stevens Co., builders, Jacksonville Fla. Delivered August 31, 1918. Sailed from Jacksonville October 1, 1918, for Savannah; arrived October 4, 1918; light. Sailed from Savannah October 7, 1918, for Norfolk; arrived October 9, 1918; ballast. Sailed from Norfolk October 12, 1918, for Boston; arrived October 17, 1918; coal. Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] for permitting this interruption at this time. As I have said, I am not contending that the Shipping Board should make any additional contracts for the construction of this type of ship if they are now in a position to contract for a different and superior type and have the time to build other types of ships which more nearly suit their needs; but at the same time I want to make this showing of facts as to the performance of the wooden ships and to insist that they have not been failures by any means; that they are valuable cargo carriers and that these yards can be utilized not only in the building of such types of ships as they have been building but can be used in the construction of smaller vessels, in the construction of tugs, and in the construction of pontoons and of other shipping craft.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I simply want to say, in confirmation of what the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has stated, that when I was out in Seattle a short time ago I talked with some of the leading shipping men there and asked them particularly what the record of these wooden ships had been as to efficiency and good service. Some of them were men who were inclined, I knew, toward steel construction, but they said these ships had rendered splendid service; that they were good cargo-carrying ships, especially for the coastwise trade, and even upon voyages of considerable length; that the current rumors that had been given out, in their judgment, were practically without foundation.

I simply want to add that statement to the facts which the Senator from Florida has given and to say that I am in general accord with his suggestions.

I do not want the Shipping Board to enter into new contracts for the construction of additional wooden ships, especially if we can get plenty of steel ships; but there are some contracts which have been made and which have been in large part performed for such ships; and it would entail upon the Government a very great loss if such construction were suspended. Those ships I should like to see the Shipping Board complete. I think, when constructed, the ships would render good service, and that they could be disposed of, if we ever found it necessary to dispose of them, in a very advantageous way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President. I am glad to have the confirmation of my position by the Senator from Washington; and I will simply add that, in my judgment, it would be a great mistake to cancel our contracts for such ships where material has been ordered and is on the ground and the builders are prepared to go on with the construction of the ships, for, whether the Shipping Board really needs those ships or not, they can undoubtedly be disposed of, so that there will be no loss in their construction, and it might be a reasonable business proposition. At any rate, the evidence is clear that it is not a waste of money to construct such ships. There is a demand for them if the Shipping Board shall not want them; and, whether they want them or not and will need them in the operations that they have in mind, there will be others who will want them.

Mr. HARDING and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. FLETCHER] if I understood him to say that these ships could be disposed of without loss?

Mr. FLETCHER. I said I thought they could be disposed of without loss.

Mr. HARDING. Well, is the Senator from Florida not aware of the fact that the Shipping Board is already talking of a plan of writing off the cost of these ships in order to operate them successfully?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have seen some suggestions of that kind, but I do not think they come from the Shipping Board. I think that is an idea which has been advanced by others.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I am prepared to say that it does come from the Shipping Board, and I take issue with the Senator from Florida on the wisdom of going on with the contracts for the construction of such ships which have not already been begun and building at Government expense under the extraordinary conditions which were developed to meet a war emergency. With the permission of the Senate, I shall be glad to make some remarks upon that subject at a time when I shall not be intruding upon the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now recognize the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to take the floor?

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] covered the question I had in mind.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the Senator from North Carolina will yield to me a moment, I desire to report back favorably with an amendment, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the resolution (S. Res. 374) providing for hearings before the Committee on Manufactures, and I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to the resolution.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will kindly indulge me for just a moment, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and passage of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas, chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It will not take a moment to pass the resolution. It merely authorizes the Committee on Manufactures to pursue further its investigation of the coal situation and to visit the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania and pay the expenses therefor. The committee thinks it prudent to undertake this matter. I should like to have the resolution passed, because I desire to go into this question in all of its phases and to correct what upon the surface appears to be a great economic abuse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether this committee is the one that had under investigation the Hog Island frauds and scandals?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; that was the Commerce Committee.

Mr. KING. I knew that the Senator from Mississippi was a member of the committee which had been investigating that question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There was no subcommittee appointed for the purpose of investigating the Hog Island scandal. The pending resolution refers to a subcommittee appointed by the Committee on Manufactures. That committee desires to visit the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania and other coal fields in order to make further investigation; that is all.

Mr. KING. While the Senator is on the floor I should like to ask what has become of the investigation of Hog Island, first, by the committee, and, secondly, as I understand, by the Department of Justice? There was a great deal of vulgar robbery, stealing, and thievery by men engaged in the Hog Island enterprise, and I think the committee ought to make a report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the language employed by the Senator from Utah, when we consider the provocation, is very moderate in his characterization of the conduct of certain plutocratic individuals connected with the Hog Island enterprise. And I agree with him that the report ought to be made, and I trust it will be, some of these days. The result of the investigation made by the Department of Justice, I understand, is in the hands of Mr. Hurley. It was first sent to the President, who, in turn, sent it to Mr. Hurley, and Mr. Hurley is now in Europe, I am advised. I join with the Senator from Utah in the desire to see the report of the Department of Justice. I wish also that the American people could see the Hog Island infamy, as it appears to me, in all of its naked enormity. In the name of patriotism the American people have been robbed by this corporation most shamefully. It would not have been tolerated a moment if it had been attempted at any other time than in time of war.

Mr. KING. Why did not the Committee on Commerce, which started the investigation, complete the investigation and make a report?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think the investigation has been completed. I am sure it has not, as thoroughly as it ought to be, but, of course, I will not presume to speak for the entire committee—I am only one member of that committee—as to why the report has not been made. The hearings, however, have been published, and the Senator can judge for himself.

Mr. KING. I read a portion of the testimony, and it showed such fraud, so much stealing and wrongdoing, that I think the committee ought to complete its report and submit its findings to the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I state to the Senator, with reference to that investigation——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let me suggest to the Senator that he permit the pending resolution to be disposed of, and then the Senator from Florida can discuss the question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not going to discuss it; I wish simply to answer the inquiries. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wanted to know why the committee had not done certain things. The report as to Hog Island, to which the Senator from Mississippi has referred, has been requested by the Committee on Commerce, at least a copy of it, by a resolution adopted at its last meeting. We shall have an answer to that as soon as we meet again, and that answer will be, I take it, somewhat in line with what the Senator from Mississippi has suggested. At the same time, I do not want the inference to go out that the committee is neglecting its duty in the matter.

Whether that report is of a confidential nature or is in the nature of an official document, submitted by the Department of Justice to the President on his request, and we are entitled to it or not, is a matter that we can determine when we get to it; but that investigation was based upon the idea that there were certain matters in connection with the Hog Island transaction and the construction of the shipyard there that needed to be inquired into by the Department of Justice; in other words, to ascertain whether there were any violations of law in connection with it. That phase of the matter was turned over to the Department of Justice, and the Committee on Commerce has not gone into it since it was taken up by the Department of Justice.

Their report will probably cover that inquiry; but it is a report, as I have said, that was called for by the President, and, of course, it is a report that is in his hands or in the hands of those to whom he may have sent it. However, we will find out about it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, there is enough testimony already in the hands of the Committee on Commerce to justify a report to Congress looking to the abrogation of the contract entered into by the corporation for the construction of the Hog Island Shipyard. I think this enterprise is the most shameful scheme to rob the Public Treasury that has been entered into since 1914. Certain very wealthy men are to be paid a percentage on the construction of the ships to be built by this plant, erected at the cost of the Government, for which the aforesaid plutocrats did not contribute a dollar in money or a penny's worth of work. It is my judgment that it is one of the most disgraceful incidents in the annals of American history. Such a fraud should not be tolerated. But I am not going to discuss that now. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which has just been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment, on page 1, line 15, after the word "printed," to strike out the words "and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate be, and it hereby is, authorized and instructed to make inquiry into the coal situation, its production, transportation, and consumption.

Resolved further, That the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or of either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof.

Resolved further, That the expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 310, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "Revenue bill of 1918," and that there be printed separately 10,000 additional copies each of the majority and minority reports and individual views of members of the Committee on Finance on H. R. 12863, the revenue bill of 1918, for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think it is due to the Senate that I should follow the custom which I have uniformly followed heretofore, of making to the Senate a statement with respect to the changes and amendments that have been made in the House bill by the Committee on Finance. I shall make that statement as brief as possible.

I think, Mr. President, that every Senator, like myself, realizes the importance of prompt action in the consideration and passage of the pending bill. The taxes for the fiscal year 1919 can not be collected under it unless the time between its passage and the filing of the returns of the taxpayer is sufficient for administrative purposes. From two and one-half to three months will be absolutely necessary to enable the department to formulate regulations, print the millions upon millions of forms required, distribute them so as to reach the taxpayers of the country, and organize and train the great force necessary to personally instruct the taxpayers in properly preparing their returns.

The bill provides that the returns of the taxpayer shall be filed by the 15th day of March, and that the first installment of the taxes shall then be paid. This bill, as well as the present law, authorizes the commissioner to extend the time for making returns. If this extension is not made it will be necessary for the bill to pass by the 1st of January. If it is extended one month, as was done in the case of the last returns under the present law, it will be sufficient if the bill becomes a law by the 1st of February. Such an extension will automatically extend the time for the payment of the first installment, which would result in more or less embarrassment to the Treasury. An extension of more than a month, it is felt by the department, would be impracticable. I should add that the date named, February 1, fixes the ultimate limit. Utilizing every resource and straining every nerve the Treasury Department can, if the bill passes by that date, administer the law. The law can not be successfully administered if passed after February 1.

I think all Senators will agree that in order to pass this bill by the 1st of February it will be necessary to extend—if not now, later—the hours of our sittings and to devote ourselves to the consideration of this measure to the exclusion, as far as practicable, of other measures, and, in addition, to confine the debate, as far as possible, to discussion of questions pertinent to the bill.

If the delay in the passage of the bill makes it necessary to collect the taxes for the fiscal year 1919 under the existing law, we can not expect to collect more than $4,370,117,000, more than a billion and a half less than the Secretary of the Treasury estimates will be required. This sum, or an approximate amount, could be raised under the present law if it were amended so as to impose a war-profits tax of 80 per cent, the rate provided in the pending bill. Unless this bill passes, or the suggested amendment to the present law is made, the great war incomes and profits piled up during the present calendar year will escape war taxation, and the individuals and corporations who have made these big net incomes and profits will not contribute their just share to the burdens of the war to which they are mainly attributable. It will be unfortunate, indeed, if, by reason of the failure to pass the pending bill or amend the present law, the recipients of these great profits are allowed to keep for their own use the huge sum—approximating $2,000,000,000—which they have expected to pay and which they have collected largely out of the people on the assumption that they would have to pay an 80 per cent war-profits tax. The effect would be to increase to that extent the burdens of the great mass of taxpayers throughout the country.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, I feel that I can with propriety appeal to Senators, and I do now appeal to Senators, to cooperate in securing the speedy enactment of adequate legislation to make this deplorable eventuality impossible.

Early in the year 1917, and shortly after we entered the war, the two Houses of Congress, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, began the consideration of a revenue bill to raise $4,000,000,000 to meet the increased expenses on account of the war. That amount was all that was thought necessary at that time to pay the expenses of drafting, mobilizing, equipping, and supplying the added military and naval forces then contemplated, together with the necessary war expenditures resulting from that increase in the Army and the Navy and the military program.

The military situation early in the present year made it necessary, from the standpoint of safety and success, that the original program be changed. It was decided that it was necessary to raise an army of 5,000,000 soldiers, 4,000,000 of whom were intended for overseas service. It was also decided to be necessary, as a result, to enlarge our aircraft, Shipping Board, and ordnance programs. It was estimated that to meet the increased expenditures incident to this change of program we would need $8,000,000,000 of revenue instead of $4,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919.

Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Ways and Means Committee of the House accordingly on the 29th day of May of this year entered upon the consideration of a new revenue bill to raise this additional amount. After nearly three months of hearings, investigations, study, and discussions, on September 3, 1918, the pending bill, estimated to raise eight billion and something over one hundred million dollars, was reported to the House and, with some amendments, was, I think, unanimously passed through that body. The bill was immediately reported to the Senate and referred to the Finance Committee.

I can say, Mr. President, without any reservation, that I have never known a committee, during my 18 years' service in the Senate, to work more earnestly, conscientiously, and continuously in the consideration and preparation of any measure than the Finance Committee in its work of revising and amending this bill.

The committee, after giving mature consideration to the many very vital amendments that it was deemed proper to make in the interest of justice and equity and the fair distribution of burdens, had practically completed its labors and was about ready to report the measure to the Senate for its further action, when the sudden and unexpected, not to say dramatic, collapse of our enemies, and the signing of the armistice—the terms of which amounted practically to unconditional surrender—radically changed the whole situation from the revenue standpoint. The task of providing revenue for financing the operations of the Government while engaged in a great war gave way to the task of financing the Government through the period of demobilization and reconstruction. Manifestly the two problems are not the same, and tax legislation appropriate to the one is not wholly appropriate to the other.

Not only we but our allies, as a matter of policy, had, during the war, sought by repressive taxation and other means to diminish the demand for labor, capital, and raw materials employed in the production of nonessential things. This policy was not only justifiable but necessary to conserve labor, capital, and raw materials for war purposes. But the same reasons, Mr. President, which justify and make proper and necessary these repressive taxes in times of war manifestly make them undesirable and even obnoxious in times of peace.

This interpretation of the financial significance of the cessation of the war was set forth in a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Treasury to me as chairman of the committee on the 14th day of November. In that letter the Secretary of the Treasury declared that—the collapse of our enemies necessitates instant reconsideration of the financial plans of the Government.

He added:

The prompt enactment of a revenue bill is imperative. The existing law is not satisfactory to the country nor to the Treasury. On the other hand, the revenue bill which passed the House is more stringent than the changed situation will justify.

In this letter the Secretary of the Treasury expressed the belief that the actual expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, would be around $18,000,000,000 instead of $24,000,000,000, as originally estimated, and recommended that the pending bill be revised with a view to raising $6,000,000,000 instead of $8,000,000,000 during the calendar year 1919, and $4,000,000,000 during the calendar year 1920. This recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury has been acted upon by the committee, and the necessary changes and amendments made to give it effect.

It is estimated that of the six billions it is expected the bill as amended will raise for the present fiscal year, $4,707,000,000 will be realized from income, war excess profits, and inheritance or estate taxes, and the balance from miscellaneous taxes. Of the four billions which the bill is estimated to raise in the year 1920 about $3,000,000,000 will be raised from income and excess-profits taxes and the balance from miscellaneous taxes.

There was very little division, Mr. President, in the committee with respect to the six-billion program for 1919, but with respect to the reduction of two billions proposed for the fiscal year 1920 there was sharp disagreement. It was contended that the time for making the reductions recommended by the Treasury had not arrived, and that the Congress could safely be trusted to make the reductions when the time did arrive.

It is contended by the minority that this is not the proper time to make the reductions recommended by the Secretary for the fiscal year 1919–20, based upon the profits and incomes for the calendar year 1919, but that these reductions should be postponed to a future session of the Congress.

These gentlemen admit it is entirely proper for the Congress which assembled on the 3d day of December, 1917, to provide for an increase in the revenues to meet increased expenditures for the fiscal year 1918–19, but they deny that it is proper for the Congress which assembled on the 2d of December, 1918, to enact legislation to reduce the revenues to be raised by taxation for the fiscal year 1919–20 based upon the profits and incomes of 1919. The only difference in the two cases was that Congress assembled one day earlier in the one case than in the other and the problem in one case was to increase the taxes and in the other to lower them.

They base their contention in part upon the ground that there is no necessity grounded on public policy and interest which requires that these reductions be made now instead of later, in part upon the ground that there is uncertainty as to the correctness of the estimates of the department as to the expenditures during the year 1919–20, and in part upon the ground that that action now would controvert the practice of Congress in such cases.

Mr. President, I do not agree with any of these contentions. I do not think any of them is grounded in either good logic or in the facts and circumstances of the case. I believe that every consideration of sound public policy requires that these reductions for the fiscal year 1920, based on the incomes of 1919, should be made at this session of Congress and as early as possible, to the end that the taxpayer and the consumer may know whether these taxes, which will be reflected in the prices charged and paid, are to be imposed upon the basis of a tax levy of six billions or four billions.

I believe that so far from the present being the wrong time to make these reductions, it is the right time to make them, and I do not believe there is any established practice of the Congress which demands otherwise or that there is any such uncertainty as to the estimated expenditures for the year 1919–20 as requires or makes it necessary or proper to delay action in making these reductions.

First, Mr. President, let me address myself to the question of public policy. Is it or is it not in the interest of justice and of the people, the seller and the buyer, that the question of what rates of taxes are to be imposed upon the profits and the incomes of the calendar year 1919, upon which we are about to enter, should be determined and fixed at the very earliest practicable moment? The minority says it is not. I do not agree with them; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not agree with them; the Secretary of the Treasury does not agree with them; the President of the United States does not agree with them.

The President in his late message strongly urged immediate legislation to this end. The Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to me on November 14 urged immediate legislation to this end.

Mr. President, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury upon these points of expediency, of policy, of justice, is so strong, so explicit, so full, and so clear that I think I ought to read some extracts relating to this matter from it. The Secretary says in this letter:

Nor can I overemphasize the importance of determining now the basis of taxation which will apply to the calendar year 1920 as well as to the calendar year 1919. Business and industry and individual initiative and enterprise are entitled to know in advance the basis of taxation upon which all the activities of the Nation must be conducted. Prosperity can not be maintained if business is kept in uncertainty as to taxation. It is always unfortunate to be compelled to enact a tax bill at the end of the calendar year, with retroactive effect, instead of in advance of the calendar year, which would permit contracts and business arrangements generally to be entered into with certainty as to the burdens of taxation to be borne. This is a gross injustice to business and to all forms of enterprise. It is costly to the people at large, as they are required to pay higher prices for their necessities, because producers, in order to be on the safe side, fix prices on the assumption that taxes may be higher than they subsequently turn out to be. Definiteness and certainty as to the basis of taxation should be given in the pending bill, not alone as to the calendar year 1918 but as to the calendar year 1919. This will enable business and enterprise to proceed with confidence and courage.

I am constrained to read also an extract from the President's message upon this subject. It is very brief:

If the war had continued it would have been necessary to raise at least $8,000,000,000 by taxation payable in the year 1919; but the war has ended, and I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that it will be safe to reduce the amount to six billions. An immediate rapid decline in the expenses of the Government is not to be looked for. Contracts made for war supplies will, indeed, be rapidly canceled and liquidated, but their immediate liquidation will make heavy drains on the Treasury for the months just ahead of us. The maintenance of our forces on the other side of the sea is still necessary. A considerable proportion of those forces must remain in Europe during the period of occupation, and those which are brought home will be transported and demobilized at heavy expense for months to come. The interest on our war debt must of course be paid and provision made for the retirement of the obligations of the Government which represent it. But these demands will of course fall much below what a continuation of military operations would have entailed and six billions should suffice to supply a sound foundation for the financial operations of the year.

I entirely concur—

Says the President—

with the Secretary of the Treasury in recommending that the two billions needed in addition to the four billions provided by existing law be obtained from the profits which have accrued and shall accrue from war contracts and distinctively war business, but that these taxes be confined to the war profits accruing in 1918 or in 1919 from business originating in war contracts. I urge your acceptance of his recommendation that provision be made now, not subsequently, that the taxes to be paid in 1920 should be reduced from six to four billions. Any arrangements less definite than these would add elements of doubt and confusion to the critical period of industrial readjustment through which the country must now immediately pass, and which no true friend of the Nation's essential business interests can afford to be responsible for creating or prolonging. Clearly determined conditions, clearly and simply charted, are indispensable to the economic revival and rapid industrial development which may confidently be expected if we act now and sweep all interrogation points away.

Mr. President, I agree that it is unfortunate that there should be delay in the passage of a revenue bill which imposes taxes upon the current earnings of the year in which the measure must be passed. It has been unfortunate that heretofore in the enactment of these revenue bills it has been impracticable to secure their enactment into law until late in the calendar year the income for which was to be taxed. So two of these measures have had a retroactive effect. But, Mr. President, in both instances where these bills have been delayed, as the present bill has been delayed, the necessity for the increase in the rates of taxation has been disclosed by events which happened or by conditions which first came to be understood and appreciated toward the middle of the year. The conditions which make it proper and necessary to reduce taxes for the fiscal year 1920, however, are apparent now; and this is the first time in recent years in which the facts making the change in the revenue law necessary and proper have been disclosed before the beginning of the taxable year for which new rates had to be imposed.

It will be recalled that the revenue act of September 8, 1916, was not introduced until somewhere near the middle of the year. It was not discovered until the taxable year had advanced many months that that act was necessary in order to meet the increasing expenditures of the Government, affected by the troubles on the Mexican border and influenced by the reflex action of the war in Europe. But just as soon as it was determined that it was necessary on account of the enormous increase in our expenses to raise additional revenue measures were immediately taken by the department responsible for the conduct of the fiscal affairs of the Government and by the Congress to enact suitable legislation.

Again, Mr. President, when the calendar year 1917 began we had no reason to believe that the laws then on the statute books would be insufficient to yield that part of the revenue which it was desirable to raise by taxation, but on the 6th day of April of that year the Government of the United States, acting upon the initiative of the people of the country—not of Congress and not of the President—decided that the common welfare and safety of this country required and made it the imperative duty of this Government to declare war against the Imperial German Government. Immediately it was recognized by all that it would become necessary, if we were to play the part assigned to us, if we were to render that assistance to our allies which was deemed essential in order to make success possible—I will not say "assured," but possible—that we should at once raise a great army of 2,000,000 men, mobilize them, equip them, furnish them the equipment and supplies necessary to make their service possible, and then provide the transportation incident to getting them across the water.

In order to do this it became necessary for us to adopt a new policy in this country—to enter upon a great scheme of war preparation; to build aircraft; to manufacture great quantities of ordnance; to speed up and enormously to expand our shipping program; and to provide for the manufacture of billions of dollars worth of materials that were required to minister to the needs of this great Army which we were organizing for service 3,000 miles away from home. Within less than 10 days after that event occurred which set in motion this great program of war the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States called upon Congress at once to proceed to the work of changing our tax laws so as to raise the additional revenue deemed to be necessary. That work was begun, I say, within 10 days after the declaration of war.

But, Mr. President, owing to the delays that we all understand to be necessarily incident to the preparation and enactment of important legislation of this character, with all the speed that could be put behind that measure, Congress was not able to pass it until the month of October. If we had known that this additional revenue was needed before the beginning of the taxable year—before the Congress of the preceding December assembled—we would have started preparations for the enactment of that legislation at the very beginning of that session, just as I say it is our duty now, at the very beginning of this session, to enact legislation in order to remove the burdens of taxation that have been found by reason of changing conditions to be unnecessary.

Again, Mr. President, in the case of the pending revenue legislation we did not begin action upon it until several months of the taxable year had expired. Why? Because it was not definitely determined until late in the first half of the year that in order to play the part that the situation in Europe demanded we should play, it would be necessary greatly to enlarge, indeed, almost to double our Army; to raise, instead of an Army of 2,000,000 men for overseas service, an Army of over 4,000,000 men for service abroad.

Senators know how dark and discouraging the situation was at that time. Senators will recall the urgent appeals that came to us from abroad for additional help, for additional men, for additional supplies; Senators well know how we all felt that unless we responded and responded promptly to those appeals the day was lost; that civilization was jeopardized; and that, instead of the glorious victory in which we now exult we might possibly at an early day be compelled to face a great and irretrievable world disaster. For that reason, Mr. President, it was decided in the middle of the year that we must increase our taxes for the year 1918—for this taxable year.

So we commenced work upon a bill for that purpose. That bill ought to have been passed during the last session. It is a great mistake that it was not passed during the last session. If it had passed then the existing confusion about this proposal to adopt rates for 1919 now would not trouble us. If a tax law for 1918 had been passed as a separate measure then I think there would have been no confusion about our duty with reference to providing right now for the reduction of the taxes payable in the year 1920 but applicable to the earnings of 1919. The confusion grows out of the fact that by reason of our failure and inability to pass the pending measure before the beginning of the present session of Congress it becomes necessary to pass it during this session of Congress. We are simply linking to the revenue bill of 1918 an amendment to accomplish what, under other conditions, we would have accomplished properly by an independent bill.

I wish Senators would think about this matter in terms of two distinct bills. One properly should have been passed during the present taxable year and before Congress met in December. Public interest, in fact, would have been better served if the bill could have been passed at the beginning of the year instead of at the end of the year; but it could not be passed then because of conditions which Congress could not control, and it had to be passed, if at all, toward the end of the year. Now I ask that Senators consider the two propositions separately, as if the pending revenue bill fixing taxes and rates for the calendar year 1918 had passed and the proposal to fix taxes and rates for 1919—payable in 1920—were an independent proposition having no relation to the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield; but I would rather the Senator would allow me to proceed, as I am discussing the question generally.

Mr. KING. I will yield to the desire of the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. When I get to the details I will be very glad to yield to the Senator, and will do so now if he insists upon it.

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. I now reach the question, Mr. President, of a reduction in war taxation. If we pass this bill without special provision for the fiscal year 1920, the profits and incomes earned during the taxable year 1919 will be liable for a tax based upon an $8,000,000,000 levy. We also know now, in the beginning of the session of Congress, before the taxable year 1919 has been entered upon, that the requirements of the Government for the fiscal year 1920 make it possible and proper to lop off $2,000,000,000 from the proposed tax for the fiscal year 1919.

The minority Senators—I have not seen their report, but speak from what was said in the committee—the minority contend that it is sufficient if these tax reductions be made at some later session of Congress. When this Congress adjourns on the 4th of March next, unless the President, under the authority conferred upon him by the Constitution, shall call an extraordinary session, there will be no future Congress to enter upon this work until next December; and if this work be postponed until the first Monday of next December, it would probably be late in the spring of 1920 before the taxes would be imposed upon the earnings of 1919.

What is going to happen in the interval? How are producers to fix prices in the interval? Does anybody doubt that when they come to perform this function the principle of self-protection, as well as the principle of selfishness, will prompt or require them to place upon their products a price commensurate with a tax levy of $6,000,000,000, the tax levy provided by the then existing law?

It is said that business people, the manufacturers and the producers, have confidence that in due time this revision and reduction will be made. Ah, Mr. President, the business men of this country are not going to dispose of their products at prices based upon an uncertainty of that kind. They will say, "It is too much to ask us to take the risk. We must assume that the profits upon these goods are going to be taxed upon the basis of the existing law," and they will mark up their profits to conform to this tax and not mark them down to conform to uncertain reduction that they are promised in the future.

What will be the result, Mr. President, if that is done? The effect will be that when the taxable year 1919 shall have expired the great industries of this country will have in their possession $2,000,000,000 already collected from the people in excess of what they ought to have collected if the tax rate had been reduced to the level of the requirements of the Government. After these unnecessary taxes have been passed on to the consumers and been paid by them the minority would remit them not to the consumers who paid them, but to those to whom they paid them in the increased prices of their necessary purchases. If so remitted, the people who paid those taxes will not get their money back nor will the Government get it. Does the minority desire to bring about this situation simply in order that a new Congress of different political control shall have the opportunity of performing the gracious service of relieving the great industries of this country from $2,000,000,000 in taxes, paid indirectly by the people in the increased prices of the necessary things they have bought? The mere statement of the question ought to be sufficient answer to it.

And why, Mr. President, should we not right now proceed to make these reductions? The revenue act of 1916, though it was not approved until the 8th day of September, was passed within eight days of the passage of the increased Army and naval appropriation bills of that year, showing that the consideration of that bill went along in the two Houses contemporaneously with the consideration of the appropriation bills on account of which those increased revenues were laid and levied.

The revenue act of October 3, 1917, followed almost upon the heels of the passage of the appropriations which these increased levies were made to pay. And this year, Mr. President, when, in the latter part of May, we began the consideration of the pending revenue bill, did we not consider it contemporaneously with the consideration of the greatly increased appropriation bills which it was found necessary to pass because of the change in our military and naval policy? We did not wait until the appropriations had been made to begin the preparation of a bill to raise additional revenue on account of those appropriations, which at that stage were largely estimates. Indeed, not all of them were estimated for when work on the revenue bill began. Even after that work began large additional estimates came in.

What were we doing during the last session of the present Congress? The most of our time was spent in passing appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1918 and in changing the revenue law in order to raise the money to meet those appropriation bills. Now a new session of Congress has opened. The time for making appropriations to meet the expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 is here. The estimates are here, much more full and much more reliable than the estimates that were before the Congress when we began the consideration of the present revenue act in April, 1917. In reducing the eight-billion to a six-billion-dollar tax budget for the fiscal year 1919 we are proceeding upon the revised estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, based upon estimates made to him by the different departments of the Government. Are these estimates of reductions in expenditures for this fiscal year so absolutely reliable, so definite and certain that we can afford to cut off two billions of dollars from the revenue bill for 1919 and run no risk, while the estimates made for the fiscal year 1920, which are also in, are so unreliable, so vague and elusive, deceitful, inadequate, and insufficient that we can not afford to do with reference to the expenditures for 1920 the same thing that we propose to do with reference to 1919 in this very enactment?

Oh, Mr. President, let me say that, having considered the revised estimates of the departments and the Secretary for the fiscal year 1920, the estimates for 1920, in my humble judgment, are not less certain and reliable, but much more certain and reliable than the estimates upon which the reductions for the year 1919 are based. I think this could be demonstrated from the figures and the facts.

Are they reliable? What did the Secretary of the Treasury tell us about his estimates for 1919—his estimate that the expenditures could be properly regarded as reducible from twenty-four billions to eighteen billions, making one-third of that amount six billions instead of eight billions?

Mr. SMOOT. Our appropriations were thirty-six billions.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and our expenditures, our estimates for expenditures, and our provision for raising taxes to meet these expenditures have little to do with appropriations. Taxes are controlled by the expenditures, not by appropriations; and in these war times we seem to have adopted the policy of raising one-third as much by taxation as is necessary to defray the expenditures.

The Secretary told the committee that his estimate of eighteen billion expenditures for the fiscal year 1919, upon the basis of which he recommends a six billion instead of an eight billion tax levy for the fiscal year 1919, and on which advice the committee acted with substantial unanimity, was nothing but an enlightened estimate. Some say he used the words "enlightened guess," but what he said was "an enlightened estimate." He explained to us the difficulties. How could he make estimates under existing conditions with absolute certainty? Who can tell how much of these prospective expenditures may now legitimately and properly be lopped off? Who can look into the future and see how many of these so-called war contracts can be canceled, and how much, if they are canceled, the Government will be necessarily and properly required to pay by way of damage and reparation? Who can tell, Mr. President, how soon the soldiers that are in Europe will be brought home, and how many of them can be discharged during the fiscal year in which we are now operating? Who can tell what will be the salvage the Government may reasonably expect to realize within this fiscal year from the sale of the enormous stock of war materials of all characters and kinds which the cessation of war makes it possible to dispose of? Those are problems which can not be treated with certainty, and those were the problems which confronted the Secretary of the Treasury in making the estimates for 1919 upon which we are acting—acting with the unanimous consent of the minority, as well as the majority, of the committee.

Now, Mr. President, compare them with the possible expenditures for 1920. I defy any man to prove that the elements of doubt and uncertainty attaching to the estimates of the possible expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 are any greater than the elements of doubt and uncertainty which attach to the future expenditures of the present fiscal year.

But, Mr. President, the estimates for 1920 are in. They are in the possession of the Committees on Appropriations of this body and the House, and the latter committee is preparing legislation based upon them at this very minute. They will be passed in all probability, at least they are likely to pass at this session of Congress. According to nearly every precedent of this body we have passed the bills to increase the revenue contemporaneously with the passage of the bills appropriating the revenue, and in the name of common sense, if it is proper to adopt such legislation contemporaneously when increases are made, is it not as much if not more appropriate to pass the legislation reducing taxes contemporaneously with legislation reducing expenditures? Any other course would seem to controvene the almost universal custom to reduce taxes when expenditures are reduced.

[At this point Mr. SIMMONS was interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour and afterwards yielded to Mr. FLETCHER.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we have now reached a point in the presentation of the work of the committee with reference to the revenue bill where the subject matter becomes rather uninteresting.

The bill as it came from the House made a very necessary and important change in the present law with reference to income taxes. The present law has two income-tax schedules, making it necessary to calculate the tax on incomes according to the rates in two separate schedules. The House very properly combined these two systems of income taxation into one in this bill. This change will be a great relief to the ordinary taxpayer and will add greatly to the ease and simplicity of the administration of the law.

The House bill—and the Senate had not changed it in that respect—is constructed upon the general lines of the present law. While there are many amendments that do not relate directly to the rates, the general plan has been to retain the structure of the present law and increase the rates, so as to provide for the additional amount of revenue estimated to be necessary.

The committee suggests several changes in the surtax sections of the House bill. It seemed to your committee that the surtax provisions of the House bill were framed without sufficient reference to uniformity and the graduated increases were rather arbitrary in some instances.

For instance, the rates in the House bill start at 2 per cent, and are increased by steps, varying from 1 to 7 per cent, until the maximum of 65 per cent is reached upon incomes in excess of $5,000,000. These steps bear no fixed relation to each other. For example, incomes between $20,000 and $30,000 would pay 8 per cent more tax than incomes between $10,000 and $15,000, while incomes between $90,000 and $100,000 would pay only 2 per cent more than incomes between $80,000 and $90,000. Your committee sought to remedy that by beginning with a surtax of 1 per cent upon incomes in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $6,000, and advancing to a rate of 48 per cent upon incomes in excess of $98,000 and not in excess of $100,000. This advance under the Senate provision is uniform, made by the addition of 1 per cent for each additional $2,000 of income until the $100,000 bracket is reached. Between $100,000 and a million dollars the increases are less uniform and necessarily somewhat arbitrary, reaching 65 per cent at a million dollars, above which the tax remains at 65 per cent. The general effect of those changes is to reduce slightly the surtax upon incomes under $100,000 and to increase slightly the surtax upon incomes in excess of $100,000. The aggregate effect upon the revenue derived is very small. I think it is estimated that the amount that will be realized from surtaxes will be only $23,000,000 less under the Senate rates than under the House rates—$23,000,000 in an aggregate of something over $1,000,000,000.

The Finance Committee made no change in the normal rate provided in the House bill for the fiscal year 1919 on individuals, but we did make a very important change in the tax rates provided by the House bill for the incomes of corporations. The House bill provides a 12 per cent rate on that part of the net income of corporations which is distributed in dividends or paid in the discharge of interest-bearing obligations or in the purchase of liberty bonds issued after September 1, 1918, and imposed a rate of 18 per cent on the balance. That is to say, while earnings devoted to certain uses other than distribution were exempted from the 6 per cent differential, many other equally essential uses, such as addition to plant for purposes of further production, were not similarly recognized. A discrimination was made between the rate on income used in paying off the obligations of the corporation and the rate imposed on earnings retained for the necessary expansion and development of the plant or for the maintenance of its equipment in a state of efficiency. A distinction was made between the rate on income invested by the corporation in liberty bonds and income of the corporation invested in necessary improvements.

The committee has provided for a uniform tax upon the net incomes of corporations, this rate being 12 per cent for the 1918 taxable year and 8 per cent for succeeding years (sec. 230). Under the House bill the 12 per cent rate applied only to so much of the net income as was distributed in dividends, or paid in the discharge of interest-bearing obligations, or in the purchase of liberty bonds issued after September 1, 1918, and on the balance the rate was 18 per cent. While certain essential uses of earnings for purposes other than distribution were recognized, many other such uses of earnings equally essential, such as for additions to plant for purposes of further production, were not recognized. Failure to permit without penalty all legitimate uses of earnings for financing corporations seemed inconsistent with the policy which has in the past been actually followed by well-managed corporations and which has been urged by the War Finance Corporation and the Capital Issues Committee. To retain the differential rate while exempting from the extra tax all income used by the corporation for legitimate purposes other than distribution would, however, make the law difficult of administration, because it would involve review by the Treasury Department of too many detailed questions of the administrative policy of individual corporations. These and other considerations, among which was the fact that corporations are subject to the war excess-profits tax, to which individuals and partnerships are not subject moved the committee to restore the flat-rate system.

Experience has demonstrated the practical impossibility of conducting and maintaining corporate enterprise on a successful basis if all of its annual net earnings are distributed to the stockholders, and this has led to a practice which is practically universal of retaining a reasonable part of these earnings in the business for purposes of betterment, development, and progressive efficiency. This practice has contributed immensely to the rapid and efficient expansion of our great industrial system and should be encouraged and not penalized. It is not difficult to see that the small loss of revenue from the surtax will be more than counterbalanced by this provision, so to speak, of an automatic efficiency and development fund.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it possible to place surtaxes upon corporations? Surtaxes are measured by the total income; and a corporation having a total income of a million dollars would pay, say, 65 per cent of it as a surtax, while it might not be earning any more than 5 per cent on its capital.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that it is absolutely impracticable to impose a surtax on the lump earnings of a corporation. You can not do it for the reason the Senator gives, and you can not do it for many other reasons which I think probably it is not necessary to go into, but which I could elaborate at some length.

Mr. President, there is one matter that gave your committee a great deal of concern. Senators will remember that when the present law was under discussion we all felt that we could not with justice subject what is known as a personal service corporation—that is, a corporation which derives its income chiefly through the activities of the members of the corporation, and whose capital, if any, is a mere incident—to an excess-profits tax, a tax fundamentally based upon the theory that the taxpayer was entitled to a certain exemption based on his invested capital. The question then was how to deal with them. The Senate, as you will recall, thought that the best way to deal with them was to exempt them from the excess-profits tax; but in conference it was insisted that, in addition to the income taxes, these corporations should pay a direct tax as a substitute for the excess-profits tax. This was agreed to and the rate fixed at 8 per cent of the net income. That provision of the present law has provoked much adverse criticism, and is an unsatisfactory way of solving the admittedly difficult problem. The House bill retains the method of the present law and increases the rate to 20 per cent.

The committee, after due consideration, recommend as a fair solution of the problem that this class of corporations be exempt from the profits taxes, but that they be taxed exactly as the bill proposes to tax partnerships. That is to say, that, like a partnership, all of the earnings of such corporation be treated for surtax as distributed whether actually distributed or not. The earnings of such corporations are assigned to the individual members according to the amount of stock held and included in their income-tax returns.

Another very important amendment recommended by the committee may vitally affect the question of the undistributed earnings of corporations. Undoubtedly there are corporations in this country which, without any regard to the requirements of the business, make a habit of retaining a large and unnecessary part of the earnings in the business, or pretending to retain it for business purposes, for the purpose of escaping the surtax. There is no doubt but that there are a number of so-called close corporations, corporations with only a small number of stockholders, that have been organized primarily for the purpose of availing themselves of the privilege of retention to escape surtaxes upon their earnings.

The present law has a provision that would seem adequate to meet that situation, but it fails in adequacy by reason of the use of just one word. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to determine whether these earnings are improperly retained; and if he shall find that they are fraudulently retained or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of escaping taxes they can be taxed as if distributed to the stockholders. The law has been ineffectual because of difficulty in securing evidence to establish fraud. We have, therefore, stricken from the provision of the present law the word "fraudulent"; and it is the belief of the department that as a result the administrative branch of the Government will be able to effectually cope with these fraudulent practices and schemes for evading the tax.

Mr. President, besides the changes to which I have referred, your committee has made quite a number of important amendments intended to relieve against hardships and injustice that have been disclosed in the administration of the present law as the result of the rigid, inflexible definitions of invested capital.

As a result, in the administration of the present law, the department, as these cases have developed, has been forced, to avoid manifest injustice, to resort to alleviative regulations and constructions.

Your committee has adopted and written into the bill the substance of some of these regulations so as to give them the force and effect of law. We have also recommended a series of relief amendments relating to amortization, depletion, and shrinkage in inventories, which, if ratified by the Senate and not eliminated in conference, I think will answer to a very large extent the criticisms of the present law and correct many discriminations and inequalities which have confronted the department in the administration of the existing law. In addition, the committee has prepared a general amendment which we have been in the habit in the committee of speaking of as the relief amendment, authorizing the commissioner to classify in groups certain exceptional cases which seemed to require special treatment to safeguard the taxpayers against injustice. Every corporation which brings itself within the provisions of those classifications is given the benefit, in computing its deductions, of the like or "similar business" section of the bill; that is to say, it will be entitled to the same percentage of deductions that representative concerns in the same line of business are found to be entitled to.

There is another amendment of similar character to the one just mentioned which I regard of great importance. The House in imposing the war-profits tax realized the fact that if the taxpayer is to be taxed 80 per cent upon his net earnings he must be given a very liberal exemption. An 80 per cent tax based upon the principle of an arbitrary exemption of 8 per cent upon invested capital would be a very heavy tax. But when you apply that high rate only to the earnings in excess of the prewar earnings it may or it may not be heavy, according to the size of the prewar earnings.

In any event, the House recognized that liberal allowances must be assured if an 80 per cent rate was imposed, and it seems to have adequately provided for every case except the case of newly established business. An old established business always has an advantage over newly inaugurated business and nothing should be done to increase or accentuate that advantage. Under the House bill an old or prewar business is allowed a deduction of not less than 10 per cent, while a new business is allowed a deduction of not more than 10 per cent. That evidently puts the new business struggling into existence upon an unfair basis of competition with old and established business concerns.

To meet the apparent equities of this situation the committee recommends an amendment providing that in the case of new business the taxpayer should be entitled to the same percentage of deduction as representative corporations engaged in the same line of business, so that if the average deduction of representative business is 12 per cent, or 15 per cent, or 16 per cent, or whatever per cent, the new business is entitled to the same percentage of deduction, thus placing the taxpayer upon a parity with his competitors in the business.

Mr. President, the recommended sundry amendments liberalizing the amortization and the depletion provisions of the House bill—but I will defer discussion as to them until they are reached in the orderly consideration of the bill because of the fact that a proper presentation of them would require more time than I wish to consume in this preliminary statement.

There is another important amendment relating to life insurance companies to which I wish to call brief attention. Speaking personally, from the beginning of these revenue bills up to the present day nothing has given me more trouble than the problem of properly adjusting taxes upon life insurance companies. The committee, with the very able assistance of members of the tax advisory board established in the Treasury Department, and after consultation with many representatives of life insurance companies, recommend an amendment which embodies a scheme for taxing the incomes of life insurance companies which, it is thought, is just and equitable to all interests. The tax is in form an income tax, but is imposed upon a net income defined with special reference to the peculiar conditions of the business of life insurance. Roughly, it consists of the gross income from interest, dividends, and rents, less tax-free interest, investment expenses, and taxes and other expenses paid exclusively in connection with real estate owned by the company. In the case of a domestic life insurance company there is also a specific deduction of $2,000. Thus the tax falls upon the true income of the company—that is, its income from investments—and the rate is so fixed that this tax takes the place of the income tax, war excess-profits tax, capital-stock tax, and the tax on the issuance of policies. It will yield considerably more revenue than the taxes which it is designed to replace, and has the great merit of simplicity and certainty. Above all, it avoids the almost insuperable difficulty of defining the invested capital of a life insurance company for purposes of the war excess-profits tax.

Early in the present session there was much controversy in the committee and on the floor of the Senate, resulting in able constitutional arguments in this chamber by Senators THOMAS, KELLOGG, and KNOX as to the constitutionality of a Federal tax on the salaries of certain State and Federal officials and on the interest of bonds of the States and municipal subdivisions thereof. After mature deliberation the committee decided to recommend an amendment striking from the House bill the provision taxing incomes from State and municipal bonds and modifying the provision as to salaries. It imposes an income tax on all gains, wages, salaries, and so forth, without differentiation. We leave the constitutional question to be settled by the courts when it is raised.

We have also exempted the proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon the death of the insured. The House bill exempts these proceeds from taxation only when paid to an individual beneficiary or to the estate of the insured. We allow the exemption to whomsoever the insurance is payable. I do not think I need to further discuss this subject.

Another exemption recommended by the committee relates to the salaries of soldiers and sailors. We remove the limitation of $3,500 in the House bill, but restrict its operation by adding a provision which limits this exemption to the period of the war and apply to those only in active service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator what he means by the phrase "active service"? Does that apply to the distinguished gentlemen who are in the department here?

Mr. SIMMONS. That may be a matter of administration. It was not intended that the class referred to by the Senator should have the exemption.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to hurry through the excess-profits tax section of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may ask the Senator another question for information, on page 31, section 215, under the title "Items not deductible," you have first family expenses, next amount paid out for new building, next amount expended in restoring property; and then paragraph (d) reads:

> Premiums paid on any life insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee, or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy.

Is that so drawn as to include premiums which are paid on what is known as group insurance as well?

Mr. SIMMONS. That describes what is, I think, called group insurance.

Mr. POMERENE. I was now speaking of the items that are not deductible when I referred to this, and among those items not deductible are premiums paid on life insurance. I am not claiming that it should, I am trying to get the construction the Senator places on the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. POMERENE. Page 31. One of the controversies which we had up before was whether or not premiums paid by a corporation for insurance on the lives of its officers should be subject to a tax or not. In the past bill after it finally came out of conference it was so drawn that the amount paid in premiums would not be deductible, which I think was right. I was not clear in my mind as to whether this paragraph was so framed as to include within the words "premiums paid on life insurance" such premiums as might be payable on what is known as group insurance.

Mr. SIMMONS. Group insurance is deductible except where the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under the policy. That is the meaning of the section the Senator read.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take much time with reference to the war excess-profits taxes. We have retained the rates of the House bill on war profits, but we have slightly reduced the excess-profits tax rates. There was a controversy in the Ways and Means Committee, I am advised, with reference to the matter of increasing the excess-profits tax rates, The Secretary of the Treasury, and perhaps other Government officials connected with the administration of the tax laws, insisted that the excess-profits rates of the present law should not be increased. but that committee decided to increase them and the House ratified that action. There are some large corporations which, while making very large profits on account of large prewar earnings, would not be caught under the 80 per cent war-profits bracket of the bill. They will be reached, if at all, under the excess-profits brackets.

There are several very famous cases of this character. There is one great automobile company, which was making before the war such enormous profits that, under any war-tax scheme which allows a deduction to the full extent of prewar earnings, would pay practically no tax at all. The profits of that concern are now on a parity with the average war profits. The House thought—and with this thought your committee agreed—that as this class of taxpayers would escape a war-profit tax, and we are increasing taxes generally, there ought to be a substantial increase in the excess-profits taxes. But your committee thought the House increase was too great, and it accordingly recommends the middle course between the idea of the Secretary of the Treasury and the idea of the Ways and Means Committee of the House; and presents an amendment to the bill which reduces the House rate, but which materially increases the rate of the present law.

I am advised that in the administration of the present law it has been discovered that what is known as the small corporation has suffered manifest discrimination in the matter of excess-profits taxes; and that condition is not exceptional, but is general with respect to corporations of small earning capacity.

We have sought to relieve against that situation, Mr. President, by an amendment changing very materially the provision for the same purpose which was adopted in the other House. To accomplish the purpose in view, the House provided a limit of not more than 35 per cent where the capital invested was not in excess of $25,000, and a limit of not more than 40 per cent where the invested capital was not in excess of $50,000. It is apparent, Mr. President, that while these provisions would afford some relief it would apply to only a very small number of corporations and would fall far short of meeting the situation. We think we have provided a scheme of dealing with these small corporations which is much more effective and much more equitable.

Mr. POMERENE. In what part of the bill is that?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the excess-profits tax part of the bill. I do not have it here by sections. The amendment, however, provides a limit of 30 per cent on the income of corporations in excess of $3,000 (which is the exemption they are entitled to) and not in excess of $20,000; so that we apply the 30 per cent limit—whether there is a capital of $25,000 or a capital of $50,000, or more, so long as the resulting taxable income falls below $20,000. Twenty thousand dollars represents a good income upon a considerable capitalization. It would be 8 per cent upon $250,000, I believe.

Mr. THOMAS. That is correct.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has stated that, as a matter of practice, there has been a discrimination against the small corporation and in favor of the larger corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. That is what we were advised and that is what I believe.

Mr. POMERENE. What I want to know is how this has come about. The Senator from North Carolina has stated it as a fact, but I am at a loss to understand how it was brought about so that there would be this discrimination against the smaller corporation and in favor of the larger one.

Mr. SIMMONS. Speaking generally, because, their capital being small, their basis of exemption is so small that the bulk of their income becomes subject to the high bracket rates.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to say that the Senator from Ohio will find that there are a great many small corporations with a capital of $10,000, $25,000, or $50,000, where the principal stockholders give their entire time to the business and where the capital, while it is necessary to the business, bears but a small relation to the real earnings of the company. I know of many such corporations who were in the tax returns two years ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. And by reason of their capital being turned over rapidly and the personal service of their officers, who are also stockholders, or more like partners than stockholders, their earnings were very large and the tax even last year took most of their earnings.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will find many corporations with only $20,000 capital with a net income greater than the capital invested, whose exemption would be infinitesimal because of their small capital. In such a case the tax without this provision would be excessive.

The Senate committee has made a number of important amendments to the definition of "invested capital." It would take me quite a time to give the reasons for these changes. And while some of them are important I do not think I shall take the time of the Senate this afternoon to discuss them—they will be fully discussed when reached.

There are two other provisions of the bill, Mr. President, to which I wish to refer. Then I think I shall conclude. I refer to the provision with reference to consolidated returns.

There is nothing in the present law which expressly authorizes such returns, but the department has by construction permitted them as being within its authority. The House bill contains a provision expressly prohibiting such consolidation. I am advised that the Ways and Means Committee were very doubtful about this, and probably would not have inserted the prohibition in the bill if the representatives of the department had been able to say to that committee that permitting this consolidation did not result in a substantial diminution of the revenue from the different units of the consolidated concerns. Since the House committee acted, the question of the effect of allowing these consolidations on the revenue has been carefully investigated by the experts of the department, and your committee was confidently advised that as a result of these investigations it was found that in the aggregate the revenues would not be adversely affected by requiring consolidation.

So far as its immediate effect is concerned consolidation increases the tax in some cases and reduces it in other cases, but its general and permanent effect is to prevent evasion, which can not be successfully blocked in any other way. Among affiliated corporations it frequently happens that the accepted intercompany accounting assigns too much income or invested capital to company A and not enough to company B. This may make the total tax for the corporation too much or too little. If the former, the company hastens to change its accounting method; if the latter, there is every inducement to retain the old accounting procedure, which benefits the affiliated interests, even though such procedure was not originally adopted for the purpose of evading taxation. As a general rule, therefore, improper arrangements which increase the tax will be discontinued, while those which reduce the tax will be retained.

Moreover, a law which contains no requirement for consolidation puts an almost irresistible premium on a segregation or a separate incorporation of activities which would normally be carried as branches of one concern. Increasing evidence has come to light demonstrating that the possibilities of evading taxation in these and allied ways are becoming familiar to the taxpayers of the country. While the committee is convinced that the consolidated return tends to conserve, not to reduce, the revenue, the committee recommends its adoption not primarily because it operates to prevent evasion of taxes or because of its effect upon the revenue, but because the principle of taxing as a business unit what in reality is a business unit is sound and equitable and convenient both to the taxpayer and to the Government. A year's trial of the consolidated return under the existing law demonstrated the advisability of conferring upon the commissioner explicit authority to require such returns.

Mr. President, the Senate committee has made one other amendment of some importance that does not require any elaboration. The House bill with reference to payment of income and profit taxes in installments provided for payment in three installments, the last of the three installments becoming due sometime in June. We have changed that, and provided for payment in four installments, the last of the four installments becoming due in December. The House required all three installments to be paid during the first half of the calendar year, while we extend the four installments over the whole calendar year. That is the difference. Of course, it can readily be seen that a part of the taxes set apart for the fiscal year 1919, under that provision, would not be paid until after June 30, when that fiscal year is ended, and, of course, in that situation the Secretary of the Treasury would probably have to resort to the sale of certificates until these installments fall due; but I do not think that is a difficulty that needs to give us any special concern.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to express my gratification that the committee has arranged to make the taxes payable in installments. Last year they were all made payable in one sum, and when an effort was made by some of us to have them made payable in three or four installments a few of the wiseacres at the Treasury Department thought that it could not be done. I am glad to know, however, that the Finance Committee has found a way to do that very simple thing.

In that connection, this thought has occurred to me: I have heard various statements made as to whether or not this bill was to pass or any bill was to pass at this session. I do not know anything about that. I hope that some bill will pass; but if it does not pass, as a last resort, I hope that there will be some change made in the old law so as to permit of the payment of these taxes in installments. It ought to be done; otherwise, we are going to embarrass a great many of the smaller manufacturing concerns in the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was aware of the Senator's views about this matter, having had many conferences with him, and I have always sympathized with him in his view.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss the changes which we have made in the section of the bill relating to estate taxes, although they are very substantial. In brief, I may say that the difference is that the House provided for an estate tax while the Senate amendment provides for an inheritance tax. The House bill taxed directly the gross estate. The Senate amendment taxes the part coming to each beneficiary under the law, or the will of the decedent. The rates prescribed are very much less than those of the House bill. Your committee did not and does not feel that the Federal Government ought to impose upon inheritances or estates such a heavy tax as would make it practically impossible for the States to avail themselves of this source of taxation without making the joint taxes of the Federal and the State Governments oppressive if not largely confiscatory.

I shall not stop to discuss the changes made in excise, stamp, and special taxes. They can be seen in the bill, and nearly all of them are self-explanatory and do not require any statement.

Mr. President, the committee has made just two other amendments of special importance. I am not going to stop to discuss them in detail, but will content myself with a brief reference to them. I refer to the child-labor amendment——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question regarding the House provision concerning what is commonly known as the tax on luxuries. That is stricken from this bill, is it not?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is stricken out.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator discussed that at all?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not discussed that.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator propose to discuss it?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not. There are two kinds of luxury taxes in the bill. There is one that is imposed upon things that are, because of their nature and use, ordinarily regarded as luxuries because they are not necessaries. We have not stricken all of those taxes out, but have stricken some of them out.

Mr. KENYON. I refer to the tax on high-priced clothing and articles of that kind as a tax on luxuries. That is stricken out?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I am coming to that. The other class of so-called luxuries comprise such things as are not, in essence, luxuries at all, but only become subject to that designation when the price is very high—when the price paid is such as only the rich or of liberal means can ordinarily afford.

Mr. KENYON. The committee has stricken those out.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have stricken those out.

Mr. KENYON. They ought to stay in.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hardly think so; but I do not desire to go into that discussion now. I should be very glad, however, to hear the Senator upon that question if he thinks those taxes ought to stay in the bill.

Mr. KENYON rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not now, if the Senator please.

Mr. KENYON. I suppose it was a fundamental doctrine of the Democratic party that luxuries should be taxed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, we have retained the tax on luxuries, but these are not luxuries; they are necessaries—clothing and similar things.

Mr. President, the child-labor amendment ought not to be passed by with a few observations, and yet on account of the lateness of the hour and my desire to finish this amendment this afternoon I shall consume but a few minutes in discussing it at this time. I wish to say with respect to that matter, however, that I was not in agreement with my colleagues upon the committee. That does not mean that I am opposed to child-labor legislation, but by that I mean only this, and nothing more, that I do not believe that this is a matter which should be dealt with by the Federal Government. I think under the Constitution it involves the exercise of a power which rests exclusively with the States. That was the reason of my opposition in the committee. The committee has decided against my contention, and I know full well the views of a large majority in the Senate coincides with those of a majority of the committee, and I yielded gracefully and shall content myself with registering my protest. I do not feel, however, friendly to legislation—I want to say that now—and I do not care what its character is——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Pardon me; let me finish the sentence—that is framed with a view of evading and defeating a constitutional limitation of power through the abuse of the taxing powers of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, when the Senator made the statement that he was going to stand by the committee on this proposition——

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit to the inevitable.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought the Senator made one of the ablest speeches I ever heard him make; and I am very sorry to hear him spoil it now by these last statements.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President. The Senator should be content when I confine myself to a conservative statement of the grounds of my unfriendliness to this kind of legislation, and gracefully as I can submit to the evident will and power of my associates and colleagues. We can evade the Constitution in the way proposed if we want to. It has been done in the past. It can be done again. There seems to be no way to prevent and defeat an evasion of a constitutional limitation upon the powers of Congress where the evasion is through an exercise of the taxing power.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? I know he is weary, and I am not going to keep him waiting; but can the Senator tell us how much would be raised by this tax on luxuries?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means the 20 per cent tax on luxuries?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. About one hundred and eighty-four millions, I think. I may be mistaken about that, but I think that is the amount. The Senator means the 20 per cent taxes as they appear in the House bill?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I am right about that; but, at any rate, it is quite a considerable amount.

Mr. President, the committee recommends important changes in the first and second class postal rates. It recommends an amendment effective after July 1, 1919, restoring the 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter, letter postage. Secondly, an amendment repealing the present zone system as to second-class matter (newspapers and periodicals), and substituting for it a tax of 1 cent a pound for delivery within the first and second zones (the first zone being 50 miles and the second zone 100 miles), and 1½ cents a pound for delivery in all other zones to be effective July 1, 1919.

I do not wish to enter upon a discussion of these amendments at this time further than to say the Senate committee, when the revenue act of October 3, 1917, was under consideration, struck the provision providing for the so-called zone system out of the bill, and the Senate sustained its action in this behalf, but the provision was restored in conference, under pressure. I do not know what will be the final result in case the Senate adopts the committee amendment to repeal this system; but a majority of the members of the committee felt so strongly about this matter that the committee did not feel it would be justified in failing to do everything possible, though it might eventuate in failure, to secure a repeal of that system of taxation.

At the conclusion of his speech Mr. SIMMONS said:

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask that that motion be withheld for a moment. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has a joint resolution which he wishes to have acted upon to-night.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HARDWICK. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I submit a report (No. 620), accompanied by a joint resolution directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes. I desire to have the joint resolution read—it is very short—and I give notice that I shall then ask for its immediate consideration. It deals with the housing question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed, and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas by the act approved May 16, 1918, the President was authorized to provide housing, local transportation, and other general community utilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenals and other industries in the United States and industries connected with and essential to the national defense and their families, including employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas acting under such powers, by direction of the President, a corporation, known as the United States Housing Corporation, was formed, which corporation has proceeded to enter into the construction of a large number of houses in various parts of the country; and

Whereas one of the projects being carried out by the said United States Housing Corporation is the group of buildings on the depot plaza between the Capitol and the Union Station, in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas it will involve an expenditure of approximately $400,000 to complete and furnish said group of buildings ready for operation, most of which would be saved to the Government if work is suspended; and

Whereas for all practical purposes the war has ended, the employees of the Government residing in the District of Columbia are being rapidly decreased, and there is therefore no necessity for the completion and operation of said buildings as being essential to the national defense for the use of Government employees; and

Whereas in other parts of the country said United States Housing Corporation proposes to proceed with the construction of a large number of buildings now only in the early stages of their construction: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That all work upon said group of buildings upon the plaza between the Capitol and the Union Station, in the District of Columbia, be suspended and all contracts made in reference thereto canceled, and the United States Housing Corporation, representing the Government of the United States in said construction, be instructed to cancel all said contracts.

SEC. 2. That the United States Housing Corporation, representing the Government of the United States, be, and the same hereby is, directed to suspend work upon all projects in which it is now engaged in all cases where the construction is not more than 75 per cent completed, and to cancel all contracts for furniture and to return, wherever possible, all unused furniture on hand or in transit.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina is willing to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, I should like the Senate to dispose of the joint resolution that I have just reported, because I think it means the salvage of large amounts of money for the Government. Every moment's delay is costly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator expect to have the joint resolution passed this evening?

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to put off or delay the consideration of the joint resolution; but, as it stands, personally I feel very much opposed to portions of it, and I doubt very much whether we can dispose of it this evening. I do not want to be put in the attitude of objecting to its consideration, because I do not want to delay it a minute longer than may be necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to delay it. Of course, whenever we do dispose of it, we have got to meet just such questions as that. If we delay meeting them, I think it will cost the Government a large sum of money.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; but the joint resolution has not even been printed, and I only know of it as I heard the Secretary read it. There are, however, parts of it that I believe it is unwise to pass. At least, I shall oppose it in the form in which the Senator has it now, and I shall want to be heard on it briefly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to give the Senator every opportunity to be heard. It is, of course, a serious responsibility that he is taking, because the daily waste is tremendous. The Senator understands that as well as I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but it is also a serious responsibility, it seems to me, to ask for the passage of a joint resolution here without giving any opportunity to have anyone heard, and dispose of it here when it is time to adjourn now.

Mr .HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia was simply asking for consideration of the joint resolution. The responsibility is up to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not objected to its consideration; but I want to suggest to the Senator that unless he expects the Senate to remain in session for some time he would not succeed in disposing of it to-night.

Mr. HARDWICK. I feel that it is my duty, on behalf of the committee, to move to take up the joint resolution; and the Senate can take whatever action it pleases on that motion.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. TRAMMELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is only this about it: Of course, I would have to make the motion without regard to the unfinished business, because we know that the revenue bill is going to be considered for weeks and perhaps for months.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether the joint resolution has been reported from a committee? I did not hear his first statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. The joint resolution is reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and, of course, it goes over for a day if any Senator wants to insist upon that course. I thought, however, that we might as well begin its consideration—it is not 5 o'clock yet—and let the Senate understand what the measure is, and let it go into the RECORD, so that at least it may be considered in the morning hour.

Mr. NORRIS. It is in the RECORD now. I think we can dispose of it in the morning hour to-morrow. The joint resolution will be in the RECORD. The Secretary has read it, and it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think, then, Mr. President, that if no one objects I shall ask to have the report printed in the RECORD; and I give notice to the Senator from Nebraska and to other Senators interested that during the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask, on behalf of the committee, to take up this proposition for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar and the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. HARDWICK is as follows:

The undersigned members of a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds make this preliminary report direct to the Senate, because, in the opinion of the subcommittee, the Senate should be immediately advised regarding the matters herein contained.

Proceeding under Senate resolution 371, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, on the 5th day of December, 1918, convened, and by appropriate resolution authorized the chairman to appoint a subcommittee, of which the chairman of the committee should be chairman, to investigate the matters authorized by said resolution. Thereupon on the same day the chairman of the committee, Mr. REED, appointed the following subcommittee: Senator T. W. HARDWICK, Senator PARK TRAMMELL, Senator B. M. FERNALD, Senator J. I. FRANCE, and Senator I. L. LENROOT.

The committee began taking evidence on the 6th day of December and are still continuing their investigation.

The evidence thus far taken has been largely confined to the housing projects at Washington, and especially the housing project on what is commonly known as the Depot Plaza grounds, being the grounds between the Capitol and the Union Station. This evidence has all been given by Mr. Otto M. Eidlitz, Director of Housing and Transportation of the Department of Labor and president of the United States Housing Corporation, a subsidiary corporation which was created to perform the functions of the bureau, or his associates, and is to the effect that the building project referred to consists of 12 dormitories, each of these dormitories being in fact doubled, so that they may be treated as 24 dormitory buildings, or 1,800 rooms.

In addition to the dormitories there is a hospital building, a laundry costing approximately $35,000, and an administration building, containing a cafeteria, offices, and an assembly hall about 55 by 80.

The evidence shows that the dormitories are over 90 per cent finished. Some of them are completed or substantially completed The administration building is likewise substantially completed. The hospital building is little more than inclosed, while the walls of the laundry building are in process of construction. The estimate of Mr. Eidlitz is that the entire project will cost when completed, including furnishings, approximately $2,100,000; that it will cost approximately $100,000 of labor to complete the buildings; that to furnish the buildings will cost about $275,000; and that to complete the laundry, with machinery installed, will cost $35,000. According to the revised estimates of Mr. Eidlitz, if the materials on hand, including the laundry machinery and furniture, were turned back (which Mr. Eidlitz thinks can be done at a small loss) and the project stopped in its present situation, approximately $400,000 would be saved. That is to say, the Government would not have to pay out some $400,000 which it will be compelled to do if it carries through the enterprise.

Mr. Eidlitz further estimates that the buildings will probably not be needed for a period longer than 12 months. Of course, it necessarily follows that the furniture and fixtures, being then in a secondhand state, they would not produce any very large salvage. As the number of occupants is estimated at 1,800 and the term of occupancy would not exceed 12 months, and as it is admitted that the enterprise, if completed, will cost the Government an additional $400,000, it will be noted that the Government must expend for this period of 12 months' occupancy for each occupant approximately $220.

This raises sharply the question whether the enterprise should be carried on and the Government should open what would be in reality a 1,800-room hotel, furnished and run by the Government, including meals, and at the same time should equip and furnish a laundry and do the laundry work and furnish an assembly hall at a cost of $400,000 additional, the entire enterprise to be discontinued and probably wrecked at the end of 12 months. The answer to this question must be affected by the necessity existing.

It is admitted, first, that the war for all practical purposes is over and that there must be a large decrease of Government employees in the city of Washington. Your committee has sent out inquiries to ascertain how rapidly the number of Government employees brought to Washington because of the war will be diminished. Up to this time the replies to these inquiries are just beginning to come in. The replies already received indicate a reduction in the force of most of the departments heard from of from 15 to 20 per cent since November 11, the date of the signing of the armistice, and indications are that the force in all of the departments that were engaged in war work other than the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, will be rapidly reduced.

It seems to your committee that the conclusion is irresistible, that in view of these conditions there is no necessity commensurate with the expenditure necessary for the completion of these buildings for the housing of employees, but, on the contrary, it would entail a tremendous loss upon the Government which can not be justified upon any sound business principles.

The attitude and purpose, however, of the United States Housing Corporation is to proceed to the full completion and operation of these buildings unless Congress shall otherwise order. Therefore, if any action is to be taken by Congress suspending these operations, it must be done immediately.

Your committee has made a preliminary investigation of a large number of other projects and from such preliminary investigation it is of the opinion that some projects are proposed to be completed that are even more indefensible than the one we have been considering. A number of these are in their very early stages and notably one which was brought to the attention of the committee where the foundations only of the group of buildings have been completed. Nevertheless the United States Housing Corporation proposes to fully complete those buildings at an expenditure of a very large sum of money, notwithstanding the fact that for all practical purposes the war has ended.

Your committee proposes to make further investigation of these matters, but would recommend that Congress take action suspending all operations until otherwise authorized by Congress, of all operations where the same have not been more than 65 per cent completed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion I made a few minutes ago that the Senate adjourn. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] indicates that he desires a short executive session. Therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 10, 1918.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Robert W. Davis to be register of the land office at Gainesville, Fla.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Perry M. Colson to be receiver of public moneys at Gainesville, Fla.

POSTMASTER.

GEORGIA.

Robert H. Wheless, Nashville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we pray Thee this morning that our pathway may be clear and that we may have the strength and courage to walk therein. Help us to see the right with unclouded eyes and obey the truth with fidelity. For our country and all its righteous causes we pray Thy blessing this morning; for all in authority and for those who do the right in the name of God, and for the good of man, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of retirement from Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of retirement from Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report (No. 844) from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 469.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to the officers, membership, financial support, expenditures, general character, activities, and purposes of the National Security League, a corporation of New York, and of any associated organizations, that purport to be organized or engaged in or have been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election, or defeat of Representatives in Congress during the year of 1918.

Said committee shall also inquire and ascertain whether charges affecting the loyalty of Representatives in Congress have been made by said organizations; and if so, by whom, and upon what information, testimony, or record; and it shall ascertain whether said organizations have complied with the provisions of law in the filing of expense accounts; and for such purposes it shall have power to send for persons and papers and enforce their appearance before said committee and to administer oaths; and the said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have the right to sit at such times and places, in or out of the city of Washington, as the committee may deem advisable, and shall have the right to report at any time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to secure an agreement as to the time for debate on the resolution. I have had no requests for time on this side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I listened to the reading of the resolution, but do not know that I am able to interpret accurately its meaning. Does the resolution propose to limit the committee to finding out whether this Security League charged Members with disloyalty?

Mr. POU. I think its scope is wider than that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There ought not to be any doubt about it. You can injure a candidate very seriously by misrepresenting the effect of his vote, even though the misrepresentation may not amount to charging him with disloyalty. I think the resolution should be read again.

Mr. POU. The committee is authorized to "make a report as to the officers, membership, financial support, expenditures, general character, activities, and purposes of the National Security League, and of associated organizations." The scope, it seems to me, is sufficiently wide for a thorough inquiry.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman from North Carolina think the word "activities" is sufficient to cover what I have stated that I have in mind?

Mr. POU. If "activities" does not do it, "purposes" would.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There ought not to be any question about it.

Mr. POU. I can hardly see how the scope could be much wider.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A man may have a purpose and do nothing to effect it, and so might a corporation.

Mr. POU. This says, "general character, activities, and purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution again for the information of the House and of the Speaker.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise to inquire what the committee intended to be included under the designation of "associated organizations"? In Wisconsin, if the gentleman will permit, there was formed in the city of Milwaukee, which had a Statewide scope, an organization known as the Patriotic Congressional League, one of the leaders of which was Willet Spooner, son of former Senator John M. Spooner, and a member of the executive committee of the National Security League. The National Security League of New York has a large membership and a branch in the State of Wisconsin. This Patriotic Congressional League had officers collecting thousands of dollars, and they failed to make any return under the State law which required a return of expenditures. My question is whether the Patriotic Congressional League, that had for its purpose the elimination from Congress of all the Members from the State of Wisconsin who voted against war, and which was one of the main purposes of the National Security League, would be investigated under the phraseology "associated organizations"?

This organization failed to comply with the requirements of the State law. In fact, they had emissaries going around the city of Milwaukee, to my knowledge, soliciting funds of $49.50 from business interests, so that each individual would not be required to make an individual return under the State corrupt-practices act. Large manufacturers of war supplies stated that they would be willing to spend thousands of dollars to defeat me, and yet they made no returns. My direct query is whether under this phraseology the activities of the Patriotic Congressional League will be investigated?

Mr. POU. I will say that the purpose of the committee was to include just such organizations as the gentleman refers to. My own opinion is that the wording of the resolution would include an organization such as described by the gentleman. If the wording is not comprehensive enough to include such an organization, the committee would be perfectly willing for it to be amended.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to know that the purpose of the committee is to cover the investigation of organizations of that character.

Mr. POU. Any associated organization for the identical purpose would come within the purview of the resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. The word "associated" would limit the activity of the committee, because the committee would have to find at the outset that it was directly associated, and it might be difficult to prove or show the connection. Would not the words "similar organizations" cover the point so as to include such an organization?

Mr. POU. The committee would have no objection to adding the word "similar." May I ask how much time the gentleman from Kansas thinks he will desire?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest we agree upon an hour on a side, and if the time is not called for after we get into the debate we will not use it.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that at the end of two hours, one hour to be controlled by myself and one hour by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he shall have one hour and the gentleman from Kansas one hour, and at the end of the two hours the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will that preclude amendments, if that motion be adopted?

The SPEAKER. Amendments to the rule?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To the resolution. Will we have to proceed immediately and vote on the resolution without amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is considered as ordered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from North Carolina modify his request so that amendments may be offered?

Mr. POU. I will. I do not desire to cut amendments out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Strike out the request for the previous question and ask that we go to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The ordinary rules of the House will prevail, and if the gentleman from North Carolina uses an hour and lets nobody else in to offer an amendment, and the gentleman from Kansas does the same thing, and at the end of the two hours the previous question is ordered, that is the end of the amendment business.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Are we considering the resolution that has been reported by the Committee on Rules or are we considering the rule from that committee?

The SPEAKER. We are considering the resolution reported by the committee. That is why the Chair got mixed up about it.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire if I may have 15 minutes?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to say that there is no request for time on this side of the House.

Mr. POU. I just had a request for 15 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Would the gentleman's request necessarily consume two hours?

The SPEAKER. Oh, a gentleman can quit whenever he pleases inside of his hour.

Mr. POU. I am going to use but 15 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to get along with the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. A man does not have to talk an hour unless he wants to do so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To ask the gentleman from North Carolina another question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the phraseology in lines 6, 7, and 8—that purport to be organized or engaged in or have been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election—and so forth. That is not good language, "or engaged in or have been directly or indirectly engaged in the nomination, election," and so forth.

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman to offer any amendment he sees fit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, most certainly it ought to be amended there.

Mr. POU. I would like to get the time settled. I will yield to the gentleman 5 minutes or 10 minutes, as he desires.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is this two hours' limitation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One hour on a side, with the previous question to be ordered?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the request is that the gentleman from North Carolina have an hour and the gentleman from Kansas an hour if he wants to use that much of it, and at the end of the two hours, or the end of the debate if it collapses sooner, the previous question is considered as ordered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from North Carolina modify the request to do away with the previous question?

Mr. POU. I am willing to let it be modified, leaving out the previous question being considered as ordered, because I do not want to cut off amendments.

Mr. MANN. That would amount to about the same thing. There would be no debate at the end of the two hours anyhow.

Mr. POU. I am trying to satisfy gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman asks unanimous consent, pending the two hours' debate, that it shall be in order to offer amendments by anybody who gets the floor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman amend his request?

Mr. POU. I will.

The SPEAKER. And that pending this two hours' debate it shall be in order to offer amendments without the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Kansas either one yielding the floor. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. At the expiration of the two hours, then, will the resolution be taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule by paragraphs or in its entirety as one motion?

The SPEAKER. Why, it is just like any other resolution. If the previous question is not ordered, it is subject to amendment and debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I shall only consume a very few minutes of the time of the House. Most of the Members of the House are familiar with the activities of the National Security League. It appears that this is an organization of the State of New York which has undertaken to pass upon the fitness of Members to sit in this body. But for a few things that have developed in the course of the preliminary investigation the National Security League would not be of sufficient importance to justify an investigation, but it has appeared that a large amount of money was raised and expended by this organization. I believe it is admitted that something over a million dollars was raised by the gentlemen who have charge of this organization. This is a large amount of money. Certain gentlemen who stand high in the esteem of the people of this Nation have lent their names to the organization. Now, this organization has undertaken to prescribe a certain standard by which men must stand or fall as Members of this body.

If they attain to the standard of the organization, they get a clean bill of health. If they fail to reach such standard, the organization goes into the districts of those men to accomplish their defeat if possible. Remembering that the concern has been able to raise more than a million dollars, this fact presents quite a serious question. It matters not how hard a man may work here, how patriotic he may have been, unless he comes up to the standard of this Security League he must go down in defeat. There are some gentlemen who were working for some of the things this organization claims to stand for long before it saw the light of day. Among that number is the Member who is addressing the House at this time. Long years before the National Security League was heard of I was doing what I could to convince the House of Representatives in my humble way that this Nation should maintain a great Navy. I never could see any sense in having a Navy just big enough to be defeated. I wanted a Navy big enough to defeat any other navy in the world. And I stand for that now. I except the navy of no nation. Under Mr. Roosevelt, for once in my life, I stepped out of line with my own party and voted for four battleships, and everything in the world that I could do to strengthen the naval or military power of the Government I have done here, in a humble way though it may be, for 17 years. But because I did not vote for three or four amendments to great measures this National Security League, so I am told, rates me as 50 per cent patriotic. I have been standing here all these years doing what I could, ready to give my all to my country, my two boys, the only boys I have, volunteering, and one of them sleeping beneath the sod of France; and yet I must be recorded as 50 per cent patriotic. I spit in the face of a man who impugns my patriotism or my loyalty. [Applause.]

It is no light matter, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, in an hour like this, to have a man's patriotism or his loyalty to his country impugned. I will not say loyalty, because if I am not patriotic I am nothing. I do not want any man to call me loyal. Loyalty keeps me out of jail. Patriotism is my love for my country and my flag, a love that is willing to give all, life itself, if necessary.

I say this would not have been such a serious matter if it had not been for the powerful names behind this organization and the great amount of money they have been able to raise. Now, I say this, so far as these gentlemen are concerned who constitute this National Security League, if they go before the American people with clean hands they need not fear an investigation. [Applause.] If their motives are clean, if their purposes are patriotic they should welcome an investigation. They should have no objection to it. On the other hand, if there is a sinister purpose behind this organization, if it shall develop in this investigation that some man is using this organization to start a propaganda here for a selfish purpose, then the people of America are entitled to have this investigation in order that the whole truth may come out. So I say, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules was justified in reporting this resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. Does this National Security League recommend the defeat of any Member of Congress or the election of any Member that the gentleman knows of? That is just a matter of inquiry.

Mr. POU. My information is that it recommended the defeat of all Members who did not come up to their standard of parliamentary excellence.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield? I have plenty of information of specific cases where they recommended the defeat of different candidates.

Mr. POU. And they actually undertook to appraise the fitness of Members to sit in this body. I say it would be laughable but for the great names and the great amount of money behind this thing. Ordinarily it would be a joke for any set of men to arrogate to themselves the power to pass upon the fitness of all candidates for the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, Members of this body have differed and always will differ, but there is no dividing line when the patriotism of men who sit in this Chamber is considered. [Applause.] As a rule we have all stood shoulder to shoulder in supporting the administration in this war, in doing all that could be done to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that a whole lot of other organizations do exactly the same thing, like the Anti-Saloon League, and so forth, in seeking to influence elections to Congress?

Mr. POU. So far as I am advised and informed, I hardly think the gentleman will be able to find an exact parallel to the activities of this particular organization.

Now, I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I believe that this resolution is justified. I think the House of Representatives ought to pass it and order this investigation. If the purposes of this organization are clean, then no one of its members can object to an investigation. If they are unclean, then the world ought to know it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution raises a very important question in connection with the law that we have placed upon our statutes with respect to activities of committees in campaigns. If this National Security League can participate in a campaign as it participated in the last campaign, without let or hindrance, other organizations for other purposes can take a like active part. For instance, the Anti-Saloon League could come out in the open as this organization came out in the open. The Protective Tariff League could come out in the open as this came out in the open. A free-trade league could come out into the open as this came out in the open, without publishing the names of contributors or filing the expenses that they have been to in the conduct of a campaign for or against Members. Either we should repeal the law that prohibits political committees from activity in the election or defeat of Members of Congress altogether or we should see to it that no exception is made, not even of a committee with the high-sounding name borne by the National Security League. In addition to what has been stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], no committee, however organized or of whatever political proclivity, has ever indulged in the slimy politics that was indulged in by this organization. [Applause.] It resorted through the publicity it had in the newspapers to the grossest misrepresentation as to facts.

It magnified trivial amendments into matters of the greatest possible importance. It took an amendment of a few lines in a bill of 30 pages, an amendment which of itself only added to the purpose of the bill or resolution and made it appear that Members of Congress were opposed to every line in the bill or resolution of thirty-odd pages because they voted for an amendment of three or four lines which really perfected and made effective the bill or resolution itself.

Let me illustrate a misrepresentation. The McLemore resolution was magnified into a war measure by this organization. The McLemore resolution followed a policy of the administration. On the 18th of January, 1916, long, long before we were in the war or dreamed of going into it, the administration, through the Secretary of State, published to the world that the armed merchantmen of belligerent nations should be considered as armed cruisers, and therefore nations were notified that our Government was contemplating denying those ships clearance from our ports. This was on the 18th day of January, 1916. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. MCLEMORE, introduced his resolution in February, 1916, to give effect to the administration's purposes. Something happened. There was a change in the attitude of the administration. I am not questioning the purpose of the change; I am simply stating the effect of it. The administration opposed what it had favored some five weeks before, and on the 7th day of March, when the McLemore resolution was under consideration, Members of this House on both sides voted for the conception they had of an armed cruiser on the 18th day of January, as they secured it from the Secretary of State. The American people went through a political campaign months after that. The result of that campaign was the election of a candidate for the Presidency upon a peace platform. And yet the National Security League made men in your district and in mine believe that if you voted not to lay the McLemore resolution on the table you voted for the resolution while our country was engaged in war or after a declaration of war had been made.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman means voted for tabling, not for the resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; but the league did not say that men voted to table the resolution or against tabling it. It said that men voted for the resolution, and the impression that people in the country had was that Members of this House voted for the McLemore resolution. Not a Member of this House voted for the McLemore resolution. It is doubtful if a dozen Members on this floor would have voted for the McLemore resolution without amendment. Every man who had convictions upon the subject involved at all would have voted for a concrete proposition of three or four lines on the subject, declaring the purpose of the Government of the United States to advise its citizens not as to what their rights were but as to what they should do as a matter of wisdom under the circumstances, and not take passage on the armed cruisers of any of the countries at war.

So much for the McLemore resolution. Now, upon another question: It was stated throughout the country, in every congressional district, that certain Members of Congress voted against the draft law. There is not a Member of this House who voted against the draft law. The National Security League published a falsehood. It said that every man who voted against the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to strike out of the Army bill that provision that provided for 500,000 volunteers in six months and 500,000 more after another six months voted against conscription, which is a falsehood in cold type. [Applause.]

No man, I say, voted against conscription or the draft. The Army bill provided three ways of raising an army. First of all was the draft; second was the filling up the quotas of the Regulars and State troops; third, 500,000 volunteers in six months and 500,000 in a year if in the discretion of the President they were needed. That was the report of the Committee on Military Affairs. That was the bill that Members came upon this floor ready to support on both sides. The gentleman from California moved to strike out the provision for volunteers. Many of us believed in the volunteer—in the right of the boys to volunteer. We did not want to strike that out of the bill. It was falsely published all over the United States that the Speaker of this House made a bitter attack on conscripion. He made a valiant and forceful speech on the right of men to volunteer. [Applause.] In the argument that ensued upon the motion of the gentleman from California there was a heated debate on the relative merits of conscription and volunteers. It naturally arose. But there was no question at any time upon this floor about raising an army by conscription for the prosecution of this war, and the National Security League knew that when it published all over this country the falsehood that Members voted against the draft law. I repeat that not a Member of this House voted against the draft law except such Members as voted against the Army bill altogether. Any Member who voted for the Army bill voted for the draft law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is correct in that last statement. There were 390 or more that voted for the bill which contained the conscription provision, and a few more than 20 who voted against it. Will the gentleman permit me to add a word right there?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I saw in my district repeated statements in newspapers denouncing our distinguished Speaker and the distinguished minority leader of the House by name as having voted against conscription. I corrected that statement at least half a dozen times in speeches, and yet the same statements were afterwards repeated over and over again, notwithstanding I exhibited the RECORD to show the falsehood of the statements.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman meant the majority leader of the House as having been mentioned by name.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; I meant the majority leader—Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In the last three days of the campaign, in order to emphasize anything it might have overlooked, the National Security League republished and sent out as a fresh reminder to every country weekly of every political faith a restatement of the falsehoods that I have indicated with respect to the votes of Members, and what I have said about the McLemore resolution and the draft law is equally true about every other proposition that it published. It was a film of falsehood and misrepresentation, of half-truths throughout. Why, a political organization found in any ward or precinct in any city in this country that indulged in that kind of politics would be anathematized by all respectable people in the community. I am amazed that the respectable gentlemen whose names appear in connection with this organization have permitted its activities along the lines upon which it participated in this campaign.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me an interruption?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Alabama has kindly brought here the RECORD of April 28, 1917. Page 1557 of the RECORD shows that on the final vote on the Army bill, which then contained the clause providing for conscription, there were 397 yeas and 24 nays, just as the gentleman has said.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am glad to have the confirmation of the RECORD.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean to say that the fight on the Kahn motion was not distinctly a fight over conscription?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I mean to say that it was a fight against the right of men to volunteer.

Mr. PLATT. It was a fight against conscription.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The clause for conscription was read. Not a word was said; not a motion was made. The clause was agreed to without a single objection. The next clause was read, providing for filling up the quotas of the National and State troops, and not a motion was made; not a word was said. That was agreed to. Both those propositions were agreed to without debate. The next clause was read, providing for volunteers. Then the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] moved to strike that out of the bill, and it was upon that motion that the debate arose. It was upon that motion that the votes were had.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The particular language which the gentleman from California moved to strike out, and which was stricken out, expressly provided that nothing herein—that is, in the language stricken out—shall in any wise delay or interfere with conscription or the enforcement of the draft. It was not intended to interfere with the conscription.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The intention of the Kahn motion was to prevent men from volunteering. That was the intention of the motion. That was the effect of the motion.

Mr. RUCKER. And the intent of those who voted against the motion was to let men volunteer if they wanted to?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why, certainly; and there never was any other intention. As to whether or not we could have raised an army more quickly by permitting a million volunteers than by waiting for more than six months before a single man was in uniform under the draft, that question is past; but the question is now fresh in the minds of the country that this great organization, the American Security League, misrepresented before the American people matters of great importance in a legislative way, affecting the rights of Members of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is interesting to note that the War Department raised about a million volunteers, however, by the very same plan that was stricken out of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They did that under the provision for filling the quotas of the Regulars and the State troops.

Mr. ANTHONY. They did that of their own volition afterwards, recognizing the fact that the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs was correct in the first place, and it was subsequently indorsed by the War Department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Every congressional district represented here furnished volunteers, but the volunteer provision was stricken out of the bill for some reason, and men who voted to retain it in the bill were branded all over the country as disloyal, unfit for places in this House, by this great organization—great not because of its activities but because of the names that it bears upon its roster, but infamous because of the amount of money it was able to raise by its false misrepresentations as to its purposes and the necessity for its existence.

This resolution should be agreed to, and an investigation of the activities of this organization should be made. It should be ascertained as to whether or not it has complied with the laws relative to elections in the United States; and if not, steps should be taken such as are proper with respect to political organizations that have not complied with the law.

I reserve the remainder of my time. Will the gentleman from North Carolina use some now?

Mr. POU. There are no requests for time on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up the time of the House any further than to say that I am very heartily in favor of the adoption of this resolution. The fact is that the loyalty of fully 90 per cent of the membership of this House has been challenged by this organization known as the National Security League, with headquarters in the city of New York. The widest possible publicity was given to these sensational charges of disloyalty. Billboards were utilized, street-car advertising was employed, newspaper space was hired, literature was sent broadcast throughout the country; in fact, nothing was left undone to discredit Members of Congress who voted on various bills and whose votes did not conform to the peculiar standards of patriotism set up by this league of self-constituted censors. It is also well known that in many instances the records of Members of Congress were deliberately falsified and their votes intentionally misrepresented. It was stated before our committee by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that the league, according to its own admission, spent the enormous sum of $1,200,000 in this reprehensible effort to place a stigma upon the character and the reputation of the great majority of the Members of this House. One million two hundred thousand dollars is a pretty large sum of money, even at this time, when we are accustomed to talking in billions. I think it is most important that we should know where this money came from. We are entitled to know who it was that financed this campaign of vilification and misrepresentation. The country is entitled to know whether the men who contributed to this enormous fund were influenced solely by patriotic motives or whether they did not after all have some ulterior purpose to serve. An investigation of this kind will uncover the truth. It will reveal the real motives back of this attack upon the Americanism of the membership of this House. I believe that Congress owes it to itself, to its own dignity, to its own sense of self-respect, to order a full and searching investigation into all the activities of the National Security League, its auxiliaries, and the influences back of them.

Now that the question is up, if we should fail to take this action, every sneering critic of Congress in the country will at once construe it as an admission on our part of the truthfulness of the charges, and I undertake to say that the National Security League would be among the very first to assert that when given an opportunity the American Congress did not have the courage to order an investigation of charges reflecting upon the honor, the integrity, and the Americanism of its membership.

For these reasons I am in favor of the adoption of the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the resolution nor to delay its passage for a moment. I have discussed the Security League on two different occasions—on September 23 and on December 4—when I placed before the House fully the character of this organization which you are called upon to investigate. There is nothing need be added to that. I have made a prima facie case; and, further than that, the Rules Committee, without argument, has unanimously reported the resolution. I have a different purpose, of which I will speak.

First, I wish to read two letters which I received in this morning's mail, among four I hold all to the same purpose. One is from a leading lawyer, I apprehend, in New Jersey, in which he says, under date of December 6, 1918:

> You are on the right side of this matter. I became a member of this league in its inception, whose purposes I approved of. However, I have watched the course pursued by the very able gentlemen who are really the Security League and have become convinced that it is a sinister organization as now officered and conducted.
> You will find, if you succeed in getting an investigation of it, that you will meet with the plaudits of a vast number of thinking people in this country, in fact a large majority of the people who know anything of the scope and purposes of the activities of this league during the last campaign.

Now, let me read a brief extract from a letter from Boston. It is under a printed letterhead, and I assume from its tone that the writer is reliable. He writes—

> Nothing that has happened in Congress for a long time has given so much real satisfaction and positive joy as has your attack on the National Security League. I joined the league in 1915 supposing it to be just what it purported to be, an organization to further reasonable preparedness for war. * * *

The last paragraph is as follows:

> Feeling as I do, I shall naturally follow the course of your investigation with intense interest. I hope very earnestly that such a gang of irresponsible, hypocritical tyrants may be thoroughly shown up as they deserve and their organization collapse.

I have another letter from Chicago and another from Ohio along the same lines, apart from many others received heretofore. Gentlemen who were members of the organization were misled as to the general purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the league further. As I have said, the Rules Committee has reported this resolution unanimously. You do not want to mistake the character of the proposition you are up against. These gentlemen are able, they hold great power that can be exercised, because there are many propositions involved in such an investigation, and all influences will be brought to bear.

Over a dozen years ago, if you will permit a personal allusion, in my own State I drew a resolution as vigorously as I could draft it attacking irregularities in the insurance companies of this country. I knew what they had been doing. That was before the Armstrong investigation was actually begun and the resolution was based largely on the Lawson statements. In Wisconsin the legislature created a committee with full power to investigate and I was elected chairman of that investigation. We spent 130-odd days in investigation, and spent over $40,000. It was the basis of insurance legislation in Wisconsin, and I am sure it was of value because I never heard criticism of that investigation, although it was very expensive and of the longest duration of anything ever held of that kind.

Before we undertook the investigation I went to one of the ablest examiners in the United States, as he is conceded to be, and I said to him, "Mr. Hughes, tell me what we can do in this matter to get at the bottom of the case." We wanted to employ him. He said in reply by way of illustration that for two days in one case he was cross-examining an insurance witness, and he was about to drop the witness when it turned out that the witness mentioned something which completed a most important link in the evidence connecting up the yellow-dog fund and its contribution to the campaign of a Republican candidate and other illegal use of funds. Remember that there were powerful influences brought to bear on that committee, and frequently its members were not in sympathy with Mr. Hughes, but it was forced upon them by his fearless probe.

I could mention other things which I do not care to repeat now to show the necessity of a strong, thorough cross-examination by this committee. Why do I do this? Personally I would rather be relieved of any further connection with this work which I have undertaken simply because it is prosecuted for the House and for the good name of the House and in no way is a personal matter. Let me say that whether I care or not, it is fair to assume that I will not be on the committee, and I shall not be.

Possibly I am too aggressive, but we will never get anywhere with this investigation unless we go to the bottom of it. Who are the men that challenge attention at this time? Who are the league's officers that have falsely traduced this body? What is their purpose? They say that they want compulsory military training. That is one purpose, irrespective of terms of peace. This junker organization that wants to force militarism upon us has other interests to further as well. I would like to show you the far-reaching influence of some of its officers, where they go and how far they go, in Mexico and elsewhere—these men who have been writing you and demanding that you respond within 10 days as to your position on public questions. There are other great influences that will be brought to bear here. The organization for the return of the railroads, headed by Mr. Root, can not be ignored, and their influence may be more powerful than we realize. I am satisfied that any committee selected here will do the best it can, and that those who are selected are sure to exercise the best judgment they have, but the responsibility is great.

That committee must do the work. You have provided no lawyers by this resolution; you have Hughes; you have no one excepting yourselves; and you have got to go down into this probe and keep at it for many days. It means work. I have worked many days in developing what I have presented to you, and I know what it means. It has not really started yet. I do not want to go on the committee, and I thank the gentlemen who have anticipated my preference. A number of my friends have said to me that they want me on the committee, but I have said frankly just how I feel in the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. In a moment. It has been suggested I might be a prosecutor. That is impossible, for it is not my matter any more than it is yours. I would not go upon the committee in that rôle nor in the rôle of clerk of the committee. The gentlemen who are appointed on the committee can do these things and they can get good results through hard work, but they will have great opposition interests to meet.

Mr. KING. I want to say that I think it would be a misfortune to this House if the gentleman did not go on the committee.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion, and I do not impugn any of the motives of those who have doubted the wisdom of my being there. They think that I am too aggressive. That may be true, but you can not fight the Kaiser and his legions with a corporal's guard of pacifists. Nor can you meet this crowd of influential slanderers with kid gloves. You have got to go after these men who have been charging you with disloyalty. Will you accept that insult? You would knock a man down who would say that to you personally, would you not? Then why treat these public slanderers with gentle hands? You must act in the same rôle as a prosecuting officer. What is his purpose? He is supposed to have a judicial function, but he prosecutes to the limit to get the facts. And that is exactly what must be done here to ascertain the facts and present them to the House. The House itself is the one that will pass on the facts and will determine what shall be done, what judgment shall be imposed, but the committee must go to the bottom in its probe. If it does not it will carry to the country a wrong impression of these charges of disloyalty against the House and what they mean. Some Members suggest that this league should be brought to book because it has failed to make its report to the Clerk of the House. What a superficial suggestion! A thousand dollars fine for an organization engaged in spending a million dollars a year! That is not the point at all. We must bring these men here and say: "You charge this House with disloyalty. Why do you do it? What is behind that charge? Is it universal military training, is it junkerdom, or what is the motive for this campaign of falsehood and libel?"

Mr. Speaker, I believe it goes further than that. Is it the contribution of munition makers? I believe it is greater than that. Gentlemen will remember when I began my fight against certain legislation in the House. It was a very disagreeable thing to undertake, but I did it for the sake of better legislative standards. That was my motive entirely when I attacked the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the public-hearings bill. I met with discouragement and slurs from men I thought ought to have given me encouragement. My hope was for better legislation. Whether I succeeded to any degree or not you know. That has been my only purpose in making those fights, and so I say to you, gentlemen, that whatever may be the results, whoever may be appointed on this committee, I hope you will go on and make a thorough probe and ascertain those who are the responsible parties. Do not for a moment ignore the fact that the interests you are probing will bring every effort to cover up their tracks to discredit your work.

Let me say, in conclusion, to my mind this is the most important investigation that this House has undertaken for years. It means much for the integrity of the House and the integrity of the individual Members and the honor of the House, as my good friend from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] said, more than anything else I can think of. Those who treat it lightly have strange standards of right and wrong and of public responsibility.

I wish to speak now a word to the committee, of which I shall not be a member. Do not fail in this investigation. Go to the bottom of it. It is your duty to work to the limit, because it requires work to accomplish things. I have made a prima facie case. I can do more than that with the data collected, but much of it has to be dug out on cross-examination, the same as in every other successful probe, and it must be done in this case. Do not permit it to fail. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that it was lese majeste to criticize the vote of a Member of the House of Representatives, but, according to this resolution, doubtless it is. Any body of men or any individual who dares to criticize a Member of this House for voting in a certain way must be investigated and cross-examined and put on the grill and have his motives questioned, and if possible you must find out that he is connected with some munition factory or something of the kind. The purpose of this resolution seems to be to try to make out a sinister motive back of the National Security League. If you are going to investigate the National Security League, or if you ought to investigate it, then you ought to investigate all of the other numerous organizations which are doing the same thing. The Anti-Saloon League seeks to influence the election of Members of Congress, and everybody knows their literature is sent broadcast, and they are spending large sums of money. The Woman Suffrage Association seeks to influence the election of Members of Congress. The labor unions and many other organizations do the same thing to some extent.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the Anti-Saloon League accused anyone of being disloyal?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that it has. I am not quite sure about that, but the German-American Alliance sought to influence Members of Congress and their election. They got out a circular against me in 1916, which I have proudly framed on the walls of my office at this time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. What do we want to do? We ought to go into a general investigation of all these organizations if we are of one.

Mr. GORDON. The German-American Alliance contributed a large amount of money to the Republican State campaign in New York in 1916, just the same, and supported the Republican Party.

Mr. PLATT. The German-American Alliance attacked the Republican Members of Congress in 1916, and I never heard of it contributing any money to campaign funds, unless to Democratic funds.

It seems to me that every man who votes for this resolution votes himself a sorehead. I do not believe we can afford to do that. There are men in this House who are members of the National Security League. Why do you not ask what their motives are? They contribute a dollar a year to this organization, which is used to circulate literature. It has not accused anyone of being disloyal. That is a figment of the imagination of the men criticized. They have felt that they were wrong, but as to being called disloyal, the National Security League, so far as I know, has not used the word "disloyal," though doubtless some of the newspapers have in the heat of the campaign.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PLATT. I do not yield to the gentleman from Ohio just now. I want to repeat that the objects of this organization are perfectly plain, as are the motives of similar organizations like the Navy League. Doubtless they are in favor of universal military service, but there is no object in investigating them to find out anything. The purpose of this proposed investigation is not to find out anything but to get back at somebody. I do not believe this House of Representatives can afford to lower its dignity to the position of trying to get back at somebody because the votes of some individual Members have been criticized.

Mr. GORDON. Before the gentleman takes his seat, does he think they raised——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I did not consume all of my time, because I imagined what was going to follow. I am always interested in objections that this House will stultify itself by having an investigation of those who assail its integrity. I should imagine, if I were a member of the 47 who had voted against the first revenue bill passed to carry on the war, or if I had voted against the amendment for the income-tax increases on $20,000 incomes, if I had the record which is carried by some gentlemen on this floor on opposing financial sinews to carry on the war, I might feel the same as the distinguished gentleman who just addressed you. That is his record. [Applause.] He voted wrong, but the Security League excepted 47 perfect Members. Why did not the league think of including these tests in its list? On the question of amendment, proposed by Senator LENROOT, for partial conscription of wealth, he was against it. Why did not the league have that vote included as one of the acid tests? [Applause.] The gentleman objects to the resolution, and he ventures to criticize the House. He ought not to criticize the House because we want to find out what is behind all this——

Mr. PLATT. I criticize the House for being thin-skinned. It seems to me that men in politics ought to be able to take a hit once in a while.

Mr. FREAR. But if a man said that I was disloyal I would knock the man down—that is how thin-skinned I am. I will not permit any organization of this kind for a moment to get it into their heads they can declare the House disloyal without being held to answer such charges.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman think the National Security League raised $1,200,000 to spend in this campaign by $1 subscriptions?

Mr. FREAR. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio we do not say they spent that amount in this campaign, but I do know this, that any organization that spent $1,200,000 annually, as they admit, could well afford to pay $1,000 fine under the corrupt-practice act, an act which we all know you can drive a horse and wagon through. We want to know who put up the money. What we are after also is to vindicate the good name of the House and of Congress, not only on this side of the aisle but on the other side. I have been asked about the eight acid tests. You will find them in the speech of December 4. Go behind the returns and find out who these league gentlemen are and what their motives are. I do not think 90 per cent of this House or 90 per cent of the country outside the league of the city of New York will accept, without resentment, charges of disloyalty. I have given you in letters just read to the House the names of men who belong to this association who now repudiate it. They are fully as high-class, I dare say, as the majority of the men who object to this investigation. Go into this investigation, and go into it fully. I will give everything I have, and I have letters in which they charge Representatives here by name as being on the disloyal list, and they ask the people of their States to disgrace and repudiate them. But, gentlemen, if you have it in your mind to raise the standard of the House and resent in this House constant insinuations against the character of the House and against the morale of the House, against the charge of being cheap politicians—if we are willing to resent insults of this kind, here is the chance, and it is your important duty to act now.

Mr. CROSSER. There is something even more important than vindicating the good name of the House. Is it not a matter of duty that the motives of these people be shown up?

Mr. FREAR. It is. The gentleman from Ohio well states a fact. All such motives should be disclosed, and it is of great importance that we keep up the standard of respectability and integrity of the House. The people expect it, and they want to know if we are performing our duty here for the honor of the people and the welfare of the country. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, Maj. LA GUARDIA. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as New York City was dragged into this, I want to say as a Representative of New York City that I never heard of the National Security League until a very short time ago. In 1915, I gather from what the gentleman from Wisconsin said the other day, the National Security League came into existence. Well, at that time I was busy learning to fly at Mineola, and during the last 18 months, of course, my activities took me into other parts of the world, but

I do not believe that this is a matter concerning New York City. I believe anyone has the right to criticize or differ from the views of a Member of Congress. There is no doubt about that. If we are wrong, we expect to hear about it, or if we vote or act in such a way as to differ from the views of others we are bound to be criticized.

But from what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] says, there has been a charge of disloyalty. I am sure there is no man who would charge me with disloyalty and get away with it. [Applause.] And I resent a similar attack upon any gentleman of this body, of which I consider it a great honor to be a Member. I disagree in everything in the world with my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], but I would resent an attack on his loyalty as much as I would an attack on mine. [Applause.]

Now, the resolution, as I understand it, calls for an investigation, and until we have the facts before us we are not going to pass upon the guilt or innocence of this particular organization. But it seems to me that if its motives are really patriotic, if they had no other interest but that of securing a Congress which would act according to their views, they should welcome this investigation. We will arrive at a sad time if a Member of Congress may be called disloyal because he happens to vote the other way. That being the case, and knowing very little about this organization, but with the prima facie case presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I shall vote for the resolution, because I want the facts. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] to offer his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that there is practically no opposition to the passage of this resolution. I never have been very much in favor of investigating committees or investigations by congressional committees and am not enthusiastic about this. I have been lied about so often concerning so many different things that possibly I am unduly callous to the false statements made concerning me.

Now, I do not know whether the National Security League favored or opposed my nomination or election in the last campaign. I do not care. I do not know whether they furnished the information which a very nice young gentleman gave to the public who was running against me in my district, every line of which was a falsehood, but I think he got his information from the Democratic congressional committee. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And if we are going to investigate all the falsehoods published concerning us, I would commence with the Democratic congressional committee [laughter and applause], because I think——

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MANN (continuing). Because I think they can publish more false statements about Republican candidates than the National Security League could imagine.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman think they would have a hard time publishing as many false statements about Republicans as the Republican congressional committee can publish about Democrats?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I take it that the Democrats would start in with an investigation of the Republican congressional committee; but the trouble is that the Republican congressional committee never has had as vivid an imagination as the Democratic members of the Democratic congressional committee, and most of the statements made by the Democratic congressional committee are based on vivid imagination. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman think that is a pretty vivid statement he is making right now? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. No; that is a statement of pure fact.

Mr. HARDY. That nobody else would agree to.

Mr. MANN. If I thought the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] would agree to any statement I made, I would think I was in error. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDY. All right.

Mr. MANN. Of course in this House there were at times heated intimations from some Member of the House in debate that some other Member of the House in debate had not been really loyal and patriotic. Well, those things occur sometimes in debate. Of course no one can expect that an entire body will always vote the same way. If it shall ever come that upon most of the questions that come before this body all of the Members agree, it will be a sorry day for the Republic. There should be a difference of opinion in order to ascertain the truth. But in a service of some years in this House I have come to believe firmly in the real earnestness of purpose, devotion to the right, and the unflagging and unfailing loyalty and patriotism of the entire membership of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCCULLOCH].

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything upon the resolution, but I regard this as a serious and not a frivolous matter. To question, directly or indirectly, the loyalty of Congress in time of war is a most serious matter and should be so regarded not alone by Members themselves but by the entire country. It is not a question of whether or not there were differences of opinion among Members of this House in regard to measures on war or preparedness that came before the House. It is not a question of whether or not we differed as to the policies to be decided upon in the entering and in carrying on of the war. It is a question as to whether or not the votes of Members were misrepresented and wrong conclusions drawn, and if so, by whom and for what purpose, and whether or not men who assume to be responsible are to be permitted to misrepresent, vilify, lie about, and slander the Members of this House and not be called to account. [Applause.]

Now, unless I have the facts wrong, and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] or anyone else can show that I have the facts wrong in regard to this league, I will vote against this resolution. Unless I have the facts wrong, the National Security League drew conclusions in regard to the loyalty of the Members of this House upon misstatements of fact. The National Security League not only drew wrong conclusions from statements of fact, which is, to say the least, unfair, but they misstated and misrepresented facts and drew conclusions, using such misstatements as a basis, which could only have the effect of holding the Congress of the United States up to public contempt. Simply because men differ as to policy or mode of procedure does not justify an accusation of disloyalty, either directly or indirectly. So that if this league had told the truth and then charged disloyalty its conduct would have been, to say the least, reprehensible; but to misrepresent the facts and on such a false basis to charge disloyalty merits prompt and vigorous action. No Member of this House should object to honest criticism; he should expect that, but the mouth of the slanderer should be closed.

Those who would criticize Congress or its Members should be required to tell the truth. Men can not slander the Executive nor the Supreme Court without corresponding responsibility. The Senate will not stand for it, and why should the House?

I do not believe I can be included in any such class as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] referred to, because this league made a bitter fight against me in my district and I increased my majority 5,000 over two years ago. I won in 1914 by 7,000 votes, and against the attacks of the National Security League in 1918 I won by 12,200. But I am deeply interested in one important thing, and that is that the honor and the dignity of this great body should be upheld. The greatest compensation that comes of being a Member of Congress is the honor. It is an honored place. To have been a Member of Congress is something to which your posterity can point to with pride in years to come. If it were a dishonor and a disgrace to be a Member of this House none of us would want to remain here. It is a great honor and should be so regarded. Now, then, the loyalty of 90 per cent of the membership of this House has been challenged in time of war. Are you going to sit idly by and allow them to get away with it? It is not a frivolous matter, and I challenge the inference of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is a serious matter, and I for one desire that this investigation shall go to the bottom of it all, and no matter how high up the men are, no matter how high the places they hold, they should be required to assume the responsibility of their false statements. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time and the floor to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall offer this amendment: In line 4, page 1, after the syllable "port," at the beginning of the line, insert the words "and names of contributors."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And on line 6——

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman finished reading his amendment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. I want to offer another one.

The SPEAKER. You had better finish this one first. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 1, line 4, after the syllable "port," at the beginning of the line, by inserting the words "and names of contributors."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Now the gentleman will submit the next amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, in line 6, if the word "any" is to be used there, the letter "s" should be stricken off the word "organizations." It should read "any associated organization." I move to strike out the letter "s."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman offer that as an amendment? Does he merely purpose to investigate one associated organization or other organizations?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It should be in the singular—"organization"—if you use the word "any," or else it should be "all organizations." If the amendment is adopted, and the language "any organization" used, then you can investigate a dozen if you choose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to change the word "organizations" to the word "organization."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman should do that. I think it means expressly what it says. I think it is now expressed in better language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if we wish to be accurate it should be "any organization." Then it would include all organizations. By using "any organization" you could investigate one after another, as many as you might wish.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the resolution if it would not be better to strike out the word "associated," in line 6, and in lieu thereof insert the word "similar"? There may be State organizations that might contribute great amounts of money in secret.

Mr. FREAR. I would be willing to accept it, of course, if the committee is willing. That is along the line of the original resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why would it not be better, in place of the word "associated," in line 6, to insert the word "similar"?

Mr. POU. I have no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina accepts the suggestion. I move further to strike out the word "associated" and insert the word "similar."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "associated" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "similar."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know very much about the resolution. I thought it might be better for the committee to centralize the spotlight upon this organization rather than to scatter it over a number of organizations. There are a great many. Does the gentleman think it is desirable to have this committee, in the next two months, scatter its jurisdiction. instead of concentrating on this one organization?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I made the suggestion solely because of what my colleague [Mr. STAFFORD] said about the activities of a certain organization in our State. It might be very difficult to prove that that organization was "associated" in any way with the National Security League. However, in order to concentrate attention upon this National Security League, I will withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. CROSSER. I renew it. I offer the amendment myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. CROSSER. I will obtain the floor later.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I myself do not believe that there are many organizations which can properly be characterized as "similar" to the National Security League. I know of very few corporate bodies that engage in politics as that corporation did. I know some associations—you might call them societies—which do that, but I know of very few corporations that engage in politics after the manner of the National Security League. But perhaps the resolution is better just as it is.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to offer an amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment after the word "officers," in line 3, to add the words "agents and employees."

I am of the opinion that many members of this organization may have no knowledge, while some of its agents and employees, many of them professional lobbyists, organizing this and other similar organizations for the purpose of securing employment and large pay for their services, have endeavored to dictate the policies of the Congress of the United States. For that reason I am of the opinion that we should add these words, reaching these professional lobbyists and patriots for pay.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 1, line 3, after the word "officers" insert the words "agents and employees."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "associated," in line 6, and insert the word "similar."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "associated" and insert in lieu thereof the word "similar."

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, this is an important amendment. I venture to say before any investigation is begun that it will be found that most of the activity of the kind described by Members who favor this resolution has been carried on by organizations having other names than the National Security League. Every local gang who were interested in the defeat of a man to whom they were opposed because, perhaps, of his economic views, formed some organization or another for the purpose of carrying on their opposition. If, therefore, we are really to investigate, if we desire to turn the limelight on the hypocrisy of such individuals, then, I say, let us investigate these other "groups" as well as the National Security League.

This is a much more important matter than some would try to have us believe. The filth that such organizations spread broadcast was not merely the expression of a difference of opinion. One can not object to criticism from a man if he makes his criticism in a fair, manly way; but this organization and others of its ilk have gone much further than that. They have undertaken deliberately to ruin men's reputations. They have undertaken to destroy all that is worth while in life, the good name that men may have won after long, arduous years of toil and self-abnegation. I say that if we are going to allow that sort of thing to go on without exposure, then we care very little about the future of the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The word "similar" will not carry out the intention of the gentleman.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; it will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because they will question the jurisdiction of the committee, and you will have to prove first that the organization is similar.

Mr. CROSSER. That will be a matter for the decision of the committee, and if they are favorable to the purposes of this resolution they will not have any trouble in discovering the similarity.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will find that it will not help a bit.

Mr. CROSSER. It will help a great deal.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If you undertake to investigate all these so-called similar organizations, where are you going to begin and where are you going to leave off?

Mr. CROSSER. We will begin with organizations of this character. It will not take very long; and if we are going to consider it a tedious matter to investigate these organizations, it will be found that the investigation of the National Security League may be open to that objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman is interpreting my question in a way that may please him, but it is not my question. I am trying to get at a practical way of doing the thing, if the thing itself is practical. If you are going to investigate every difference of opinion on this subject that may have associated its supporters in an organization on the face of the North American Continent in the United States of America, you will find that the investigation will be in full blast at noon on the 4th of March next.

Mr. CROSSER. The concrete case which I have in mind is that of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. I understand that the organization that nominally was opposing him was not the National Security League but the One Hundred Per Cent American League.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman is aware that constitutionally our committee could not arraign anybody or correct anybody for mere difference of opinion with us.

Mr. CROSSER. To the extent of letting the public know what these men were doing, what their purposes were, and what they were trying to accomplish, the committee would have authority to compel testimony.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. However earnest we are about it, we have got to go at this thing in the right way. We must go at this thing to discover what was contrary to law and not upon the mere difference of opinion.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought we were to have two hours' general debate.

The SPEAKER. Somehow or other they have agreed to another arrangement.

Mr. MANN. But the two hours have not yet expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from North Carolina controlled the time.

Mr. MANN. But when they sit down and do not control the time, somebody else gets the floor.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to have been one of the developments of modern political life that questions are discussed largely through the medium of self-appointed committees. My observation has been that these committees, such as we have been discussing here, have their activities as long as their contributions, which they exact from credulous adherents, last, and that a great proportion of the money which they collect is spent for the salaries of the officers, agents, and employees.

However that may be, I do not view with approval the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] that similar organizations to the National Security League should be investigated under the present resolution. Rather do I agree with the gentleman from Illinois, who thinks, as I do, that the very object of this resolution is to concentrate attention and investigation upon the work of this National Security League, because if we are to open up to this committee all the activities of every propaganda organization the labor of the committee appointed by the Speaker will be unending.

There is only one way that we can logically pursue it, and that is if there is evidence established before the committee appointed by the Speaker of a particular propaganda, a particular method of conduct in which the wrongful use of money is also of large consequence, that is a matter in which the country is interested and in which the House is interested. But we are not interested in the development of every local committee or of every sort of propaganda, whatever it may be, against an individual Member of this House.

So in discussing this rule and the scope to which the rule should have effect I disagree also with another member of the Ohio delegation who has spoken recently, in which he said that certain truthful things were published and then wrongful deductions were made from it. I do not think there should be any investigation by a committee of the House or anybody else because something truthful was said and improper deductions were made therefrom.

Neither do I think the subsequent statement entirely correct, when the gentleman said that something wrong was published and then wrongful deductions were drawn from that, since that implies a double negative. I think what the House wants to get at is to investigate the National Security League and any influence that sought to control the election of Members of the House wrongfully, if it did so wrongfully. and the scope of the resolution is wide enough to accomplish that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CROSSER: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "associated" and insert the word "similar."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment. After the word "to," in line 3, insert the words "the articles of incorporation," so that they will be required to make report as to the articles of incorporation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "to," insert the words "the articles of incorporation."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think that the purpose of that would be reached under the language of line 4—"general character"?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following committee: Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Mr. CARAWAY of Arkansas, Mr. TOWNER of Iowa, Mr. REAVIS of Nebraska, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] made a statement in the RECORD that he had obtained information from the Surgeon General's office of the Army that a Mr. Troendle, from Dawson Springs, Ky., representing the Dawson Springs Hotel Co., in June tendered to the Government, or wanted to turn over to the Government, a tract of land and the hotel for the purpose of a hospital. He said that this offer was considered by the Government, and finally the project was rejected by the Surgeon General.

Mr. Speaker, I happened to be down there present at the conversation with Mr. Troendle, who is a constituent of mine. I want to say to the House, first and foremost, that the Dawson Springs Hotel Co. does not own a hotel. They own in fee simple about 1,000 acres of land down there, upon which they proposed to construct a hotel. Bonds were sold before the war was declared and excavation for a $1,000,000 hotel was already made.

Mr. Troendle did say to Gen. Gorgas in my presence that if they could get the restrictions lifted by the priority division of the War Industries Board, whereby they could get the material, he would complete the hotel and turn it over to the Government as a hospital during the war, but not turn the property over to the Government permanently. That proposition was not considered and rejected; it was not considered, because Gen. Gorgas said, "What we want are buildings now, and by the time the hotel will be completed it would be too late." That had nothing to do with the Dawson Springs hotel. They own no hotel. They expect to construct a hotel, but that has nothing to do with the bill recently passed by the House. The Surgeon General did not investigate Dawson Springs and did not reject it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I was present at a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and Col. Smith was interrogated in regard to this and said that there was an offer of property made, but that, so far as his investigation went, there was no rejection of it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely no investigation was made.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, so far as the information in the Surgeon General's office is concerned, the gentleman will concede, will he not, that the offer was made in June and was not accepted by the Government?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes. It was not considered by the Government, because Gen. Gorgas said that they wanted buildings already up, and that by the time this building is constructed it would be too late to use it as a hospital for those in the service.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit the statement, my information in that office was different from what the gentleman has given. I was informed that it was considered but had not been accepted.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am telling what I know, because I was there at the time of the conversation.

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE—RESIGNATION FROM INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I have been named by the Speaker, I am informed, as a member of the investigating committee to investigate the National Security League.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I must respectfully decline to serve upon the committee, thanking the Chair for the compliment paid me by the appointment. Events of a personal nature have recently occurred in my family which make me feel that I can not at this time serve on the committee, and I am therefore compelled to decline.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will fill the vacancy presently.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN A. STERLING.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I present a request for unanimous consent, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON asks unanimous consent that Sunday, January 19, 1919, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. JOHN A. STERLING, late a Representative from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13277, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct a clerical error. On page 4, line 6, appears the word "draftmen." That should be "draftsman," and I ask that it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant director of primary instruction, $1,400: Provided, That the assistant director of primary instruction now in the service of the public schools, or hereafter to be appointed, shall be placed at the basic salary of $1,400 per annum, and shall be entitled to an increase of $50 per annum for five years.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At this point in the bill last year appeared an item for the rent of offices for the recorder of deeds, $5,000. What has become of that item? Have quarters been provided in the new courthouse?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. The old courthouse is about completed, and when the office of the recorder of deeds moved out it was intended that quarters should be provided in the courthouse when it was reconstructed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs—streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, including resurfacing and repairs to asphalt pavements with the same or other not inferior material, and including the purchase of one motor truck at not to exceed $2,000, and maintenance of motor vehicles, and including an allowance of not to exceed $30 per month for an automobile for use for official purposes, $375,000. This appropriation shall be available for repairing pavements of street railways when necessary; the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railroad companies as provided by section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is it intended that this appropriation of $375,000, with the unexpended appropriations appearing under the heading of "Work on streets and avenues," the unexpended balances, shall be taken together for use during the coming year for the repair of all the streets?

Mr. SISSON. That is practically true; but they are two different items. One is for the repair of streets and the other is for improvements. One is for tearing up old pavements and putting down new and the other is for resurfacing.

Mr. GARD. This last is for repair?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARD. And the other is for new work?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Officers: Superintendent, $6,000; assistant superintendents—1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, and director of primary instruction, 16 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,200 each; secretary, $2,000; financial clerk, $2,000; clerks—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 (to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law) $900; 2 stenographers at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; in all, $62,520.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that in making appropriations for the superintendents here that they have one at $3,500 and one at $3,000, each doing the same kind of work?

Mr. SISSON. That is fixed by law.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the law, is it not?

Mr. SISSON. Well, that is the law that fixes the salaries as they appear in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. No; one is at $2,700, while another doing the same work gets $1,650.

Mr. SISSON. Well, I presume originally in fixing these salaries it was due to the fact that the service rendered was more important in one case than in another case because of the fact that more children were under them and more duty.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I do not think that has anything to do with it at all myself. I think it is simply because one man is a white man and another is a black man. That is the way it looks.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact that has been the salary carried for many years, and I think every member of the subcommittee will bear testimony to the fact that that question is never raised and never mentioned in our deliberations.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when persons do equal work, whether they are men or women, and are charged with equal responsibility, are required to have the same educational qualifications, that they be compensated alike; and I think it is an injustice which ought to be remedied; and I move, Mr. Chairman, in the case where the salary is fixed in the one case at $3,500 and the other at $3,000 that both be made $3,500.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. I would like the gentleman to state what the point of order is.

Mr. SISSON. There is no question about its being subject to the point of order, because originally the law fixed those salaries, and to change that now would make it subject to the point of order. There is no doubt about its being subject to the point of order. There is also an amendment which went into this bill some four or five years ago making the salaries carried in the preceding bill to be the salaries for this year, and to change the salary carried in the current law is also subject to the point of order under that provision carried in the bill several years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I think the estimates were made for similar salaries by the board of education and reduced by the commissioners, and it seems to me that it is competent for the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to increase the salaries, to raise the salaries, and I do not think it is a change of law to raise an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has before him the act authorizing it, and if the gentleman from Illinois has a statute authorizing the payment of $3,500——

Mr. MADDEN. I have not looked up the law on the question, I am free to admit. Now, if the gentleman will withhold the point of order——

Mr. SISSON. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I will address myself to the merits of the case. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that any law which requires one man to work for $3,000 while another man doing similar work with equal responsibility gets $3,500 is unjust, and there ought to be some remedy for it, and it seems to me that the committee having jurisdiction over this bill should see the injustice of the case and report an amendment to the law to remedy the evil, for it must be admitted to be an evil to require one man to do similar work for $500 a year less than another. Every person occupying the position of director of education is required to stand the test of qualification. They are required to have similar educations, they are required to pass similar examinations, they are required to do similar work, and they ought to be granted similar pay, and it seems to me that the committee which would tolerate a discrimination of this sort has failed to give the kind of consideration to the question to which it is entitled. Of course, I realize that this committee, as all other committees, are anxious to economize in every way they can, and while they are economizing they ought to do it where economy is the proper thing. Economy ought not to be practiced at the expense of the individual. It may be said that economy is not being practiced. It may be said that $3,000 is all the pay that either of those men should get. I do not know about that. If that be true, of course it would be extravagant to pay one man $3,500 where the other man is being paid $3,000; but if it is not extravagant and it is thought that the salary is not more than commensurate with the responsibility of the work, then I submit that it is unjust to pay the one $500 less than the other. I am not very clear, although I have not the law before me, that this item is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. The Chairman states it is fixed by statute. Are not the salaries of the commissioners fixed by statute?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. But I understand their salaries are now $5,000, and it is proposed to make them $6,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if that is true, that is a change of statute, and I shall feel compelled to make the point of order against that.

Mr. WALSH. It is too late.

Mr. MADDEN. Unfortunately I was not here.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, do I understand the duties of these superintendents are exactly alike?

Mr. MADDEN. Exactly alike.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman could reach the object he intends to reach of equalizing the salaries by moving to reduce.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be a change of law, too, I suppose.

Mr. DYER. That would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If their duties are precisely the same——

Mr. MADDEN. They are precisely the same. I do not think anyone will deny that. I think that there ought to be sufficient consideration for the equities in the case to equalize the salary of the man who is not getting within $500 of the other man. I do not want to reduce the salary of the man who is getting the $500 more, because I do not think he is getting more than he ought to have, but I do think this committee ought to have sufficient consideration for the justice of the case to offer an amendment or to withdraw the point of order and allow this increased compensation to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman a question about this. Do these two assistant superintendents have the same amount of work to do?

Mr. SISSON. Well, they have the same character of work to do, of course, but there are more than twice as many children under one superintendent as under the other. The assistant superintendent who gets the $3,500, in the absence or illness of the superintendent, performs the duties of the superintendent. He happens to be the man who performs that duty. The assistant superintendent whose salary is fixed by law at $3,000 performs the duty of assistant superintendent at all times.

Mr. DYER. The one that gets $3,000 is a colored man?

Mr. SISSON. I understand he is a colored man, but I did not know myself until this moment that there was any difference. The question was never raised in the committee at all.

Mr. DYER. No recommendation was made to the gentleman's committee?

Mr. SISSON. There was a recommendation made to our committee to increase the salaries of every employee in the District government.

Mr. DYER. Well, the gentleman does not recall whether there was any recommendation by the commissioners to increase the pay of this one assistant superintendent?

Mr. SISSON. I do. They recommended an increase in salary for all these officials in this particular paragraph.

Mr. DYER. To make them equal or increase them all?

Mr. SISSON. My recollection is to make the assistant superintendent $4,000; and I think they made them both $4,000.

Mr. DYER. I would ask the gentleman also if it is not a fact that a number of items recommended by the school board were eliminated also?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that a number of items were. I do not recall.

Mr. DYER. The ground for that new school known as the Dunbar High School——

Mr. SISSON. That is for the purchase of the site, and the only thing the committee did not allow that was asked for.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know anything more about the salaries paid the different teachers in the different schools? Does this inequality of pay which starts at the assistant superintendent——

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will turn to the longevity act he will find that all the teachers of every grade get exactly the same amount of money, and all the teachers' salaries were increased last year, notably the lower-grade teachers, and carried in the current law.

Mr. DYER. I have seen, and I suppose other Members have seen, communications touching these questions. I have one here where it says that the salaries paid to the white and colored teachers are not equalized; that the colored teachers all the way down do not receive the same pay as the white teachers.

Mr. SISSON. No. That is not true, because the status of the teachers is fixed by law. And if there has been any injustice done it has been done by the school board and not by your committee, because we have granted the salaries to teachers in lump sums to pay a certain number of teachers in a certain grade. We do not fix the salaries in this bill of any of the teachers except the principals of certain schools and the administrative force of the school system. If the gentleman will look in the bill he will find of the two thousand and odd teachers that they are divided into groups and a certain amount of money is appropriated to pay the basic salary in that group. And then there is another statute——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Under the extension of remarks I insert the following:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1918.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DYER: I know it is only necessary to give you the figures concerning the colored schools that are contained in the District appropriation act, that will come up in the House on Monday, to secure support for us.

They do us gross injustice, giving us only 14.3 per cent, when we should have nearly one-third. There are also inequalities in the salaries for white and colored directors. The board of education gave us our proportion, but the commissioners eliminated the most important items, principally the ground for Dunbar High School and Stevens School. The children here have no recreational space whatever, and are forced to play in the streets, under constant menace to their safety.

We have this trouble every year with these servants of all of the people, who receive their salaries from black as well as from white taxes, and are charged with the duty of improving the citizenry. Yet they studiously set to work to deny him the chance for education, the very source of citizenship. We feel particularly grieved at this time because of our heroic service in the world war for democracy, as we thought that it would and should mean a larger measure of opportunity for us. Certainly we did not expect the strong arm of municipal government, designed to serve the people, used as an instrument of oppression.

Knowing that we can count upon your support again, I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully, yours, NEVAL H. THOMAS.

Injustices to colored children in the estimates for 1919 for public schools.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the position of the Chair was on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was sustained. It is authorized by law.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not hear the Chair decide.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appointments to fill vacancies hereafter occurring in the membership of the board of education shall be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. WALSH reserved a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the item is subject to a point of order. If the gentlemen have made up their minds to insist on the point of order, I will not discuss it.

Mr. MADDEN. I will withhold it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists on the point, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. SISSON. My request was if they would insist on the point of order at the conclusion of my remarks, I did not want to take up any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attendance officers: Attendance officers—1 $900, 4 at $800 each, 4 at $600 each; in all, $6,500.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the increase in the number of attendance officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order against what portion of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. They have increased the number of attendance officers by two. That must be a change of law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. You are reserving that point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I reserve it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I observe the same is true in this item concerning attendance officers—one at $900, four at $800 each—as occurs in the former paragraph, one assistant superintendent at $3,500 and one at $3,000. What I want to know is, Does the basic act prescribe a certain salary shall be paid to a certain assistant superintendent at a certain school?

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe the law commonly known as the longevity law, which classifies the teachers in the District of Columbia into classes, fixing their pay, deals with the attendance officers at all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What I am trying to get at is, Who determines which assistant superintendent or which attendance officer shall get one sum and which shall get another?

Mr. SISSON. Well, the attendance officer who has charge of all the attendance officers themselves is the man who supervises the attendance of the children. These others are appointed under this one attendance officer. The principal officer gets $900, and then four get $800, and those who begin get $600. In order that the promotions may be had, after they are familiar with this service and this work, they are promoted out of the lower-grade pay into the higher grade.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Who determines in the preceding item which assistant superintendent shall receive $3,500 and which shall get $3,000?

Mr. SISSON. The board of education.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They decide according to their judgment about the matter?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Mississippi any law which he can cite authorizing the increase?

Mr. SISSON. There is no law, Mr. Chairman, authorizing the increase of the attendance officers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order against the $800 or the $600?

Mr. MADDEN. I make it against the two in different places. They have four at $800 instead of two.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the only portion the gentleman makes the point of order against?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Your committee gave them two additional attendance officers when they asked for four. Your committee thought that looking into the absences from school was a matter of considerable importance, and that to have enough attendance officers to attend to the duties would simply make more efficient the school system of the District.

Mr. TILSON. Is the number of attendance officers fixed by law anywhere? Is there a law that fixes the number of attendance officers?

Mr. SISSON. No. The only thing that fixes it is the fact that it has been carried in the statute for a number of years, and under the provision put in an appropriation bill years ago those people carried at that salary should be paid the salary from that time on.

Mr. TILSON. And there is no law that would authorize one attendance officer at $900, two at $800, and four at $600?

Mr. SISSON. There is no law except the current law.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand from the gentleman that to be the fact?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. The gentleman is right about it. There is no statute that fixes the number, but when an item goes into the bill the salary fixed in the current law is the salary for that particular official for all time.

To give the history of that legislation, I may say that one gentleman would make a point of order where the salary had been carried for many years and would go back to the original act creating the office; he would look all those things up, and the result was that on account of making those points of order it became necessary for Congress to pass an act to prevent all the salaries in all the departments and in the District of Columbia from being reduced to what they were many years before. I have no doubt the gentleman recalls that legislation that we put into the appropriation bill, so that all items put in this bill, like this attendance item, are in order only under that particular act that I speak of, both as to salary and as to the number of officers carried in the bill. Therefore if we increase the number of attendance officers, I know of no statute other than the fact that the item has been carried in the bill authorizing the increase of attendance officers. I think the gentleman from Illinois is making a mistake in insisting upon the point of order. I think he will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. I desire to offer an amendment to make it "two" instead of "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 18, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "two at $800 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SISSON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that if any of the items of the bill are changed the Clerk may be authorized to change the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that if items are changed the Clerk may be authorized to change the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Principal of the Central High School, $3,000: Provided, That the present principal of the Central High School shall be placed at a basic salary of $3,000 per annum and shall be entitled to an increase of $100 per annum for five years.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Mississippi a question. I want to know, if I may, why special language is employed to provide for the present principal of the Central High School?

Mr. SISSON. Well, the present principal of the Central High School is one of the most talented teachers in the District, one of the most talented men in the country. He is a man of great capacity, and we are extremely fortunate to be able to keep him. In fact, the board of education very seriously thought at the time the present superintendent was selected to make the superintendent of this school the superintendent of the city schools. He is one of the most widely known teachers in the District and is a man of very great ability, and the plant he is in charge of is one of the very largest in the country.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no doubt he is worth the money, but my purpose in rising was to get the information which the gentleman is now disclosing. I do not think I will insist upon the point of order in connection with this case or in connection with the next one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for another question?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. DOWELL. How long has this principal been in the service here in the city?

Mr. SISSON. A good many years. I could not tell the gentleman exactly, but it is a good long time. Of course, he has been principal of this Central High School since it was constructed and was principal of the old high school at the time they moved into the new Central High School. It is one of the most inviting looking plants in the country.

Mr. DOWELL. I notice in this language in the bill it states that "he shall be entitled to an increase of $100 per annum for five years." Does that mean that he is to receive $100 in addition each year, or that that will be fixed by the board?

Mr. SISSON. No. It means that after July, after the passage of this act, he would get next year $3,100, and the year after $3,200, and so on for five years.

Mr. DOWELL. This does not say he shall receive that, but that he shall be entitled to it.

Mr. SISSON. He will receive it.

Mr. DOWELL. Is he not worth as much now as he will be later, and should not the salary be fixed at the amount that would be commensurate with his service?

Mr. SISSON. That is true, but the basic salary carried in the law for this principal is $3,000. So if you increased the basic salary you then would not give this extremely valuable man the benefit of what he is entitled to. Therefore your committee did not feel authorized to increase the basic salary of this teacher. I think we are extremely fortunate in holding the man at all. He has had many offers very much better than this, but he has a splendid institution, and he takes a great deal of pride in it.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, it was the judgment of the committee that unless this principal remained the salary should be left at $3,000.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; unless we can get an equally good man, I think the salary ought to remain at $3,000.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word. I am very glad that the gentleman from Illinois did not insist on the point of order to this item, because I have occasion to know of the excellence of this institution and to say that I have no doubt that the principal of this school could, if he so desired, command a much higher salary at similar schools in other cities of the country. The plant that he has under his care and charge there is a credit to the National Capital, and my observation has been that the corps of teachers that he supervises are most efficient, and I think it is a good thing that the subcommittee have attempted to provide for this yearly increase. I want to indorse the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. What is the meaning of the phrase "minimum salaries," in line 20?

Mr. SISSON. I will explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. GARD. Does that mean that under some circumstances an additional salary may be paid?

Mr. SISSON. This is the basic minimum salary. Upon that they get what is known as longevity pay. A teacher remains one year in a certain grade, at, say, $100 a month, and the next year that teacher will get an increase of $50 a year, and that continues for five years. We have nothing to do with that. That was provided for by law some years ago. You will notice a little further on in the bill an item for several hundred thousand dollars for longevity pay to the teachers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARD. I think one of the very best things about Washington is the general recognition of its excellent school system, and I should be glad to contribute in any way I can to its maintenance.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make another inquiry. In reading the provisions of the bill relative to the principal of the Central High School I notice it says—

And shall be entitled to an increase of $100 per annum for five years.

I believe it is the intention that there shall be an increase of $100 each year?

Mr. SISSON. That is the intention of the committee.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the language of the bill provide for an additional $100 each year for five years?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; that is the language carried in all the items.

Mr. DOWELL. It seems to me that this might be construed as fixing the salary at $3,100 for five years.

Mr. SISSON. No; an increase of $100 each year for five years.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand; but it would seem from the reading of this provision that he can get no more than $3,100 for the next five years.

Mr. SISSON. No; the second year $3,200, the next year $3,300, and so on.

Mr. DOWELL. I concede that to be the intention, but I will ask the gentleman to read this language again and see if that will be the effect of it.

Mr. SISSON. The auditor has repeatedly construed this language in the past. This is the language in which it is submitted, it is the language under which that system of longevity pay for teachers is carried on, and your committee accepted that language, which had been repeatedly construed by the auditor to mean an increase of $100 each year for five years.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman is certain that that is the construction which will be placed upon it, that is satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant principal of the Central High School, $1,800: Provided, That said assistant principal shall be placed at a basic salary of $1,800 per annum and shall be entitled to an increase of $100 per annum for five years.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The assistant superintendent in a big plant like this ought to get more than $1,800 if the superintendent gets $3,000, it seems to me.

Mr. SISSON. This language has been carried before.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose we never could change anything that has been carried before.

Mr. SISSON. I understand; but I want to explain to him that this assistant principal is actually getting more than $1,800 at this time. I do not know just what salary he is receiving, but it is something over $2,000 now.

Mr. MADDEN. This does not state the fact, then?

Mr. SISSON. The basic salary is all that is ever stated in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman state what the principal gets whose basic salary is stated at $3,000?

Mr. SISSON. He only gets $3,000, because this language only begins to apply to him this year.

Mr. MADDEN. The other man has had the benefit of the language before?

Mr. SISSON. For several years; I do not know just how long.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Principals of normal, high, and manual-training high schools, eight, at $2,500 each—

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether the language carried on lines 5 and 6, page 31—

Principals of normal, high, and manual-training high schools, eight, at $2,500 each.

refers to the straight salary, or is that a basic salary upon which additional salary is computed?

Mr. SISSON. The $2,500 is the salary without any longevity.

Mr. GARD. That is the salary which is fixed at $2,500 for these principals?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, is there any reason why these salaries should not be fixed in this bill at a certain amount, and not have a basic salary and then receive some other amount?

Mr. SISSON. The longevity pay is continually changing. In other words, a person occupying one of these places may die or resign. The new teacher begins at the basic salary. The longevity pay is not calculated at the beginning of the session, but it is calculated by the number of months. If a teacher should die or resign the first part of the session and a new teacher should come into that place, then after teaching the number of school months required to give longevity pay it would be given. The longevity pay for a particular teacher may begin in the middle of the next session.

I might say to the gentleman that I myself am not at all in favor of the longevity law as now written. Some years ago I tried to change the longevity law but did not succeed.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, the longevity pay is not fixed for the position but for the individual?

Mr. SISSON. It is fixed for the position, and when the individual gets into that position and remains long enough the longevity pay attaches to the individual.

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman in a position to say whether he would accept a proposal to change the salary of the assistant principal of the high school and the dean for the girls' central school to, say, $2,000 a year?

Mr. SISSON. The great trouble about accepting that would be that we would have to go all through the bill. The salaries have been arranged with some effort at harmony, although they do not always harmonize. Of course, I could not consent to that change here.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think such change would be advisable?

Mr. SISSON. I do not, in view of the longevity pay.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to attempt to explain what little I know about the longevity pay. I have been on the committee a good many years, but I have been unable to ascertain from any source whatever the real working of longevity pay. Apparently a few years ago there was regular legislation along that line, and they agreed upon a certain principle for increasing salaries of teachers automatically regardless of merit. As an illustration I will note on page 31, line 8:

Provided, That said assistant principals shall be placed at a basic salary of $1,800 per annum and shall be entitled to an increase of $100 per annum for five years.

Now as to some teachers that would read $50 per annum instead of $100. But if gentlemen will notice, probably in the next bill, in the next Congress, you will find an omission of that increase of $100 because the basic salary being fixed at $1,800, that will be omitted, and then no one knows except the auditor of the District of Columbia how much salary the teacher is getting. He will refer back to this law and find that last year it was fixed at $1,800 with $100 longevity pay, and that two years from now it will be $200 additional without being stated in the bill. It rises automatically. We appropriate money and leave it to the auditor to figure up the complex system of longevity pay. Next year that assistant's salary will be simply $1,800, but when the auditor figures up the salary he pays it out of a lump sum and he will get $1,900.

Miss RANKIN. If you had a new assistant, he would go in at $1,800?

Mr. DAVIS. He would go in at the basic salary and then when he stays long enough the longevity pay begins to accumulate.

Miss RANKIN. Then in this bill we are fixing the basic salary at $1,800?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; for this one, and he may be getting $1,600 as a basic salary and longevity pay running him up to $1,800, and now we propose to start him new again on a basic salary of $1,800 instead of $1,400 or $1,500 or $1,600 which he may be getting now. This increases the pay of the teachers automatically right along.

Miss RANKIN. As long as we are fixing the basic salary at $1,800, would it not be in order to fix it at $2,000?

Mr. DAVIS. I think it could be done, but subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Why so? It is as much in order to make it $2,000 as it is $1,800.

Mr. SISSON. The law fixes the amount of longevity in the different classes in which the teachers fall. If you look at the longevity law, you will find a table.

Mr. DAVIS. We do not fix the longevity; we are fixing the basic salary.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Minnesota has replied to the question of the lady from Montana and said that the basic salary up to this time was in the neighborhood of $1,600.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know just what it is; perhaps $1,500 or $1,600.

Mr. MADDEN. If we make it $1,800 now, we are changing the law.

Mr. DAVIS. No; we are operating in accordance with the longevity pay.

Mr. MADDEN. The longevity pay has nothing to do with the basic salary.

Mr. DAVIS. We have a right to change the basic salary when the teacher has arrived at the limit of the longevity pay. When that has expired we change the basic salary.

Mr. MADDEN. This man will get $2,000 now?

Mr. DAVIS. He gets $1,900 for this year.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Mississippi says he is getting $2,000.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this item has been carried for two or three years in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought we had fixed a new basic salary at $1,800; that is the principle we are working on.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is right as to his method of calculating longevity pay.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him, How do you arrive at the total of the bill? How do you arrive at the footing unless you know how many increases there have been?

Mr. DAVIS. We can not arrive at that with any definiteness whatever, so we always add sufficient money in a lump sum in order that the superintendent of instruction and the auditor of the District will be sure to have money enough to pay for these teachers when they figure what they are entitled to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Connecticut will look on page 34, he will find an item which will be illuminating upon the question that he asks—$450,000 for longevity pay. That money may or may not be used, owing to whether or not the audited claims will absorb it. Frequently some of that is carried back into the Treasury.

Mr. TILSON. You have a large lump sum in order to take care of these elastic salaries?

Mr. SISSON. We have to do it.

Mr. DAVIS. And I would say to the gentleman that if he was on this committee he would find it very difficult to ascertain the exact amount necessary to pay salaries under this longevity system.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman know how many there are who come under this longevity rule?

Mr. DAVIS. Virtually all of them.

Mr. WHEELER. The committee figures intelligently and knows exactly how many are entitled to the raise?

Mr. DAVIS. We do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to inquire if this longevity-pay system can not be figured up? As I understood the gentleman, he said there was no way of telling what this pay would be.

Mr. DAVIS. I say that my services upon the committee for the last six or eight years have shown me that I have been unable to get any information satisfactory to myself or to anyone else as to what constitutes this longevity pay.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no doubt about the gentleman's statements, but I wondered whether it was because of the complexity of the system or whether the officials whose duty it is to make these computations could not tell.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the complexity of the system is to blame.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it ought to be changed.

Mr. DAVIS. I think so, too; but if you will attempt to change it you will run up against much opposition.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the gentleman to say he knew how many there are.

Mr. DAVIS. How many teachers, and how often they change their basic salaries.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman state that the assistant under this paragraph can receive more than the $1,800 with the $100 added?

Mr. DAVIS. That is all for next year. The following year he will receive another additional hundred dollars, which will be $2,000, and the next year $2,100, and then $2,200, and so on until the five years have elapsed.

Mr. DOWELL. Was the basic salary of this assistant fixed in any other bill at $1,800?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think so, but I would not say positively. In my judgment, perhaps the man who is now getting $1,800 under this bill previously had a basic salary of $1,200 or $1,400.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman know that that is true?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know it, because you must know that there are a great many thousand teachers, and to keep all of them in mind is difficult.

Mr. DOWELL. The question is, Does the committee fix the basic salaries upon the accumulations of another basic salary with the increase?

Mr. DAVIS. They have a right to, and they frequently do that, and that is the only way we have of having something to say as to the merits of a teacher.

Mr. DOWELL. And of changing the salaries?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; and it has frequently been the fact that many school-teachers in the District have received increases in salary when the public knew nothing about it, and perhaps the committee that does the business was being censured for not increasing salaries.

Mr. DOWELL. There are some others that ought to have their salaries raised more than they have been.

Mr. DAVIS. And probably that would have been done this year were it not for a certain order that was promulgated to the effect, "Let salaries alone for the present."

The Clerk read as follows:

The recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to pay for copying instruments filed for record in his office 40 per cent of the fees collected by him for filing, indexing, and recording said instruments, and the same rate of compensation for making copies of the records of his office, and employees of the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia when employed therein by the day shall receive compensation at the rate of $2.50 for each day so employed, payable out of the fees and emoluments of said office.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My understanding is, and I wish to be corrected if I am wrong, that the director of primary instruction and the assistant director of primary instruction and the directors and assistants in all cases, except in the high schools, or in schools that are so large that the one school needs a superintendent and an assistant superintendent, have equal work to do; that, as a matter of fact, the assistant superintendent is in reality a superintendent of a distinct school, not the assistant superintendent under a superintendent, but a superintendent of a school doing the work that the man or woman, as the case may be, who is classified as superintendent does, and that because of the fact that we give them the title of assistant superintendent we give them less pay. The reason why they get the title of assistant superintendent instead of the title of superintendent is that one is black and the other is white. Nobody disputes that, I think, and I think that ought not to be the case. There was no discrimination in the selection of men who fought the battles of the country in France. All were charged with equal responsibility. Everyone was drafted who was qualified to serve. All you needed were the mental and physical qualifications and citizenship in the United States to make you subject to the military service of your country. If one-tenth of the population of the United States furnished one-tenth of the soldiers to defend the flag, there is no justification why people of that race should be classed as unworthy of equal compensation for equal work.

There was no discrimination between the pay of soldiers of different races. In the American Army all were Americans, all were treated as Americans, all were sent up against the guns of the Germans. There was no thought that a man should be saved because he was black or white. The one purpose of the Army was to win the war and nobody was allowed to go into the Army unless he was a citizen, and I believe now that the country ought to recognize the work of its citizens by giving them an equal chance, and where a citizen of the United States, no matter what his color or his creed may be or his nationality, proves himself qualified to perform the functions of the office to which he has been appointed that he ought to be given equal compensation just as long as he is able to fill the bill, and it does not make any difference who he is if he is not qualified he ought not to be allowed to retain the place, but just as long as he retains the place there ought not to be any distinction in compensation. He should be required to qualify not when he entered upon the job, but as long as he continued to hold the job, and the very moment that he proves himself unqualified or unworthy he ought to be dismissed, but while he is in the service he ought to be given equal consideration and there ought not under any circumstances to be any legislation passed by the Congress of the United States discriminatory against any citizens of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant directors of music, drawing, physical culture, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and penmanship, 7, at $1,300 each: Provided, That the assistant director of penmanship, who shall be an instructor in the normal school and an assistant director in the grades, shall be placed at a basic salary of $1,300 per annum and shall be entitled to an increase of $50 per annum for five years.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if all these basic salaries have been changed in this bill or whether this is something that has been carried for a long time.

Mr. SISSON. What item?

Mr. MADDEN. Page 32, assistant directors of music, and so forth.

Mr. SISSON. No; no basic salary has been changed in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this language carried in the last bill?

Mr. SISSON. We did change some basic salaries last year and a great many of the changes of basic salary were carried in last year's appropriation bill increasing the teachers who were paid less than we thought they were entitled to under the basic salary; but in this bill no basic salary has been changed at all.

Mr. MADDEN. I was just asking for information, and I am thankful to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Group A of class 6, including 7 principals of grade manual-training schools, 334, at $1,000 each.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 16, strike out $1,000 and insert $1,200.

Mr. SISSON. Does the lady from Montana desire that I reserve the point of order? I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the lady from Montana desire to be heard?

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that $1,000 for a principal of a grade manual-training school is altogether too little to offer a teacher, and it seems to me there should be some place where Congress could change this salary to at least $1,200 a year. We find that teachers are leaving schools all over the country to take other work because they can get a better salary, and we know that the grade of teachers who seek the work is not up to the standard that it was a few years ago.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, in addition to the salary carried in this item, each principal of a grade school gets $30 per annum per room. If he has eight rooms he gets $30 per annum for each room under the law. Most of these schools are eight rooms, some are more than eight, so they get eight times $30, in addition to the amount carried in the bill, and there is rarely a school in the city where those particular teachers do not get that amount of money, $240, in addition to this pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Mississippi is that this is not authorized by law?

Mr. SISSON. Not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the statute before him?

Mr. SISSON. The statute is here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the statute. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi a moment ago to the effect that if one of these principals presided over an eight-room school in addition to $1,000 he gets $30 per room per annum. I am interested to find out how that qualification came to be made, why that was made the basis of compensation, why it was that when the qualification was originally made the salary was not fixed definitely rather than part of the salary fixed definitely and part fixed on the number of rooms.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that when his party had control of the House in 1906 they passed a law in 1906 fixing additional compensation of principals in these schools so that they would get $30 for each additional room. Now, I am inclined to believe there is some justice in the law which was passed, some fairness in it, because the supervisory work that a principal does would be largely dependent upon the number of rooms of which he had control. Now, if you look on page 35 of the bill, which you have there, you will find an item to pay this additional amount of money which is provided by law for this class of teachers.

Mr. MADDEN. I was very much interested in hearing the gentleman's statement, but of course I did not want to let it go without giving him an opportunity to explain it in full, as I knew he would be able to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class 3, 543 at $750 each.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is there any provision in the law for increase in the other classes, for the teachers in the class just now being read by the Clerk?

Mr. SISSON. No; except the longevity. What is being read here now is the base pay of the teachers.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman explain to the committee how much these teachers in these classes of $950, $800, and $750 actually receive under the system that the gentleman has explained here?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will have to get the longevity table, which I have here in this statute. You will find the class and the teacher designated here.

Mr. DOWELL. Here are two classes, for example, the ones receiving $800 and the ones receiving $750. Can the gentleman explain to the committee what those teachers are actually receiving under the system adopted?

Mr. SISSON. Now, they receive, of course, the base pay the first year.

Mr. DOWELL. That is, $800?

Mr. SISSON. Eight hundred dollars. Now, if a teacher has been teaching one year, he or she gets $830, and then gets $860 the next year, and $890 the next year, and so on—$30 a year for 10 years.

Mr. DOWELL. And that applies also to the $750 class?

Mr. SISSON. That class does not appear in the longevity law, because in last year's bill we changed the base pay of class 1 from $500 to $750, and class 2 from $600 to $750, and class 3 from $650 to $750, thus eliminating so far as salary is concerned the difference in the pay of the three lower-grade teachers. Now, in each of those grades, in addition to the $750, they get the same longevity that they got when they carried a base salary of $500 and $525, getting $25 increase each year. Now, the gentleman will have to look back at the statutes and see the longevity pay in order to determine just exactly how it all works out. And then if he will take and look it over carefully and give it some very careful thought he will find the rule is a very simple one. But it is very difficult when you try to apply it to teachers getting over $2,000 and get the exact amount.

Mr. DOWELL. It is either very difficult or I am unable to get all of it, because I know in the bill there are certain classes, giving the number of teachers, with the pay of $750. Now, according to the statement of the gentleman, the actual amount that these teachers receive depends upon the number of years they have taught. Is that correct?

Mr. SISSON. Perhaps the reason the gentleman is confused is because the longevity pay does not appear in this item, but if the gentleman will look over on page 34 he will find an item of $450,000 for the purpose of paying the longevity pay of the teachers carried on page 32, and so on. In other words, the teachers get the 10-year longevity pay in these lower classes, the lowest longevity pay being $25, and the next longevity pay being $30 a year. Those two are carried as long as the teacher remains in that particular class and carry an increase of $25 a year in one case and $30 in the next case, until they have been in the school for 10 years or are transferred to a higher grade.

Mr. DOWELL. I am utterly unable to understand how people can live in the city of Washington on $750 or $800 a year.

Mr. SISSON. They do not get that this year, because they get $120 lump sum, which is added to this salary.

I will state to the gentleman that your subcommittee realized that the lower-grade teachers were not getting the salaries which we would like to give them, but we are giving them more than the law authorized, and we are giving them more than the average pay in any of the cities throughout the country. We went into the matter at the time we made these increases. And I do not believe that either the gentleman who is now talking or any other gentleman in the House is more friendly to giving the school-teachers a proper salary than every member of this committee. Every member of the subcommittee has been in favor of giving them a substantial increase in their salary.

Miss RANKIN. May I ask the gentleman if he means to state if we were to try to get 100 new teachers for class 3 they would go in on that basic salary of $750 a year now?

Mr. SISSON. Plus $120; a total of $870.

Miss RANKIN. And the longevity rule does not apply to this $750?

Mr. SISSON. It does; but it does not apply the first year.

Miss RANKIN. It never applies to the new teachers until they have served——

Mr. SISSON. It only applies to the new teacher who has taught one session. For the second session they get longevity pay.

Miss RANKIN. How did you change the basic pay last year to $750 in class 3?

Mr. SISSON. From $500 to $750?

Miss RANKIN. By amending this?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Montana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Miss RANKIN: Page 32, line 20, strike out "$750" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] desire to be recognized?

Mr. DOWELL. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. SISSON. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. DOWELL. The statement made by the gentleman a moment ago was that he was willing to increase this pay, and if he will withdraw the point of order I am certain the committee will increase the pay, as it ought to be done.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether they would or not. I am here now as a servant of the committee, but I do say that for many years the teachers went in at $500, and the subcommittee recommended to the full committee of this House——

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is aware that under the present conditions the teachers can not live in Washington on $750 a year?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the compensation allowed under the recommendation of the committee is the most beggarly compensation that was ever granted to intelligent people; and they must be intelligent in order to be teachers. I think that no class of America's citizens makes as great a sacrifice in their life work as do the teachers of our public schools. Never by any chance, no matter how long they remain in the work, can they put anything aside for old age. Their work is more self-sacrificing than the work of the men on the battle line. Patriotism is the watchword with those who devote their lives to teaching the children of the country.

They occupy a position in the land more important than that occupied by any other class of our citizens. Upon their ability and patriotism and devotion depends the future citizenship of America. The education—intellectual, physical, moral—of the coming citizens of the country is under their charge, and it seems to me that those who are responsible for the development of the public educational institutions of the United States ought to regard the places of school-teachers as among the most responsible places that are to be filled. They ought to regard the necessity for proper compensation.

These girls or men, as the case may be, are required to have a college education. They are required, after they get through with their college course, to go to the Normal Training School for Teachers for a year or two. They are required to become experts in the life work which they follow. There is no other expert class of men or women in America who are called upon to make the sacrifice which these people are expected to make.

The conditions that have surrounded their lives since the beginning of the war in Europe have been as onerous as the conditions surrounding the lives of other people. Girls without any knowledge, without any experience, with substantially no education, have been called into the service of the Government since the war began to do filing work in the Government offices, not only here in Washington, but everywhere throughout the land, and they have been given anywhere from $1,100 to $1,300 and $1,400 a year without any knowledge whatever; and yet here these women who have given years of their early life to acquire an education to fit them for the work to which they propose to devote their lives are compelled by the dictum of the Congress of the United States, so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, to live on starvation wages. It is a shame.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman. I think this is a very interesting theme.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. The cost of living in the District of Columbia has soared so that nobody can calculate it. The wise gentlemen on the District appropriation subcommittee tell us that they do not understand what longevity pay means or how it shall be calculated, but they can readily understand that you can not get more to-day for a dollar than you could ordinarily get before for about 40 cents. They tell me that you can not rent a room anywhere in the District of Columbia without paying $40 or $50 a month for it, and if you can get your breakfast and can get anything to eat with it for $1.50 you are doing well.

Now, if these girls are called upon to work for $525, or say $750 now, how do they manage to live? There is no other city in the Union that pays its teachers so niggardly a salary as this city does. And who is to blame? The Congress of the United States. Who else could be to blame? We ought to have a broader vision. We ought to realize that here at the Nation's Capital we should have the very best talent that can be employed in our schools, and we doubtless have, but we have compelled the talent that we do employ to work at starvation wages. Many of them have been compelled to leave the work which they intended to follow as their life work and take other employment in order that they might keep body and soul together and buy a few clothes to wear. It is a shame. It would not be tolerated anywhere else, and we who speak for the American people do not speak their sentiments when we ask these girls, these women, and frequently men, to work for this standard of wages. I think we ought not to start anyone in a work like this on less than $1,000 a year, after they have spent 10 years of their early life in preparing for the work, qualifying themselves to do the thing which we require them to do in order to build up a high standard of citizenship from our children. We ought to encourage them with the hope that they will at least be able to live in a decent way.

Now I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WHEELER. Never mind. It is all right.

Mr. MADDEN. I said what the gentleman wanted me to say, did I?

So I say that, instead of making points of order against the increase of compensation, this committee ought to be devising ways and means to find out how we can enact a law that will give them compensation commensurate with the sacrifice which they make. Teachers of the public schools command the respect of the American people to a higher degree and to a greater extent than any other people in the Nation. They deserve it. They make more sacrifice. There is no hope for them. They live in an atmosphere which breaks them down nervously, and when they are no longer able to perform the work for which they are employed they are thrown out like a piece of driftwood. They will not keep them unless they are qualified. If you pension them, you pension them out of the savings which they themselves make. They are required to contribute to the pension roll, and frequently it happens that the pension fund which accumulates out of their own savings is dissipated by those who manage the funds, so that as the teachers grow old in the service they find themselves unable even to get the pension from the fund to which they paid. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with what my colleague [Mr. MADDEN] has said, and it does seem to me that the committee has been very considerate to the District Commissioners in recommending that their salaries be raised $1,000, while the poor school-teachers and the poor fellows on the police force and some patrol drivers and station messengers, working for $750 or $800 per annum, starvation wages, have not been considered at all.

Mr. Eidlitz, head of the Housing Corporation, I believe, is trying to make contracts now with clerks here by which they will be furnished with a room and two meals for $45 per month. A single person could not meet all his expenses at $75 per month. There are any number of employees here in the District of Columbia who have families, some of them three or four or five children. It is necessary for them to rent houses with five or six rooms and to clothe and feed and school those children. They can not possibly make both ends meet at $1,000 per annum. They are not considered at all by this committee. The increasing of salaries of teachers and other underpaid employees the chairman of the committee objects to because these salaries are fixed by statute, but at the same time the committee overlook that provision of the statute when it comes to raising the salaries of the District Commissioners. It seems to me that they are unjust to the little fellow who receives starvation wages and who can not meet all expenses at his present salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class 2, 364 at $750 each.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was unable to be here when this matter of the salaries of teachers was first taken up, my attention being occupied with the case of an insane soldier.

I understand that the board of education last year recommended to the District Commissioners an increased appropriation of over $200,000 for the colored schools of this District, but that the recommendation was rejected, no attention being paid to it by the District Commissioners. This year the board of education recommended $245,350 for the colored schools, and practically no attention was paid to that. Now, I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the colored children represent 31 per cent of the total enrollment of the children in the public schools in the District of Columbia, and that the present commissioners did not recommend an appropriation of more than 10 per cent of the total appropriation for the colored schools.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The great trouble about that statement is that it is not a fact.

Mr. DALLINGER. I should like to know what the fact is.

Mr. SISSON. The fact is that $910,000 was appropriated in the last bill for new school buildings in the District of Columbia. Of that amount none has been used. It is available now. In my remarks during the general debate I fully explained the reason why it has not been used. It was because they could not get the labor and could not get the material, because the War Industries Board would not allow it to be transported. Therefore they could not use any of that money. Now, if you will go through these items, you will find that about 33⅓ per cent of them are for the colored schools, which have about one-third of the children.

Mr. DALLINGER. I have been informed by those who know something about the colored schools in the District that the contrary is the case. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the board of education recommended $245,350 to the commissioners for the colored schools?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know. Those recommendations never reach us. The only things that reach us are the recommendations of the commissioners. The board of education deals with the subcommittee on appropriations only in reference to teachers and not in reference to school buildings or school property.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, my authority for the statement which I made is on page 1091 of the estimates submitted by the board of education to the District Commissioners; and, as I stated, these recommendations have been ignored repeatedly. The fact is that the colored schools are being discriminated against in this District, as they are in some other parts of the country. Now, I was not here when the amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Illinois for the increase of salary of one of the assistant superintendents of schools from $3,000 to $3,500. The fact is that these two assistant superintendents originally received the same salary. One of them, who is a white man, has had his salary raised to $3,500, and the other one's salary has not been raised, simply because he is a colored man. That is the fact. You may just as well face it. Now, this colored man is a man who is a credit to any race, a graduate of Howard University, highly educated and admirably qualified for his position, and he is discriminated against simply because he is colored. I think it is pretty small business for a point of order to be made against that amendment by the committee. It was made last year when I offered it. I understand it was made this year when it was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and I want to tell the gentleman from Mississippi that the time is coming when the colored children of this District are going to receive just and equal treatment, so far as their needs for education are concerned, and that time is coming pretty quickly, too.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that the remarks which he has made ought not to be pointed at me. On the contrary, there has not been one word said in the subcommittee or elsewhere as to whether a teacher was colored or white. Not only that, but my associates on the committee will bear testimony, sir, that without a single exception wherever a public school is needed, irrespective of whether it is white or colored, it has received my support. I have not made the least discrimination one way or the other. I think it comes in very poor grace for the gentleman to single me out because, as a member of this subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, it is my duty to take care of the bill presented by the committee; and if the gentleman ever gets to be the chairman of a committee and has charge of a bill on the floor when that side is in power, he will be called upon to do the same thing, and it will be his duty to take care of the bill as reported from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The salaries appropriated herein for teachers in classes 1, 2, and 3, clerks, and librarians in all classes during the fiscal year 1920, shall be in lieu of the present basic or initial salaries for such classes and the present rates of longevity increases of pay for the said classes shall apply to the basic or initial salaries appropriated herein: Provided, That for the year ending June 30, 1920, each of the teachers, clerks, and librarians in said classes shall receive placing in the class to which assigned, so that each teacher shall receive in addition to the basic salary herein provided a longevity increase which shall be equal to the longevity increase which is next above that received June 30, 1919.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The mention of longevity pay in this paragraph calls for some remarks. I think it ought to be stated that the schools of Washington are not what they ought to be. They do not compare with the schools in many other cities of the country. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has stated, contrary to the opinion of some of the other Members here, that we are paying higher salaries than the average city. I do not know how that may be. I think the salaries of the majority of the teachers are insufficient. But I am very decidedly of the opinion that there are a large number of teachers who are paid altogether too much. The curse of this longevity system has rested upon these schools, and we never will have good schools in the District as long as it prevails. Take a teacher who is full of ambition, who inspires his class and brings all the students up on edge, and they finish their examinations with credit. What is the difference? He gets just the same pay. Take another teacher who cares nothing about how the class progresses, and to cite an instance which I have known in this city where two-thirds of the class fail in their examinations. Anyone knows that that is a disgrace to the teacher, for a teacher with capacity would get better results. But longevity pay is added to the salary of the teacher and everything goes on just the same. We have here in these schools too many old freaks and fossils, whose intentions may be good, but who were back numbers 10 or 20 years ago, and ought to have been retired. There is, however, no proper provision for their retirement. The schools are weighed down with them, the scholars laugh at them, but they get longevity pay. If longevity was any evidence of capacity, these elderly people ought to receive twice as much as they are getting.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is there no way to eliminate the freaks and fossils and the incompetent teachers?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not under the present system, but there ought to be a way. It has been suggested that possibly there is authority in the board of education that controls the hiring of teachers, but I think not.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I think your committee has made a start in that direction, to which I hope the gentleman will not raise the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not I, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS. On page 34, at the bottom of the page, after the figures "$450,000," is a provision:

Provided, That hereafter the board of education is authorized, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to withhold the longevity increase of any teacher because of an unsatisfactory efficiency rating.

This is the first time that this has appeared in the bill, and I hope there will be no point of order made to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I certainly will make no point of order upon it. I have sat here several years and have sometimes known some movements to be made in that direction, but they were promptly stifled by a point of order or in some other way.

Mr. DAVIS. I think this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; I hope the gentleman will not admit that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will not be made by me, but we ought to go considerably further. I presume the committee thought, in consideration of past experience, that they would do well if they got this provision through. I will say to the gentleman—and I thank him for calling my attention to that, because it escaped my notice—I am glad that they have gone that far, but we ought to have some provision so that when the general superintendent or the superintendent of the school knows where the work is not being done up to the mark and knows where he can get a competent and efficient and ambitious young teacher, the superintendent will be able to go out and secure him. That is the way the schools are brought up elsewhere and the only way that you can have the schools that you ought to have in this District. I hope the House, which pays little attention to these matters, will wake up to its duty.

I may be incorrectly informed, but I have been told that this longevity system is preserved largely because the teachers of the District are in favor of it. If so, I want to say that it does not show the proper spirit on their part. The teachers ought not to be in favor of any such rule. They ought to favor a system whereby those who do the best work will receive the best pay. It is a system that stifles ambition and discourages all attempts to be perfect in their work. The teachers are few who can resist its effect. It can not help but injure the schools from one end to the other. The teachers' pay should be fixed from year to year in accordance with the work performed and not in accordance with the time that they have served. The principal's salary should not be fixed in accordance with the number of rooms, although there is some reason for that provision, but none can be given for the longevity pay. As long as the blight of the longevity system rests upon the schools, so long they will be inefficient. The whole school system of the city needs overhauling and rebuilding. The longevity system should be abolished; a pension system, with a provision for compulsory retirement when the work of the teacher is not up to the proper standard, should be provided; all of the teachers should be marked and graded on their work under a more ecmplete plan of supervision than any which has been used, and new blood with new methods should be brought in by obtaining teachers from outside. This is the only way in which real schools can be maintained, no matter how good your superintendents or high-school principals may be.

The Clerk read as follows:

Longevity pay: For longevity pay for director of intermediate instruction, supervising principals, supervisor and assistant supervisor of manual training, principals of normal high and manual training high schools, the assistant principal of the Central High School, the assistant principal (who shall be dean of girls) of the Central High School, principals of grade manual training schools, heads of departments, director and assistant director of primary instruction, directors and assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, kindergartens, and penmanship, teachers, clerks, librarians and clerks, and librarians to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended by the acts approved May 26, 1908, May 18, 1910, and June 26, 1912, $450,000: Provided, That hereafter the board of education is authorized, on recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to withhold the longevity increase of any teacher because of an unsatisfactory efficiency rating.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the provision after the figures "$450,000," in line 21, down to and including the word "rating," in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Central High School (New): Engineer, $1,500; 2 assistant engineers, at $900 each, electrician, $1,200; 4 firemen, at $720 each; 2 coal passers, at $540 each; janitor, $1,100; 3 assistant janitors, at $900 each; gardener, $840; night watchman, $720; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; 15 laborers, at $500 each; in all, $22,280.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I observe that the salary of the janitor is fixed at $1,100. I want to ask the gentleman if the janitor gets indirectly any more pay? Does he get quarters free?

Mr. SISSON. No; he gets no quarters. Of course, he gets the $120 increase provided for all employees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He gets no perquisites?

Mr. SISSON. None whatever.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dunbar High School: Engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; two firemen, at $720 each; coal passer, $540; janitor, $1,000; assistant janitor, $900; nine laborers, at $500 each; two charwomen, at $480 each; night watchman, $720; in all, $12,260.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask if the laborers give all of their time? Here are nine laborers, at $500 each. Do they give all their time to the work?

Mr. SISSON. No; the laborers are not employed until the buildings are closed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical inspectors: Chief medical and sanitary inspector, who shall, under the direction of the health officer of the District of Columbia, give his whole time to, and exercise the direction and control of, the medical inspection and sanitary conditions of the public schools of the District of Columbia, $2,500; 16 medical inspectors of public schools, 1 of whom shall be a woman, 4 shall be dentists, and 4 shall be of the colored race, at $500 each; in all, $10,500.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if they can get a doctor of good standing, a first-class man, to give all his time to the medical care of the schools for $2,500?

Mr. SISSON. I think they have a very good man in charge of this work.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, including furniture and repairs of same, stationery, printing, ice, purchase and repair of equipment for high-school cadets, and other necessary items not otherwise provided for, including an allowance of not exceeding $300 per annum for livery of horse or not exceeding $360 per annum for garage for each the superintendent of schools, the superintendent of janitors, the two assistant superintendents, the director of primary instruction, the school cabinet-maker, the general secretary of community centers, the supervising principal in charge of the white special schools, and the supervising principal of the colored special schools, and including not exceeding $3,000 for books, books of reference, and periodicals, $75,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Do I understand that each of the principals here has a garage for the rent of which he is allowed $30 a month?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; not a garage, but where he devotes his horse and buggy or his conveyance to the performance of his duties he is allowed that much for maintenance. That is carried in the bill in other items.

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to know if they were allowed that much for garage rent.

Mr. SISSON. That simply means gasoline allowance.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the board of education is authorized to use all necessary floor and room space in the Franklin School building for office purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. What are they going to do with the scholars who will be ousted if they take all of this floor space for offices down there?

Mr. SISSON. They will not do that until they have provided a place for these children. If the gentleman will look at the hearings, he will find that the board of education are simply authorized to do that, and that it is understood they would not change this space until provision had been made.

Mr. WALSH. Apparently they need six additional offices. Are they not furnished accommodations in the District Building?

Mr. SISSON. No official under the school board is in the District Building at all. They are all in this Franklin School. There are but a very few children who attend the Franklin School. As the schools of the District have grown, the number of clerks essential to administering the school districts has also grown, and if the gentleman were to visit the Franklin School he would find they are much crowded now for office space.

Mr. WALSH. I have been there; but I also have a recollection of visiting some school official down here at the District Building.

Mr. SISSON. I can not imagine who that would be.

Mr. WALSH. It might have been the health officer.

Mr. SISSON. It might have been a branch of the purchasing division or the auditor's office.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity for six additional offices for the use of the board of education?

Mr. SISSON. The board of education do not need it themselves. They have a board room. That is for the school officials.

Mr. WALSH. Each principal has an office in his own school, has he not?

Mr. SISSON. No. What are called principals in this bill do not always mean principals actually in charge of a school. They may be supervisory principals. The activities of the schools have grown greatly and the number of scholars have perhaps more than doubled since they first went into the Franklin School. Some years ago an effort was made to absorb all of the Franklin School, and at that time I did not believe they needed the space. That is some seven or eight years ago. I prevented its being done; but since the growth of the number of scholars, the number of officials and clerks has necessarily compelled a need for this space. I do not know that they could absorb all of the space within that building within the next current year, but they will take so much of it there will be very little left for teaching space.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is quite sure that by taking over this space for offices he will not encourage a demand for a new school building in that vicinity to take care of these pupils?

Mr. SISSON. No; it is not contemplated at all.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations in this act shall not be paid to any person employed under or in connection with the public schools of the District of Columbia who shall solicit or receive, or permit to be solicited or received, on any public-school premises, any subscription or donation of money or other thing of value from pupils enrolled in such public schools for presentation of testimonials to school officials or for any purpose except such as may be authorized by the board of education at a stated meeting upon the written recommednation of the superintendent of schools.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That is a very peculiar provision of law, and I should like to ask a brief explanation of it.

Mr. SISSON. That has been carried several years.

Mr. TILSON. I note that it is in the current law, and I have wondered at the reason for such a provision as that.

Mr. SISSON. Very serious complaints came to the board of education, and those complaints continued for a number of years before the board of education took it up with the District Commissioners, and they took it up with the subcommittee. Mr. Page was the chairman of the subcommittee at the time, and we had quite extensive hearings upon the kind and character of solicitations made. The gentleman would have been amazed at the number of different kinds and purposes for which subscriptions were taken. The school authorities were caused a great deal of trouble, and upon the urgent recommendation of the board of education and many of the teachers and superintendents, we put that provision in the bill and it worked very well. Of course, this does not prevent the school children from taking up their little subscriptions to buy whatever the school may need in the way of balls and bats and various and sundry things.

Mr. TILSON. I thoroughly approve of the purpose intended to be accomplished, but it seemed to me that might have been accomplished by the board of education itself or by the superintendent of the schools without any legislation.

Mr. SISSON. They doubted their authority to do that without the law, and had not been able to do it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Major and superintendent, $4,000; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,500 each; 3 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 11 captains, at $2,000 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk (who shall be a stenographer), $1,800; clerk and stenographer, $1,500; clerks—one (who shall be assistant property clerk) $1,200, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 $700; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $840 each; additional compensation for 35 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $16,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary; additional compensation for 14 privates detailed for special service in the various precincts for the prevention and detection of crime, at the rate of $120 per annum, $1,680, or so much thereof as may be necessary; additional compensation for one inspector or captain and one lieutenant detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, at $400 each; 20 lieutenants, one of whom shall be harbor master, at $1,600 each; 54 sergeants, one of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,400 each; 493 privates of class 3, at $1,320 each; 86 privates of class 2, at $1,200 each; 187 privates of class 1, at $1,080 each; amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1920, $2,000; 8 telephone clerks, at $900 each; 18 janitors, at $600 each; laborer, $720; messenger $600; inspector, mounted on horse or motor vehicle, $360; 58 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on horses or for motor vehicle allowances, at $360 each; 64 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on bicycles, at $60 each; 35 drivers, at $900 each; 5 police matrons, at $720 each, to possess police powers of arrest; 4 policewomen, at $900 each; in all, $1,219,660.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How many policemen of all grades have they now in the District?

Mr. SISSON. They have seven hundred and sixty-six privates.

Mr. MADDEN. The number has not been increased at all the last few years, has it?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much?

Mr. SISSON. We gave them all they asked for last year. They have enough now to man all the police stations now in the District. It takes a certain number of policemen to each station.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but it is not a question of manning the police stations; it is a question of patroling the territory.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but the police stations are presumed to take care of the territory and have been so arranged. I do not believe this last police station has been put in operation; if so, very lately, because they were unable to get the men after the war broke out, and the police force is considerably short now. Just what number I am unable to inform the gentleman, but something like 80, 90, or 100 policemen.

Mr. MADDEN. And less men on the force than authorized?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. They have been unable to get them.

Mr. MADDEN. I see they have been using military police.

Mr. SISSON. They supplied the deficit by having enough soldiers detailed to take the place of the policemen they were unable to get; they actually detailed soldiers to do police duty.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice laborers under this provision of the bill get only $720 a year. Now, laborers in other departments of the Government get anywhere from $840 to $900.

Mr. SISSON. Well, most of them outside of the Postal Service get $660 to $720. These laborers are rather caretakers of the police station.

Mr. MADDEN. There are janitors there who do that. A caretaker is a janitor.

Mr. SISSON. He is a janitor, but they have some little assistant laborers; some of those are rather old men.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman state a laborer is an assistant to a janitor?

Mr. SISSON. In many cases.

Mr. MADDEN. Then a laborer gets $120 more a year than a janitor, and he is surely not an assistant to the janitor?

Mr. SISSON. The laborer that they use here in this is really where it is a little work about the police station to keep the police station in order. The janitor looks after the heating, fire, and sweeps the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. Tell me that over again; I do not get that.

Mr. SISSON. The laborer there is a man who, when a little something is out of order, does work around the police station, such as a little carpenter work; a little work around the police station to keep it in order.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the matter with Gompers and his crowd? Are they going to turn out the carpenters working around the stations?

Mr. SISSON. I am not trying to raise any more trouble along that line than I can, and I hope the gentleman will not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman referred to details of soldiers to act as policemen. I suppose we have all noticed some of them acting as crossing policemen. How is that done?

Mr. SISSON. That I can not tell the gentleman because I know nothing absolutely how it is done. I know nothing about what power did it; but my understanding is, of course, that they were furloughed to do this duty, but by what authority I can not tell; but those men, as a rule, I understand—and this is not by any knowledge or investigation but an understanding I have about it—many of them were men in limited service and they were furloughed, and, I will not state this positively, I understand they did not get their salaries as soldiers while they were on furlough but perhaps drew their salary as policemen.

Mr. MANN. They are paid as policemen in the District?

Mr. SISSON. They are paid as policemen, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. And not required to wear a policeman's uniform?

Mr. SISSON. No; they wear, as I saw them on the street, a soldier's uniform.

Mr. MADDEN. Military police?

Mr. SISSON. Marked "Military police."

Mr. MANN. That is what I am trying to get at. I do not quite understand how a soldier is furloughed from the Army and employed by the District Commissioners as a military policeman.

Mr. SISSON. I can not give the gentleman any information.

Mr. MANN. There is no such information drawn out by the subcommittee?

Mr. SISSON. No, sir.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that this morning I also saw a man in military uniform delivering mail, attached to the city post office.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, a man in the Army may have resigned and he is entitled to wear his uniform a certain length of time and he may be employed as a letter carrier or may have been a letter carrier restored.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer, $3,500; 2 deputy chief engineers, at $2,500 each; 8 battalion chief engineers, at $2,000 each; fire marshal, $2,000; deputy fire marshal, $1,400; 4 inspectors, at $1,080 each; chief clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,400; clerk (who shall be a stenographer and typewriter), $1,400; 38 captains, at $1,500 each; 40 lieutenants, at $1,320 each; 41 sergeants, at $1,200 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,000; assistant superintendent of machinery, $1,200; 27 engineers, at $1,200 each; 27 assistant engineers, at $1,140 each; 2 pilots, at $1,150 each; 2 marine engineers, at $1,200 each; 2 assistant marine engineers, at $1,140 each; 2 marine firemen, at $840 each; 342 privates of class 2, at $1,140 each; 103 privates of class 1, at $960 each; hostler, $600; laborer, $600; in all, $761,020.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand that this is the first year that the two-platoon system has been in operation in the Fire Department of the District of Columbia. Am I correct?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; this is the first time.

Mr. DALLINGER. I am very much interested in that system and in favor of it on general principles, and I simply wanted to ask the gentleman from Mississippi in charge of this bill what the additional expense of the double-platoon system was in the District this last year?

Mr. SISSON. About 30 per cent in round numbers. This last year, however, is not fair—well it is fair in its expenditure, but not a fair test of the system, because they suffered the same inconvenience in reference to getting firemen that they had in getting policemen. Many firemen were of draft age, and I have now forgotten, but quite a large number of them were taken into the Army, and they had great difficulty in getting young men who were active and strong to stand the examination, and by the way, it is one of the most rigid examinations of any examination, and I do not think they have been able up to date to do much with the two-platoon system, but they will begin now to put it into operation before the close of the year.

Mr. DALLINGER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enforcement of the provisions of an act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, and an act for the prevention of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, whooping cough, chicken pox, epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis, and typhoid fever in the District of Columbia, approved February 9, 1907, and an act to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District of Columbia, approved May 13, 1908, under the direction of the health officer of said District, manufacture of serums, including their use in indigent cases, and for the prevention of infantile paralysis and other communicable diseases, including salaries or compensation for personal services, not exceeding $25,000, when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the enforcement and execution of said acts, and for the prevention of such other communicable diseases as hereinbefore provided, purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, purchase of reference books and medical journals, and maintenance of quarantine station and smallpox hospital, $40,000: Provided, That any bacteriologist employed under this appropriation shall not be paid more than $7 per day and may be assigned by the health officer to the bacteriological examination of milk and other dairy products and of the water supplies of dairy farms, and to such other sanitary work as in the judgment of the health officer will promote the public health, whether such examinations be or be not directly related to contagious diseases.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman in charge of the bill think, in view of the experience of this city and the rest of the country during the last few months, that he ought to include influenza in the list of communicable diseases that ought to be provided against?

Mr. SISSON. I will state frankly to the gentleman from Connecticut that the subject has not come to us; but the gentleman will notice, after enumerating diseases, the language is broad enough to cover other communicable diseases, and they did, by the way, take steps in reference to influenza here under this very act.

Mr. TILSON. They construed the act as being broad enough to cover it, although it is not specifically mentioned in the act itself?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. You will notice down there it says "infantile paralysis and other communicable diseases," and under that head, if it is an infectious or contagious disease, they construe that language to be broad enough.

The Clerk read as follows:

Juvenile court: Judge, $3,600; clerk, $2,000; deputy clerk, who is authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer, $1,480; financial clerk, who is authorized to act as deputy clerk, $1,200; stenographer and typewriter, who is authorized to act as a deputy clerk, $1,080; stenographer and typewriter for judge's work, and to aid in keeping records in clerk's office, $1,080; probation officers—chief, $1,800; assistant chief (who shall also be investigating officer for children's cases), $1,500, 2 at $1,200 each, 1 for adult cases $1,200, 4 at $1,000 each; investigating officer for adult cases, $1,200; record and information clerk for probation office, $1,200; clerk for probation office, $900; 2 baliffs, at $900 each; telephone operator, $600; messenger, $600; janitor, $600; charwoman, $240; in all, $28,480.

Mr. MANN. The spelling of the word "baliffs" should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction of the spelling of the word "baliffs" will be changed to "bailiffs."

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee if he knows what has become of the bill for the creation of a new juvenile-court code that we worked on here sometime ago and which evidently was very badly needed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. I know it passed the House, but I do not know whether it passed the Senate or not.

Mr. MADDEN. Did it not pass the Senate?

Mr. SISSON. The only thing I know of is that it passed the House, but I do not know whether it passed the Senate or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Police court: Two judges, at $3,600 each; clerk, $2,200; deputy clerks—one $1,600, two $1,500, two at $1,200 each; deputy financial clerk, $1,500; deputy assistant financial clerk, $1,500; probation officer, $1,500; two assistant probation officers, at $1,200 each; seven bailiffs, at $900 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $600; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; firemen, $600; assistant janitor, $300; matron, $600; four cleaners, at $360 each; telephone operator, $480; in all, $36,240.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What do they do with deputy marshals in a police court? Is not that a Government office?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that under the marshal of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. They call them all marshals.

Mr. MADDEN. Bailiffs, I thought they had.

Mr. SISSON. They do have a bailiff and a marshal.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the difference between a bailiff and a marshal?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that I could tell the gentleman exactly what the difference is. The bailiff waits on the court, is a sort of a court crier, and the marshal goes out and serves papers and arrests people.

Mr. MADDEN. The bailiff does that.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the bailiff in the District of Columbia is that sort of a fellow. I think he sits around and waits on the court and on the jury and performs functions of that kind.

Mr. MADDEN. And renders the decisions of the court, and things like that?

Mr. SISSON. Well, I do not know that he does that. Some of them may think they are able to do that, but I do not know that the judges have resigned their functions to them yet.

Mr. MADDEN. How many marshals have we?

Mr. SISSON. That I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. We have a deputy marshal here. Do we have a chief marshal?

Mr. SISSON. This is a regular marshal of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that marshal in the police court an employee of the marshal of the District?

Mr. SISSON. He is under his supervision, but I am not absolutely sure whether he is appointed by the marshal or not. I believe he is, however, appointed by the marshal. I have not investigated the method of appointment. Of course, the marshal is appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if he is appointed by the marshal he ought to be appropriated for through the marshal's office.

Mr. SISSON. Each court's expenses are kept separately. It would be impossible to keep up with the expenses of the courts unless each court was able to control its own items of expense.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the difference between the expense of the police court and its receipts?

Mr. SISSON. That I can not tell. I did not make any inquiry about that, nor did any member of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY FUND.

To be expended only in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, public insanitary conditions, calamity by flood or fire or storm, and of like character, and in all cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for, in the discretion of the commissioners, $8,000: Provided, That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any such articles above the market price shall be rejected and new bids received or purchases made in open market, as may be most economical and advantageous to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the proviso.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he can explain what this proviso means?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that that proviso has been in the bill for some time.

Mr. MADDEN. I read: "That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any such articles above the market price shall be rejected and new bids received or purchases made in open market." Who is going to tell what the market price is?

Mr. SISSON. The commissioners themselves.

Mr. MADDEN. How do they know? The market price keeps changing every 15 minutes. It is a funny kind of proviso.

Mr. SISSON. It has been carried for a number of years.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is subject to a point of order. I will make the point of order on it.

Mr. SISSON. It was in the bill even when my friend was a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. MADDEN. That does not make it right.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). Is there a law that provides for these purchases?

Mr. SISSON. This is a pure limitation on the expenditure of the $8,000. There is no absolutely permanent law; nothing except the limitation upon the expenditure of the $8,000.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman thinks it is a wise provision?

Mr. SISSON. I do; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not seem to me to be susceptible of intelligent administration.

Mr. SISSON. There are a great many small articles, as the gentleman knows, for which you can not advertise, and in the purchase of these articles this is simply a protection to the Treasury. These gentlemen are charged with the duty of knowing what these things are worth in the market, and they are not authorized to expend this money for any article where the price asked is greater than the market price. I do not know the history of how it got into the bill, except that it went on long before I came to Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. They have the power to refuse to buy.

Mr. SISSON. I thought perhaps the gentleman himself might explain it to me, because it went on when he was a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. MADDEN. It is so badly written that perhaps I may have written it myself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I will withdraw it because the gentleman from Mississippi smiles so sweetly. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COURTS AND PRISONS.

Support of convicts: For support, maintenance, and transportation of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia; expenses of shipping remains of deceased convicts to their homes in the United States, and expenses of interment of unclaimed remains of deceased convicts; expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped convicts and rewards for their recapture; to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $100,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi how much of this $100,000 is for support, maintenance, and transportation of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia, how much is for expenses of shipping the remains of deceased convicts to their homes in the United States and expenses of interment of unclaimed remains of deceased convicts, and how much is for expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped convicts and rewards for their capture?

Mr. SISSON. It is not itemized in our hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought maybe the gentleman from Mississippi would know, since the committee raised the appropriation from $55,000 to $100,000. I thought the committee would have some reason for adding the $45,000 to the former appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. Originally $110,000 was appropriated in the bill for 1918, and they had a deficiency of $10,000. It was contemplated at one time that all of these prisoners should be sent to Occoquan, but some of these judges have not sent them there.

Mr. MADDEN. They could not send a man to Occoquan if he were found guilty of a felony. That is merely a Bridewell, as I understand, for misdemeanors.

Mr. SISSON. No. They have a good many life-term men down at Occoquan. But the arrangement was made by the judges because the accommodations were not then sufficient at Occoquan, and are not sufficient now to keep these prisoners, and the judges have continued to send them to Fort Leavenworth and Atlanta. That accounts for the small amount asked for and appropriated for 1919; but there will be a considerable addition to what has been asked for. The gentleman understands that the current law carries $55,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I said.

Mr. SISSON. The bill for 1919 carried $110,000 and $10,000 deficiency. Most of this is for the maintenance of our prisoners by a contract with the Atlanta Penitentiary, where we pay the cost of the maintenance of the prisoners.

Mr. MADDEN. Do we not send some of these prisoners to the State of Virginia and the State of Maryland?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MADDEN. We used to.

Mr. SISSON. I think perhaps we formerly did, but I do not think any of them go there now. At a time when the penitentiaries could not accommodate them the judges would send the prisoners to some State prison where it was convenient, but I do not think they do now.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not this largely increased appropriation indicate a greater amount of crime in the last year than formerly?

Mr. SISSON. No. Nothing can be reflected in this increased appropriation over that carried in the current year, because under the current year it was understood that improvements would be made at Occoquan to take care of the prisoners there. But when the war came on there was difficulty in getting material—not labor, because the prisoners themselves do most of the labor, except supervisory labor.

Mr. MADDEN. They make brick down there, do they not?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; the brickyard has been running, and I understand a great amount of the brick have been absorbed here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. They thought it was more profitable to sell the brick at fabulous prices, did they?

Mr. SISSON. They needed the brick for District purposes, and under the provision of the law they were not permitted to sell brick in the open market.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell the committee where they used any brick in the District of Columbia in the last year, except to build about 10 houses?

Mr. SISSON. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. There was not any brick used.

Mr. SISSON. The Government has used some brick. I do not know how these brick were finally disposed of.

Mr. MADDEN. There was no brick used here.

Mr. SISSON. They furnished most of the brick for the Central High School, but that was completed sometime ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Was that built this year?

Mr. SISSON. No; I say that was finished sometime ago. I do not know that all the work at the Central High School has absolutely been completed yet, but, of course, the building has been completed. I think they did some work there this year, but how much I can not tell.

Mr. MADDEN. That was plastering and interior work, wasn't it?

Mr. SISSON. I think they used some brick there, too, but how much I can not tell.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the gentleman can not tell whether this is on account of increased crime?

Mr. SISSON. Of course, all of our maintenance has increased greatly within the last year, on account of the great increase in the cost of living and food supply.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman, Do the prisoners at Occoquan raise their own food supply?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; in so far as they can. You know they went down into a wilderness there.

Mr. MADDEN. How much land does the Government own there?

Mr. SISSON. I think they bought originally 1,100 acres, but they have added perhaps 900 or 1,000 acres since they carried the reformatory down there. They have both institutions there now.

Mr. MADDEN. Another thing. How many prisoners have we there?

Mr. SISSON. I think in both institutions in the neighborhood of about 400 or 500. We inquired into that, but my recollection is not very distinct.

Mr. MADDEN. Enough prisoners to work all these 2,000 acres of land?

Mr. SISSON. I think so. They have an orchard there, I understand, which of course does not require a great deal of work.

Mr. MADDEN. On the 2,000 acres of land do they raise food enough to feed all the 500 prisoners?

Mr. SISSON. If it was fertile land they would certainly raise more than enough.

Mr. MADDEN. How much do they raise?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know exactly.

Mr. MADDEN. How much of a deficit is there in the operation of the institution every year?

Mr. SISSON. This money is covered into the Treasury when the products are sold, and there is a very accurate accounting taken, and Mr. Tweedale, I think, made a statement to the committee. I am not certain whether it went into the RECORD or not. I asked him to make a statement, and I think he made a statement covering the itemized expenditures and the itemized income. Of course, we could not tell just what that was this year, because it is in the middle of the year.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is Mr. Tweedale?

Mr. SISSON. He is the auditor of the District of Columbia. I ought to have called him the auditor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have two minutes in which to answer the question.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that I will take the two minutes. If the gentleman will look in the report of the Board of Charities, he will find the information from 1911 down to 1918. In 1918, $22,182 was credited; in 1907, $37,180 was credited; in 1916, $15,244, and so on.

Mr. MADDEN. Credited to what?

Mr. SISSON. Paid into the Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. And that is all the money that was paid in out of this whole institution?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will understand that they are completing their buildings, clearing up the land and improving it, pulling up stumps, and so on. In other words, they went down there into the wilderness without a stick of mint. They took that land which was absolutely wild, and they have been improving it. It is quite an institution. In my judgment, it is going to pay the expenses of the convicts when it is put into cultivation. I think the management is extremely good.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I think we have reached a very important point in the consideration of the bill, and we have worked pretty hard this afternoon, and I see there are not a great many Members present.

Mr. SISSON. I hope the gentleman will not cut us off at this time.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is about time.

Mr. MANN. We can not finish the bill to-night. There are 30 more pages.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest that the gentleman accommodate himself to the situation.

Mr. SISSON. Let us run 30 minutes longer. I think the last inquiries made by the gentleman from Illinois were not for information very much desired.

Mr. MADDEN. It was interesting and valuable. I do not know of anyone else who could have supplied it as intelligently as the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, if there was a quorum here I might insist upon going on, but I am helpless without a quorum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13277, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow may be dispensed with and that the pending bill be made a special order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the business on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow and the pending bill be made a special order. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as far as I am concerned, I would have no objection in the morning to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday, but I do not think it is a very good practice with the small membership we have at present to make the request when there might be Members who have matters that they wish to call up. In other words, I do not think we ought to get into the position, which we are getting into, of leaving everything to be considered by a report from the Committee on Rules. Later in the session we will have to dispense with Calendar Wednesday nearly all the time.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, what committee has the call to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MOON. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has a bill on the calendar already reported.

Mr. MANN. An appropriation bill would not be in order to-morrow.

Mr. MOON. I want to ask whether there is any order fixed for the consideration of the judicial salary bill. I doubt the propriety of putting that ahead of the Post Office bill. I am willing to pass over Calendar Wednesday if we can come in after the District bill.

Mr. GARD. There was a rule of that kind, I think.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. For to-night I object.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin in place of Mr. TOWNER of Iowa as a member of the committee.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from The Adjutant General of the Army, together with report showing distribution of official documents, regulations, manuals, publications, etc., pertaining to the War Department, made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1571); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, inviting attention to items in the estimates of appropriations for the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1572); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the commissioner of Freedman's Savings & Trust Co., transmitting annual report of the Freedman's Savings & Trust Co. for the year ended December 1, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1573); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the twenty-eighth annual report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications covering the fiscal year from July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1423); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHERLEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services are no longer required, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 850), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of the Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12839) granting a pension to Bronislawa Wypiewski; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11561) granting an increase of pension to Patrick M. Droney; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10693) granting an increase of pension to Tony K. Wilson; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11024) granting an increase of pension to Abel B. Conger; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12475) granting an increase of pension to John Weiss; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11002) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Faris; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13006) granting an increase of pension to Tillie Wester; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12367) granting a pension to Patrick Lehan; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7248) granting a pension to Eliza Greten; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12398) granting a pension to Henry Simpson; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SCULLY: A bill (H. R. 13320) appropriating money for the improvement of the Shrewsbury River, N. J., up to Red Bank, on the North Branch, and to Branchport, on the South Branch; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 13321) providing for the local commemoration in the city of Hutchinson, county of McLeod, State of Minnesota, of the soldiers, sailors, marines, and aviators who lost their lives and participated in the service of the United States during the present war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCULLY: A bill (H. R. 13322) making provision for the construction of a canal across the State of New Jersey to connect the Delaware River with New York Harbor; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13323) appropriating money for the improvement of the Raritan River, N. J.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 13324) to provide transportation, storage, and marketing facilities for and to regulate commerce among the States in live stock, meats, and other products derived from live stock or the slaughtering of live stock; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 13325) to suspend immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 13326) to provide relief for commissioned officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted persons in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and the Army Nurse Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 13327) to provide for the retention of all uniforms issued to soldiers and sailors of the United States who have been honorably discharged, and providing also for privilege of using same, and for one month's extra pay upon being discharged, and authorizing War and Navy Departments to sell at cost surplus clothing and supplies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill (H. R. 13328) to provide for the retention of all uniforms issued to soldiers, sailors, and marines and providing also for the use of same; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOON: Resolution (H. Res. 475) providing for the consideration of House bill 13308, Post Office appropriation bill; to the Committee on Rules.

By Miss RANKIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 363) proposing recognition by the Congress of the United States of the right of Irish independence, and requesting the commissioners plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the international peace conference to present to the conference the right of Ireland to freedom, independence, and self-determination; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FLOOD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 364) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to the Republic of Peru; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 13329) granting a pension to Catharine Rodgers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 13330) granting an increase of pension to Silas H. Avery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13331) granting an increase of pension to John H. Bartlett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 13332) granting a pension to Nancy E. Mullins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 13333) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Charles A. Ranlett major of Infantry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill (H. R. 13334) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Christy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13335) granting an increase of pension to Maria Kuehn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 13336) granting a pension to Charles Michener; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolutions adopted by the Principals' Club of the Los Angeles city schools, petitioning Congress to pass Senate bill 4987; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 11, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee day by day for the daily tasks of life. The most common drudgery is made glorious by Thy blessing, and the high tasks of this great office call for the constant support and guidance of the loving Father in heaven. Let Thy blessing rest upon Thy servants this day in the discharge of the duties that are upon them. May they realize that they are working together with God for the accomplishment of a great ideal. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONGRATULATIONS OF BRAZILIAN SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate congratulations of the Brazilian Senate on the successful conclusion of the war, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The congratulations are as follows:

The PRESIDENT OF THE NORTH AMERICAN SENATE:
Washington:

I take pleasure in informing your excellency that the Brazilian Senate, after hearing read the Government's communication of the signing yesterday of the armistice granted by the allies to Germany, resolved, on motion of Senator Ruy Barboza, amidst boisterous applause and by unanimous vote of its members, to suspend to-day's session as a sign of exultation at the victory of the European allied arms and those of North America, the duty falling upon me to address the governments and senates of the allied countries expressing the sentiments of unmeasured jubilation and indescribable pride with which the Brazilian Senate and Nation received those conjectured victories which for democracy and for human liberties for four years have been gloriously fought in the fields of Europe.

Very respectfully,

ANTONIO AZEVEDO,
President of the Senate.

CONGRATULATIONS OF SPANISH SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting a translation of a note of the Spanish Ambassador announcing that the Spanish Senate had directed to be entered on its journal congratulations on the triumph of justice over force, which will be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 7, 1918.

The Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States.

SIR: At the request of the Spanish Ambassador at this Capital, in accordance with the instructions of his Government, I have the honor to inclose for the information of the Senate a translation of a note from the ambassador announcing that the Spanish Senate unanimously directed to be entered on its journal, in view of the signing of the armistice of November 11, 1918, congratulations on the peace and the triumph of justice over force.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

EMBASSY OF SPAIN,
Washington, November 15, 1918.

The Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State of the United States.

MR. SECRETARY: By order of my Government and with the request that you kindly make the fact known to the American Houses of Congress, I have the honor to inform you that at the session of the Spanish Senate Señor Gimeno, former minister of state, delivered a brilliant speech eulogizing peace and dedicating effusive words to all and each of the allied countries. After a short debate, the Senate unanimously ordered to be entered into the journal that it congratulates itself on the peace and triumph of justice over strength.

I avail myself, etc., JUAN RIANO.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may say a single word in connection with the letters of congratulation which have just been presented and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, we had some similar letters referred to the committee, and the committee unanimously reported a resolution which the Senate adopted, requesting the Vice President to respond in the name of the Senate and acknowledge the resolutions. It seems to me it is hardly necessary to go through that form again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair states to the Senator from Massachusetts that he construed the resolution as applicable to all subsequently received, and so has answered them all in a congratulatory way.

Mr. LODGE. So I supposed.

SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the credentials of Walter E. Edge, Senator elect from the State of New Jersey, which will be considered read, printed in the RECORD, and placed on the file.

The credentials are as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY:

I, Thomas F. McGran, president of the senate, acting governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that at an election held in the said State on the 5th day of November, 1918, Walter E. Edge was duly chosen and elected by the people of the said State of New Jersey to be a Member of the United States Senate for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of New Jersey to be hereunto affixed at Trenton, this 26th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third.

THOMAS F. MCGRAN.

By the president of the senate, acting governor:

[SEAL.] THOMAS F. MARTIN, Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM OREGON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1918.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Yesterday I tendered my resignation as United States Senator in Congress for Oregon to the governor of the State of Oregon, by a telegram, the following of which is a copy:

"I hereby tender my resignation as United States Senator in Congress for the State of Oregon to take effect on the 17th day of December, 1918."

Very respectfully, yours, FRED. W. MULKEY.

SALE OF WASTE PAPER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the receipts of the sale of waste paper in that department, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYEES IN AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 1558).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing for the first four months of the fiscal year 1919 the average number of employees in the Department of Agriculture who received increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the Second Annual Report of the United States Shipping Board, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 12917. An act to provide for the establishment of a sanatorium for the treatment of persons discharged from the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by District Lodge, No. 44, International Association of Machinists, in convention assembled, in Washington, D. C., December 11, 1918, favoring the continuation and completion of all housing projects determined upon by the Housing Bureau prior to the signing of the armistice, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions passed by the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, relating to the revenue bill. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, Mass., November 29, 1918.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
1765 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the annual meeting of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts held at Boston on Tuesday, November 26, 1918, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, representing more than 1,000 manufacturing concerns in the Commonwealth, strongly urge that the Federal tax law be so amended that there be equality of taxation with reference to the same earnings on the same capital employed, and that taxes be levied without any reference to prewar earnings; and

"Resolved further, That now that the war is over it is our belief that excessive taxation will so cripple industry as to operate to prevent, first, development of methods of efficiency and economy in manufacturing; second, giving employment to additional workers; and, third, promoting foreign trade."

Yours, very truly, FREDERIC C. HOOD, President.

Mr. LENROOT presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of Milwaukee, Wis., praying that the Government of the United States issue an order immediately closing down the plant of the Newport Hydrocarbon Co., of Carrollville, Wis., which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. CURTIS presented resolutions adopted by the Rotary Club of Lawrence, Kans., favoring the creation of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Retail Merchants' Association of Franklin County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation making it an offense against the Government to display a red flag or any other flag except the United States flag as a national, patriotic, or party emblem, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on last Friday there appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary an official of the Department of Justice who referred to a number of citizens of the United States whose names appeared upon a list obtained from a prominent German which indicated that these citizens were in sympathy with Germany. A very worthy gentleman residing in New York State has written me a letter protesting against the use of his name in this connection. In justice to this gentleman I ask permission that the letter be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TEACHERS COLLEGE,
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY,
New York, December 9, 1918.

The Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CALDER: On Saturday morning there was published in all the leading papers of this country a list of names given out by the Department of Justice as suspected pro-Germans. Among the names was one that so closely resembles my own as to have been generally taken to be such, whether it was so intended or not. I therefore wish to ask if you can not in some way protest against the serious injustice on the part of the Department of Justice in thus spreading such insinuations broadcast without making the slightest investigation of the truth of the statements. Even those of us who hold no positions of national prominence have our just appreciation of a good reputation, and in this matter of pro-Germanism we who have been emphatically proally, and above all pro-American, have serious cause for protest at such an unwarranted action.

Since the very day when Germany began this criminal war I have labored in every way in my power to advance the allied cause. I have taken an active part in distributing the allied literature, I have been in constant correspondence with various leaders of thought in the universities of the allied nations, and those who know me know that I have never for a single moment entertained any other feeling than that of abhorrence at the attitude of Germany in this entire conflict.

I have thousands of my former students scattered all over this country. They will see this libel and I have no way of reaching them to combat it, and it is here that I feel most keenly the injustice of this unwarranted action.

I beg you to pardon such a long letter, but if you will put yourself in the place of a man who is so unjustly accused on the mere fact that his name is found in the notebook of a German agent you will, I feel sure, understand my motive in writing.

Yours, very truly, DAVID EUGENE SMITH.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the letter just read at the request of the Senator from New York is likely to leave an erroneous impression, if I have the facts in mind correctly. It recites that the Department of Justice put in before the investigating committee a list of names of citizens alleged to be pro-German in their tendency. My understanding is that there was nothing submitted except extracts from a diary kept by some individual.

Mr. OVERMAN. My attention was not called to the letter at the time it was read, and I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it. Certain records in the Department of Justice, filed there, were made by Dr. Fuehr, a German agent here, who represented the German Government and was connected with German propaganda in this country by spending large sums of money and giving the names of those who, he claimed, sympathized with Germany. It was the record made up by him, not by the Department of Justice.

Mr. CALDER. I should like to have the chairman of the subcommittee state for the RECORD if the information was not given out in a manner which indicated that the gentlemen whose names were used were dealing in some pro-German propaganda. I think it is to be regretted that the splendid work of the subcommittee and its chairman, the Senator from North Carolina, should have been marred in this degree by this publication. I know that the Senator will protect the reputation of these gentlemen.

Mr. OVERMAN. The testimony shows exactly what it is. We have the Bernstorff papers showing the whole German system of propaganda in this country by Dr. Albert, Mr. Fuerh, and several others, whose names are mentioned. These are their papers, on file in the Department of Justice. These are the names that agents of the German Government had put down on the list as sympathizers with Germany and men who could be used in the interest of Germany.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on the 8th instant a mass meeting of citizens of the city of Washington and some from outside sections of the country assembled and adopted a resolution which is addressed to the Senate, and which I ask that the Secretary may read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was impossible to hear on this side anything the Senator said, there was so much conversation in the Chamber. I should like to know what the matter is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I stated to the Senate that last Sunday there was held at the National Theater in this city a mass meeting of people of this city and surrounding country, and at that meeting a resolution was passed, which is addressed to the Senate. I simply requested that the resolution be read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the nature of the subject matter?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. An appeal to the Senate to pass the amendment to the Constitution relating to woman suffrage.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, I have no objection whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas there has been brought to a peaceful termination a world war fought for the same fundamental principle of self-government for which the National American Woman Suffrage Association has labored for nearly 50 years; and

Whereas in the conduct of the war women have demonstrated that they are equally concerned with men in national affairs and give service of equal importance to the safety of the Nation; and

Whereas woman suffrage has been given or promised by our allies and even some of the central powers as a result of the greater understanding which the war has brought of the principle of self-government and the service of women; and

Whereas our work as women of the Nation and the service of our men as soldiers of the Nation have given us a greater sense of national unity than ever before, making it especially fitting that we should address ourselves to the representatives of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of the United States, in mass meeting assembled, at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of December 8, 1918, in the National Theater, Washington, D. C., appeal to the Senate of the United States to speed the coming of universal woman suffrage in this country by the immediate passage of the Federal woman-suffrage amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word with relation to the resolution that has just been presented to the Senate, because I was present at that meeting and heard a most wonderful speech made by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, giving the reasons why the Senate should pass the constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage. It was one of the most remarkable speeches ever delivered in the United States, and I only wish that I had it in print so that it could be presented to the Senate and printed as a public document.

It seems to me, in view of the situation as it is now, the world war having been fought for liberty and freedom, that we should apply the principles won in our great and glorious victory to the right of women to participate in government. The joint resolution for the suffrage amendment to the Constitution passed the House of Representatives by a two-thirds majority; it failed by just two votes in having the two-thirds majority in the Senate. A motion to reconsider the vote in the Senate was adopted, and the measure is now pending in the Senate on the calendar, ready to be called up for consideration at any time.

Is it possible that we are going to deny the doctrine for which we fought this war, namely, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed? Is it possible that we are going to reward the constant, effective, and patriotic work of the women and the sacrifices of the mothers in giving their brave boys to their country's cause by a denial of their right as part of the governed to have some voice in the enactment of laws that will control them? We hope not. Let us this session, while this principle is well recognized and when this debt of gratitude is remembered by all, pass this measure so necessary to justice and good government.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on the Census, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 621) thereon.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12916) to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 623) thereon.

ALLOWANCES TO CIVIL EMPLOYEES IN CAPTIVITY.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12860) granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female), Army field clerks, field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and civil employees of the Army pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 622) thereon.

This bill was handled in the House by the Committee on Military Affairs and came here and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Naval Committee now report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that the Senate concur in so much of the bill as appertains to the Navy and requests that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as that committee usually handles matters relating to the Army. It refers to both the Army and the Navy, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affirs for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COST OF UNIFORMS.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 12945) providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and midshipmen at the Naval Academy from the Government at cost, and I submit a report (No. 624) thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the title of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia I should judge that the legislation proposed was to prevent the Government from making a profit on uniforms sold to midshipmen at the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill has been reported and will go to the calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that; but I desire to ask, Has the Government been making a profit on those uniforms?

Mr. SWANSON. No. The bill is to authorize the Government to furnish at cost such uniforms to officers in the Navy as were provided for by a bill heretofore passed as to officers of the Army.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, what has been the practice heretofore?

Mr. SWANSON. The practice heretofore has been that the Government has not furnished uniforms to officers. The Government now, however, has nearly all such military and other supplies. As to Army officers, a bill has been passed authorizing the Government to buy material and to furnish uniforms at cost, and the committee thought the same privilege should be extended to the Navy. Heretofore the Government has not furnished uniforms except to the privates, which they procured from the factories. The officers had to buy their uniforms.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Government has not heretofore furnished uniforms at all for officers?

Mr. SWANSON. No; except as to the Army; and this bill proposes to extend the privilege to naval officers which has been extended to officers of the Army. I ask that the bill go to the calendar. The Senator may read it and thereby become informed as to its provision before I call it up, which I expect to do to-morrow or on the day after to-morrow.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the scope of the bill now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CALVIN WILLARD GILFILLAN.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably the bill (S. 4873) for the relief of Calvin Willard Gilfillan, and I submit a report (No. 625) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to the bill. I ask to have it read, after which I shall ask for its immediate consideration, as it should be acted upon at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Whereas Calvin Willard Gilfillan received and accepted an appointment to the Naval Academy for 1919, and was designated for examination in February of that year; and

Whereas the said Gilfillan received and accepted said appointment before the enactment of the present law requiring appointees to be 20 years old on the 1st of April preceding entrance; and

Whereas the said Gilfillan, who will be 20 years old on March 16, 1919, would have been eligible for admission to the academy in 1919 under the law in force at the time of his appointment; and

Whereas the said Gilfillan is the only appointee affected in this way: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That Calvin Willard Gilfillan be, and he is hereby, authorized and permitted to take the examination for the Naval Academy in February, 1919, and, on passing the examination, to enter the academy at the usual time in 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5171) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of El Paso, Tex.; and

A bill (S. 5172) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Kingsville, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 5173) granting a pension to Charles St. John Neeld (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 5174) granting the soldiers and sailors in the military and naval service of the United States the uniform and equipment on their persons at the time of discharge; and

A bill (S. 5175) granting an increase in rank to certain officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who served overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 5176) to provide for the deportation of certain aliens from the United States; to the Committee on Immigration.

A bill (S. 5177) to donate 25 cannon to the State of Utah; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5178) providing for a reclamation project on Green and Grand Rivers in the State of Utah; and

A bill (S. 5179) providing for a reclamation project on Price River, Utah; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

RADIO COMMUNICATION.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13159) to further regulate radio communication, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PROMOTION OF BETTER LIVING CONDITIONS.

Mr. KENYON. I offer a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration. If it provokes any discussion, I will ask that it go over.

I desire to say in explanation of the resolution that the Committee on Education and Labor is now considering the question of vocational training for men who have been injured in industries. That subject develops a line of inquiry which the committee would like to enlarge. This resolution covers the whole reconstruction problem, which I think will be met. I desire to have the resolution read, and then I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 382) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be, and is hereby, instructed to investigate and recommend to the Senate methods of promoting better social and industrial conditions in the country, particularly as to—

First. The establishment of a national tribunal to review and adjust difficulties between employers and workmen and to improve industrial conditions in the various industries and trades.

Second. The development of the United States Employment Service into a national labor exchange.

Third. The regularization of employment.

Fourth. The prevention of unemployment among workers, both men and women, by a program of necessary public works to be undertaken during periods of industrial depression.

Fifth. The promotion of better living conditions and a plan for centralized administrative control of the housing projects of the National Government during the period of the war.

Sixth. The extension of the United States sailors and soldiers' insurance to the civil population, so that the workmen can insure against sickness, accident, and death at the lowest possible rate.

Seventh. The feasibility of a national insurance law against nonemployment, old age, disability, sickness, and accident.

Eighth. The feasibility of some plan for a national minimum wage law.

Ninth. The question of extending the opportunity for vocational training and education to all people in the United States disabled by injury or sickness.

Tenth. Any other questions relating to a permanent improvement in the relations between employer and employee.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. What is the nature of the resolution? Is it one merely of inquiry or is it a joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a Senate resolution.

Mr. LODGE. To investigate? I thought it was proposed to legislate.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not object to the investigation proposed by the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROFITEERING IN ORES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 383), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information:

Any and all facts, figures, data, or information now in possession of the Federal Trade Commission relative to profiteering in the smelting, reduction, and handling of metalliferous ores and metals by smelting and refining companies and by metal-selling companies, and to investigate said companies for such supplementary information as may be required for a complete report in the premises, and to transmit such complete report to the Senate.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to submit the motion which I send to the Secretary's desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the motion submitted by the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 5052) to make section 5 of the Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, as amended by section 1110, war-revenue act of October 3, 1917, applicable to the District of Columbia, and that the bill be placed on the calendar.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas to state briefly whether he has discussed the question involving his motion with the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I asked the chairman of that committee last week if a meeting of the committee could be secured before the Christmas holidays. He told me that under present conditions he did not know when a meeting could be held, and that he doubted whether he could secure the presence of a quorum of the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have no objection to the consideration of the Senator's motion and to the committee being discharged from the further consideration of the bill, but as a member of the committee I merely desired to secure the statement which the Senator has made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas. The motion is agreed to. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I should like to announce that to-morrow, with the permission of the Senate, during the morning hour, I shall endeavor to make some remarks about our policy in Russia.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194), directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes. The joint resolution has particular reference to the housing project here on the Depot Plaza.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, unless there is some Senator who desires light on this matter, I should be glad to have the joint resolution passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear the Senator from Missouri; there was so much confusion.

Mr. REED. I said, unless there was some Senator who desired light on the joint resolution, I was willing to have it put upon its passage. If there is any Senator who desires light on it, I shall be glad to make a statement explaining it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I desire to discuss the joint resolution briefly. The particular point to which I wish to address myself is the provision which would stop the work and the furnishing of the buildings, which, as I understand, are practically completed now. I should like to ask the Senator whether some of these buildings on the park between the Capitol and the Union Station have not even been furnished at the present time, and what the ideas of the committee are in regard to what shall be done with these buildings in case the furniture that is already in is moved out and the contracts for the furniture for the buildings that are uncompleted are canceled? I also desire to know what the idea of the committee is as to what we should do with the buildings that are practically completed?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of the Senate, I will be very glad to make a general statement, which will put the committee's views before the Senate.

The project that we are now discussing is the large group of buildings occupying what was the vacant space in the park between the Capitol and the Union Station. This ground, as everybody knows, was largely occupied by buildings of a permanent character. The Government determined to make a park, and, at a very large expense, condemned the ground that it did not own, cleared the buildings off of the ground, and had it largely turned into a park. When the war came on it was determined by the Housing Commission to build temporary structures for the accommodation of what are called war workers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did they have any authority to put those buildings there? I should like to know where they got the authority.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the bill which appropriated $60,000,000, afterwards increased to $100,000,000, for the purpose of building habitations of this sort there is a reference made to the construction of these buildings upon public land. I have sent for that law and will have it in a moment, when I will hand it to the Senator or read it aloud. Whatever the authority was, the fact is that several building projects were started in the city of Washington. I understand that all of the other projects in the city of Washington, except the one which I will call the Depot Plaza project, the one first referred to, the one under consideration at this moment, were carried out on grounds the title of which the Government acquired. I think that is an accurate statement. I think the buildings contemplated, some of which have been erected, are permanent in their character; but, as to this ground which we may call the Depot Plaza and as to the buildings upon it, they were intended to be temporary and to be removed as soon as the war was over and the congestion in the various departments incident to the war had been relieved. It is the statement of Mr. Eidlitz, who has charge of this work, that it is contemplated by the Housing Board that these buildings would be removed in any event after the end of 12 months' time, because it is recognized they are temporary in their character and because it is recognized that that ground was appropriated and devoted to park purposes. So that, while these buildings would stand for some 15 or 20 years if we needed them that long, with perhaps new roofs being put on, nevertheless, the project itself from its inception has contemplated the removal of the buildings as soon as the war was over and as soon as the congestion which has grown out of the war could be relieved. Mr. Eidlitz states that that congestion ought to be relieved entirely in 12 months.

So the question that seems to be presented here is this: Under the circumstances now existing, should the Government go on and complete the project? And that question must, of course, be largely controlled by two considerations: First, how much will it take to complete the project? Second, how soon will the congestion in the city of Washington incident to the war be relieved? In other words, to put it in one question, is there a real necessity for going on with these buildings at this time?

The project, speaking broadly, is one which I never dreamed of and which I think the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds never conceived when the bill authorizing the expenditure of this money was before the Congress. That bill recited:

> That the President, for the purposes of providing housing, local transportation, and other general community utilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenals and navy yards of the United States and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, * * * only during the continuation of the existing war, is hereby authorized and empowered—

To acquire grounds and to erect buildings, and so forth.

The conception which I had, and the conception which I think the Congress had, because of the language of the bill, was that where there were no houses into which people could move, and it was necessary to have them here, the houses would be built; and that where there was not transportation to take the people to plants and industries the transportation would be furnished in some way. But the project as presented takes this form: There are to be constructed 12 dormitories, each of which is a double house connected by a walk or something of that sort. In other words, there are 24 dormitories, in fact. They contain approximately 1,800 rooms. In addition to that, there is a small hospital being constructed especially for the benefit of the people who shall live in these buildings. There is also constructed what is called an administration building. A small part of this building is used for the offices of the men who are to manage this affair. Another large part of the building is to be occupied by a cafeteria, a place where meals are to be furnished. There are, in fact, two cafeterias to be established upon this ground. The upper part is a hall for moving pictures or an assembly room. Of course it is not necessarily to be devoted to moving pictures; but it is suitable for that purpose or for lectures or for dances or for entertainments. In addition to this, there is a laundry being constructed. The purpose is, in fact, to run an eighteen hundred room hotel.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. In what condition is the laundry, as far as its construction is concerned?

Mr. REED. I will come to that in a moment.

In other words, the proposition is, instead of constructing buildings containing rooms which could be rented for habitations, to construct what is appropriately described by those responsible for the work as practically a 2,000-room hotel. The hotel is to be furnished by the Government; the meals are to be furnished by the Government; the laundry is being established by the Government. It is proposed in this laundry not only to do the washing incident to the rooming of these people, but to do the washing of the inhabitants themselves.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if, in considering this general proposition, he had taken into consideration at all the utilization of these buildings either for temporary hospital purposes for these young men who are coming back or for office rooms?

Mr. REED. I am coming to that, if the Senator will permit me. I believe that if Senators will just let me get along here I will make a statement that will be rather complete, and when I get through I will answer any questions. I am sure I can save time by approaching the subject in that way. That I say, of course, with all consideration for any Senator who wants to ask me a question.

It is proposed, in a word, that the Government shall establish this hotel, shall maintain it, and the plan is that they shall charge for each room $45 a month, which will include two meals, the right of access to the laundry, the right of access to the assembly hall or moving-picture concern, and the right to the hospital service. That is the scheme. The whole proposition was to cost, when furnished, approximately $2,100,000. The management was to be assumed by a patriotic gentleman who is experienced in the hotel business, and who proposes to work for $1 a year, as I understand.

It is stated by Mr. Eidlitz that it will take approximately $100,000 of labor to complete the buildings; that it will take approximately $275,000 to furnish them; that it will take approximately $30,000 to finish the laundry—that answers the question in regard to the laundry which the Senator from Nebraska asked—making a total of about $410,000 which must still be expended if this scheme is inaugurated; and the scheme is to end, under Mr. Eidlitz's conception, at least in 12 months from this day.

Mr. Eidlitz stated that the materials that have not yet gone into the buildings could be salvaged, that the furniture could be turned back, and that the laundry machinery could be salvaged; so that, in his judgment, there would be $400,000 saved to the Government if we should stop the buildings now. Or, to state it differently, if the project goes on it will require the expenditure of $410,000 more, and all but $10,000 of that can be saved by stopping the work at this time.

The question, therefore, is whether we want to save this $410,000 or go on with this project. It seems to the committee that unless the project is one which is absolutely demanded, in view of the fact that the war is now over—of course, we are all acting on that basis—peace is assured, and the departments are being as rapidly as possible put back on a peace basis, the question, then, is whether we should go further with this project of constructing a hotel.

In order to determine what the necessity is, let me call attention to this fact: This hotel project will room at the outside

2,000 people. We have sent requests for information to the various departments, but we have not yet received reports from the Navy Department, which is one of the largest; and in these requests we have asked them to state the maximum number of employees that they had at any time during the war, the number of employees they had on the date the armistice was signed, the number of employees they have now—which will show the present shrinkage—and the number of employees they expect to have on July 1 next, approximately six months from now. These figures show that already there has been a shrinkage since the armistice was signed of approximately 5,500, so that two and a half times the number of people that could be put in these quarters out here have already left Washington, and they have done that since the armistice was signed, which was on November 11. The estimates by these heads of departments also show—and I think none of them are overkeen to say that they will cut down their departments—that by July 1 there will be a shrinkage of 27,513; and these figures do not embrace the Navy Department, because we have not any report from them. So it would appear that by next July, according to the estimates of the heads of these departments, over ten times the total number that can be housed in this project will have left the city of Washington. That, I think, will be largely increased when we get the report from the Navy Department.

Under those circumstances it seems to the committee that we never ought to expend $400,000 to house 1,800 people as a maximum for 12 months. If we were to do that, we would expend about $220 apiece for the housing of these people for 12 months in addition to the money that is already there. That is to say, we will have to expend $200 more than is already in these buildings in order to house each one of these people for 12 months—$220 apiece—and we will have to do that in view of the fact that already two and a half times as many people as can occupy these buildings have left the city, and every train that is leaving the city is bearing away large numbers, and in the course of four or five months probably not less than 30,000 of these employees will have left the city. So the committee thinks that it is a good time to stop the construction of those buildings.

That brings forward another consideration, upon which I speak with some hesitation, because I have not yet talked with the Architect of the Capitol; but he has been conferred with, and it is thought that these buildings can be used for hospital purposes for returning soldiers, of course for troubles that are noncontagious. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in which the statement is made that the estimated cost of supplying the number of beds required will be $26,000,000 for hospital accommodations for soldiers and sailors, this letter states, suffering from tuberculosis. I have not read the whole letter. We are about to be asked to spend enormous sums of money—not less than $10,000,000 and probably over $26,000,000—for hospitals, and, of course, a large part of this hospital service will be temporary. It raises the question whether these buildings could not be appropriately used for that work for selected patients, perhaps. The advices we have up to date are that the buildings could be so used, but that they would require some modification—additional bath conveniences and other arrangements of that kind. So it would seem that if the buildings are to be transformed in this way to this purpose, the quicker the work is stopped the more conveniently and economically the changes could be made.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to ask the Senator, in view of that proposition, if it would not be better now to suspend the present plan so that the buildings could be completed, with such modifications as are necessary, under the direction of the medical authorities with a view of meeting hospital requirements?

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to suggest to him that if the buildings are to be used for hospitals, the furniture to be installed would be entirely different from what would be put into buildings used for rooming.

Mr. REED. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the suggestions made by both Senators are apt and to the point. It appears to me there is no question but that this project ought to be stopped. Everybody who has any humanity about him understands that the congestion here last winter was very lamentable. Everybody understands also that in process of time there came a natural adjustment which relieved the worst of those conditions, because a great number of clerks and employees found homes in private families, and the herding together incident to a great number suddenly coming into town without information has been largely relieved. Everybody also understands that there is a rapid exodus of clerks. I only repeat what I have already said when I say that, but everybody understands that, the war being over, there must be from now on the most rapid diminution of the extra force. The taxpayers of this country will have a sufficient burden if they shall be able to take care of the necessary expenses.

Now, if we go on and complete this project, it will be some weeks or months before it can be fully completed. The laundry walls are just going up now; the machinery is yet to be installed. The furniture, $275,000 worth of it, which is to be put into these rooms will at the end of a few months be practically worthless.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is another point on which I should like to ask the Senator for information. I was interested in what he said about the scheme which has been adopted by the building committee. As I understood the Senator, and I think it is a fact also, they are constructing buildings for housing purposes elsewhere in the District. What I want to know is, does this same scheme of supplying laundries, places of entertainment, cafeterias, etc., apply to all buildings that applies to this particular section of the city? If not, on what theory then do we distinguish between the Plaza project and the other projects?

Mr. REED. I confess that as to the other projects I can not answer. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] can answer.

Mr. LENROOT. In the case of the other projects the Government owns the grounds, and the buildings, therefore, can be of a permanent character.

Mr. REED. The question was whether the Government was to furnish a hotel.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it is a renting proposition.

Mr. REED. I am not sure of it, but——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will yield to me, I think the statement was made as to the navy yard improvement, that it was intended to be that. I think I recall that. One of the Senators on the committee can correct me if I am wrong. In other words, it is intended that there shall be hotels, cafeterias, laundries, and everything else down there.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The point with me was how the Government could discriminate among classes of employees, furnishing one certain accommodations at a price that might or might not be reasonable, and giving no such advantages to the other employees whom it seeks to house.

Mr. REED. That is, regardless of what it proposes to do with the housing proposition. The fact is that there are probably over 100,000 Government employees in the city, and only 2,000 are to be cared for by this particular project.

It is due to the gentlemen who are managing this matter to say that they have another project to house 3,000 people which had not gotten along so far, and they have abandoned it, but they propose to go on with this one. It seems to me to be an utter waste of money. In the first place, it requires the widest stretch of language of the act which Congress passed to say that it authorizes the Government to go into the hotel business at all. In fact, I do not think that such a right is embraced in the act. I read the language to the Senate. Unless you can embrace the running of a hotel under the phrase "general community utility," there is no authority in the act to do this work at all; that is, to run a hotel.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. As I understand the Senator from Missouri, he says that it will cost $410,000 additional to complete the buildings from their present condition——

Mr. REED. And furnish them.

Mr. NEW. Yes; and furnish them, and that added to that there will be a certain salvage.

Mr. REED. No; if the Senator please, it will cost $410,000 to complete the buildings and furnish them and establish the laundry. If we stop the work at this time, all of that $410,000 can be saved except $10,000. In other words, there will be a loss in the salvage process of $10,000.

Mr. NEW. I should like to ask one other question. At the time the building project was under discussion in the Senate a good deal of attention was paid to the character of the law under which the work was to be performed. It was finally provided that all contracts for buildings erected under the housing program should be let to the lowest and best tender under competitive bids. I should like to ask the Senator if the law was complied with in that respect; and if not, why not?

Mr. REED. The clause of the act to which the Senator refers is section 7. I will read it all:

That no work to be done or contract to be made under or by authority of any provision of this act shall be done or made on or under a percentage or cost-plus percentage basis, nor shall any contract be let until at least three responsible competing contractors shall have been notified and considered in connection with such contract, and all contracts to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, the Government reserving the right to reject any and all bids.

This is what happened. Mr. Eidlitz's statement will be found in the testimony: First, there was no notice sent out to the contractors of the country, there was no public bidding asked for, and no public bidding was permitted; second, the housing committee notified in this instance seven contractors that they proposed to erect these buildings and gave seven contractors the opportunity to make the kind of a bid that I will refer to in a moment. Of the seven, four in fact did make the kind of a bid referred to.

The proposition which was made to these contractors was that the Government should furnish all the material at prices which would be fixed by the Government; that the Government would pay for all labor at the prices that the contractor had to pay for the labor; that the Government would pay a fixed fee for constructing the buildings, and—here is the competition, if any competition it can be called—each contractor was required to state the plan he had and how much he would charge for the plan and he put his price down. Each contractor was required to state the amount of money he estimated it would cost to put up this work, but he did not agree to put it up for that, and each contractor was then required to say how much of a fee he would take, which was not to be in excess of the amount fixed by the Government or by Mr. Eidlitz in his estimate. So each contractor did come in and say, "I have a plan."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator omitted one important proposition, that the contractor was required to state in what time he could complete the project and was not required to agree to complete it.

Mr. REED. Yes. So these various contractors came in and said: "We have a plan of a certain kind, and we will hire that to the Government for a certain amount. Second, we estimate that the work will cost a certain amount, but we do not agree to do it for that. Third, we estimate that the work can be done in a certain period of time, but we do not agree to do it in that time. Fourth, we will charge a certain fee for this work."

There were differences in the fees; I think the differences ran to about $2,000, some of them going a little below and some of them a little above. Then each contractor stated what he was going to charge per day or per week for his organization to carry the thing on. There was some difference between them, but——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In just one moment. But the job of constructing these buildings was never let by contract; that is, where the contractor bid to furnish the material and the labor and put up the building for a certain amount of money. The contractor never bound himself to build them in a specified time, nor for a particular sum of money. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. The question I wish to ask the Senator is whether it was an absolute fee or a percentage fee?

Mr. REED. It was an absolute fee, which they said had been arrived at by figuring the percentage upon the estimated cost which Mr. Eidlitz had made.

Mr. STERLING. What was that fee?

Mr. REED. I think approximately 2½ per cent. It ran in this case to $58,000, and Mr. Eidlitz said the estimate had been $60,000. It may be there may have been some odd figures.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What did that fee mean? What do you mean by fee?

Mr. REED. That is what the contractor gets for what they call the know-how, a phrase that seems to have come into respectability and general use.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In just a second, and then I will yield. Understand that the contractor got paid for his plan; he got paid the wages of every single one of his employees, except one, at the price he said they would be paid. He got paid for his automobiles; he got paid for everything he had. He agreed to put one man on the work or to be there himself, and he was to receive in this instance $58,000. For that the only thing he bound himself to do in the way of furnishing labor was to be either there himself or to have a man there, but, of course, he was furnishing the know-how. I yield now to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if this matter has been under investigation by some department of the Government, as to the way in which it has been managed, as to the fees or the compensation that has been received by subcontractors under the original contractor?

Mr. REED. I do not know whether any department of the Government is investigating it; if that is the case, we did not have such information before the committee; but our committee is proceeding to investigate the question now; I mean the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The subcommittee is investigating the very question the Senator has asked, but we have not got into it, we have just started it.

Mr. NEW. In other words, the Housing Commission having the matter in charge has not followed the law at all, but has devised a plan of its own that is separate and distinct from the law that was passed. I should like to ask the Senator if the commission, under which this construction has taken place, has assigned any reason for having done that?

Mr. REED. Yes; Mr. Eidlitz made a number of very eloquent explanations. In the first place, he said he had the opinions of legal counsel—and they seemed to have a lawyer connected with each of these projects—that he could do this. Then he said it was war times; that the commission thought it necessary, acting in good faith, to go along and do the best they could. In general, that is the statement. Of course, I must say in all fairness that I think there was the clearest purpose in the world to avoid the provision of the law which provided that these buildings should be let to the lowest responsible bidder. I think there was an intentional, willful violation of the law. I can not use any other term and be candid with the Senate. I think there was no intention to have any real competitive bidding in this case.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator inform us whether any of the bidders have any other contracts let by the Housing Commission?

Mr. REED. We have not followed that up yet. We are not through with the investigation.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Let me complete the sentence and then I will yield. I think, too, that the proposition of running a hotel is entirely outside the authority of the commission. I do not believe it was contemplated in the act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question on that point?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I noticed the Senator in the opening of his remarks stated the transactions that have occurred in this community; he said they had constructed rooming houses, provided a laundry, a cafeteria, and an assembly hall which might be used for moving pictures and for other public assemblies, and he characterized this method of operation as a hotel and as being in violation of the provisions of the act.

Mr. REED. It was described as a hotel by the head of the commission, I said.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator also states that he doubts whether this method or plan is within the provisions of the act.

Mr. REED. Yes; I did.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was to that that I wanted to call the Senator's attention. I am not taking issue with the Senator from Missouri upon the general proposition which he is asserting here—that is, the wisdom of suspending this construction—but I think under section 3 of the act under which the housing commission was operating the provision "and other general utilities and parts thereof" is broad enough to embrace, in all probability, all the activities which he has described, including even the assembly hall or the moving-picture show, although there might be some doubt as to the latter. Certainly a laundry is a community utility, as in all probability is an assembly hall. Certainly a cafeteria would be embraced within that description.

Mr. REED. I called attention to that language when I made my remarks, if the Senator will remember, and stated that if the right existed it would have to be embraced under that language.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. REED. And I expressed an opinion opposite to that which the Senator has, namely, that I did not think that the particular things which the Senator has described were community utilities, although I say to the Senator frankly that, in view of the fact that that is a term that has never, so far as I know, been defined, we all have to make our own construction of it. My thought was controlled by the idea that to the term "utility" we have usually attached something like water works, which are a public utility, or street cars, which are a public utility, or electric lights, which are a public utility. When the bill was before the committee I did not think of giving that term any different construction. Of course, if the Senator from Arkansas is right in his construction, then they could establish hotels or almost anything.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I pursue the matter just a little further at this point?

Mr. REED. Yes. I will yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] in a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will conclude in just a moment. In my mind the use of the term "'community utility" instead of "public utility" implies a different purpose from what would have been expressed if the term "'public utility" had been used. I do not know whether the term "community utility" has any specific legal or well-defined legal definition. I was merely calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that I would not know what a "'community utility" is unless it embraces those things that are useful to the community. The term "utility," of course, we all know, means a useful thing; and a "'public utility" is a thing that is useful or necessary to the public. What a "community utility" would be is yet to be defined by the courts; but, in my opinion, it would embrace a laundry. I do not know how a community could get along without a laundry, treating it as a community proposition.

Mr. REED. Well, I think we get some light from the setting of the enterprise which we are engaged upon. It was explained at the time that we engaged in the enterprise that in some instances it would be necessary to erect groups of buildings near great plants where they were not supplied with light, with water, or with transportation. That is the character of thing that was discussed when the bill was before the committee; it was utilities of that character which were necessary and desirable for the community which was to be established, and which would, in fact, be a small village or almost a small city, that we had in mind. However that may be, if the construction of the Senator from Arkansas is right, then, of course, we might embrace under the term "'community utilities" hotels, eating houses, laundries, employment bureaus, groceries, and everything making up a town; but I do not believe that Congress contemplated when it passed the bill that we were going so far as that. However, the question has been very ably presented by the Senator from Arkansas.

Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has stated that the contractors were asked to state the charge for their organization and equipment as separate items, and he has stated that the fee in this specific case of the Union Station Plaza group of buildings approximated $60,000. Can the Senator tell the Senate approximately what the contractor's charge was for his organization and for his equipment in this particular case?

Mr. REED. I can say what the contractor's charge in this particular case was for his plant. It was $22,000; that is, a rental on the plant of $22,000. Then in addition to that he furnished a list of his employees whom he proposed to put to work on that plant. They drew a per diem. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin can answer as to that.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I do not remember the figures. The Senator from Missouri, however, should qualify his statement by saying that in addition to the designated plant the contractor received a fixed sum per diem for his trucks and things of that kind, which ordinarily would be considered a part of his plant.

Mr. HARDING. In other words, Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri can enlighten us upon this point, I should like to know the sum total of the fee and rental charges for the organization and plant. I want to know what the contractor got for doing this job.

Mr. REED. I can answer that question. The contractor was to get a fee of $58,000; he was to get $22,000 for his plant; and he was to receive a per diem for the men whom he furnished; that is, each man was to be paid a certain amount. Of course, without taking the pay roll and adding up the amounts that these particular men received, I can not tell the Senator the aggregate. I have not that information, but I shall be glad to get it for the Senator later.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator from Missouri have any notion as to the approximate capital involved in this plant?

Mr. REED. We have not yet inquired about it, but we are only partly through.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Missouri of what the plant consists?

Mr. REED. I shall have to send and get the contract, which has a complete description of it. However, the plant, in a general way, is the kind of plant that is used where there is some excavation to be made which requires steam engines, housing apparatus, and things of that sort. I can obtain the contract and answer the Senator's question later.

Mr. OVERMAN. The contractor, however, gets extra pay for his trucks.

Mr. REED. I desire to say, further, that the committee expects to make an exhaustive report on this contract and on all the matters which Senators have inquired about. We shall try to go into them later, but the present question is the passage of this resolution. I think the emergency exists. I think that every hour these men are working they are wasting Government money, and I think it ought to be stopped. I have said all I care to say upon the proposition.

Mr. McLEAN and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. REED. One moment. There are other projects outside of Washington, some of which have been discontinued and some of which it is proposed to carry on; but I understand—and if I am wrong in the figures Senators who are on the committee will correct me, for I am speaking from recollection—it is contemplated to spend about $47,000,000 to complete the projects that are to be carried on. I ask the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and desire to know if I am correct in the statement that, according to the evidence, it will take about $47,000,000 to complete the contracts which the housing committee proposes to carry on?

Mr. FRANCE. I have not those exact figures in mind.

Mr. REED. Well, that is as near as I can give them; and I reserve the right to correct the figures.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish the Senator would present the reasons for the second paragraph of the resolution; it seems to me that it is pretty inclusive. Section 2 seems to me to be so far-reaching as to require a fuller explanation. The committee had hearings bearing upon the provision of section 2, and I should like to ask the Senator whether the committee considered the construction of permanent buildings elsewhere than in Washington; we will say such buildings as tenement houses upon land owned by the Government?

Mr. REED. We considered that subject.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me the stopping of the construction of a permanent structure upon land owned by the Government, unless perhaps when such building was less than 75 per cent completed, would raise a pretty important question as to the wisdom of such action. It seems to me that the Government might have to sacrifice much more money if it were called upon to dispose of such buildings than it would if it completed them. I should like to have the Senator explain that section of the resolution, which seems to me so much more important than the first section.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been discussing this matter as though the latter clause of the resolution did not exist. It is due to the Senate to make a full explanation of the matter contained in the second clause.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. An illustration might be given from the State of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] as to the necessity for the second part of this resolution. The Housing Corporation informed the committee that in the city of Bridgeport they were erecting five groups of buildings; that in one group only the foundations had been completed, and yet the Housing Corporation proposes to complete those buildings unless they are stopped by Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In a moment I will yield to the Senator. I want to finish this topic.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to be heard about the other four projects.

Mr. LENROOT. They are 90 per cent completed.

Mr. REED. Yes. The only project that is affected is the one that is being started.

Mr. LENROOT. That is my understanding.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. If the Senator will let me dispose of this matter I will agree to take up anything the Senator desires.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Very well.

Mr. REED. A very good illustration of what the Government of the United States, if I may employ the slang term, is "up against" is this matter now from Bridgeport. There came here a committee of very fine, splendid gentlemen from Bridgeport, headed by the lieutenant governor of the State, who is also mayor of Bridgeport. This was the proposition that they put up to Congress through this committee, that they had 130,000 population, approximately, when the war began and, by reason of the war activities, that population has been increased so that it is now 200,000; that this population is a permanent addition to their population; and that the governmental activities having ceased the factories have been at once transformed into industries of peace, so that they have an addition of 70,000 people to their population. They said, therefore, that the Government of the United States ought to finish these buildings and rent them to this population. We asked in turn whether the people of Bridgeport ought not to complete this project and take care of it, because it was no longer a war project but was one which concerned the future of their city? I think that our friends went away with the impression, perhaps, that they ought to undertake that project themselves; but it serves to illustrate the case. If Bridgeport, Conn.—and I am not criticizing it at all, nor am I criticizing the gentlemen who came here—but if Bridgeport has gained 70,000 population and has permanent factories and industries as a result of the war and the Government was to build houses there to take care of these people, who are to be there permanently employed for the benefit of that splendid city and State, then it might well be said by States that did not get any benefit from the war that the Government ought to build houses within their borders so that they would have that much benefit coming out of the war.

Under the last part of the joint resolution if a building is more than 75 per cent completed its construction may be proceeded with, but if it is not 75 per cent completed then we think it ought to be stopped, the building ought to be salvaged, and the Government ought to get out of this business as soon as it can. It is perfectly——

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. In one moment.

It is perfectly useless to talk about the Government conducting these enterprises upon a business basis. For instance, when this bill was before the committee it was stated by representatives of the great industries who came here and pleaded for the Government to go down in its Treasury for a hundred million dollars to build houses that the houses would be built upon ground that would be bought at fair prices; that the buildings could be rented and managed so that a revenue would result; and that as soon as the war was over the Government could dispose of the buildings and get all of its money out of them, except that loss which was inevitable owing to the fact that materials and labor had been high at the time the buildings were erected. Now, the war is over, and if that thing which was promised is to be accomplished it ought to be done now, and we ought not to put more money, at the present prices of materials and labor, into buildings, involving ourselves in interminable expense and undertaking afterwards to get our money out. The thing to do is to wind this business up now and let Uncle Sam get out as quickly as he can and with as little loss as possible.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I was not present when the Senator from Missouri made his opening remarks, and I only desire to ask a question or two for my own information along the lines of the joint resolution. I desire to ask the Senator if he knows how many buildings are comprised in this group in the Union Station Plaza?

Mr. REED. Yes; that has all been gone over. There are 12 double dormitories, or 24 single dormitories, being connected by some kind of a walk; there is a laundry, an administration building, which includes an assembly hall of some kind; a hospital; two cafeterias; and I am advised that there is a storehouse and heating plant, which I did not include previously.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And what was the contract price for the whole group?

Mr. REED. There is no contract price; there is an estimated price, and the estimate is that it will cost $2,100,000, including the furniture.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think I understood from the Senator's remarks a few minutes ago that about $400,000 would be required to complete the project. Is that correct?

Mr. REED. To complete it and furnish it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Now, just one more question. Will the Senator inform me, if he knows, what amount of that $400,000 is for furniture and machinery?

Mr. REED. Approximately $275,000 is for furniture and approximately $30,000 for finishing the laundry, which embraces also the machinery, if I have the figures correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while the Senator is on that point, will he let me pursue that just a little further?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe the Senator stated that there were 2,000 rooms in the various buildings of the project.

Mr. REED. To be accurate, eighteen hundred.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was counting 2,000 rooms, under the Senator's former statement, for which $45 each per month was to be paid, in connection with services to be rendered in the hospital, two meals at the cafeteria, and laundry service to be performed.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator's committee made any computation as to whether that investment would result in a loss or in a gain, if the plan suggested by Mr. Eidlitz is carried out and the buildings are completed and operated for a year?

Mr. REED. The statement was made by the gentleman who proposes to manage it that he had figured everything down very fine and he thought it could be run without any substantial loss; that the loss would be small, if any; but that they did not expect to make any profit at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. The charges, then, were intended to cover the mere cost of operation?

Mr. REED. The mere cost of operation, without anything whatsoever coming back to the Government to compensate it for its buildings. In other words, Mr. Eidlitz said, "We count the buildings a dead loss." I think that was his expression.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will; yes.

Mr. CALDER. I was in Philadelphia the other day and I saw a number of buildings under construction—two-story brick buildings; 2,000 of them. I am not certain whether the Housing Corporation had that operation or the Emergency Shipping Corporation; but a number of these buildings were about one-third completed. They are structures of a permanent character. Streets are being laid, sidewalks are being laid, and lights are being installed in the streets. My own judgment is that that property probably can be disposed of ultimately at a price whereby the Government will not lose very much; but I wonder if section 2 of the Senator's joint resolution would not stop work on buildings of that character, and whether that would be wise?

Mr. REED. If they are 75 per cent completed, it would not. If they are not 75 per cent completed, it would stop the work.

Mr. CALDER. I know that some of these buildings are entirely completed and some are only 25 per cent completed. I am in complete accord with the Senator's position that as to any building of a temporary character which is 80 per cent completed I would stop it; but I am wondering, in the case of a building which is to be of a permanent character, like these Philadelphia houses, whether it would be wise for the Government to stop the work.

Mr. REED. I think the thing to do is to stop this business where they are not 75 per cent completed, and to stop it by law, because we can not stop these people in any other way. They are going on, and if you leave them any discretion they will go on. Then, if it is necessary, we can pass a bill authorizing the disposition of these buildings—indeed, they can be disposed of now under this law—and they can be sold to private parties, as they ought to be.

Mr. CALDER. I am in accord with the Senator on that subject, too; but it seems to me that you can not sell a building that is partly completed anywhere nearly as advantageously as you can if you complete it.

Mr. REED. I think you can beat it all to pieces, and I will tell you why. Here is a building that is being built in accordance with plans that we presume, at least, have been made along economic lines so as to get as much housing space as possible. It is a sort of stock affair; although, by the way, these houses which have been built for labor cost from $3,000 to $5,500 apiece. Now, if that house simply was inclosed—and it certainly would be inclosed if it was 75 per cent done—and a man could buy it in that condition, he could alter the interior of it to suit his own notions; and it seems to me it would be a very much more advantageous thing to him than it would be to take it after it had been fully completed according to some hard-and-fast rule. That is my notion. I am not much of a real estate man.

Mr. CALDER. I know something of the subject, Mr. President, and I am fearful that the Senator is mistaken in the statement he has just made. I want to say again that I am for his joint resolution, and if it affected temporary structures only I would have no objection; but I am wondering whether to put in "permanent buildings not more than 50 per cent completed" would not cover that matter; or perhaps, as he suggests, we could dispose of the thing to-day and let them come in with a definite development in each part of the country and ask for legislation for each one. Perhaps that might be better.

Mr. REED. If we can get this work stopped now, then these matters can be taken up and investigated; but it should be understood that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent here in a very few hours. Labor has been employed here in front of the Capitol, and the general plan was to work them 10 hours and pay them for 12 hours; to work them on Saturday afternoons, and pay them double time for Saturday afternoons; to work them on Sundays, and pay them double time for Sunday work; so that we have this sort of thing presented: A man works five hours straight time on Saturdays. He then works six hours overtime on Saturdays. As a matter of fact, he worked eight hours on Saturdays, but he got paid for 11 hours on Saturdays; and so it has been going. That has been partly stopped.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Missouri suggested a moment ago that they could obtain further information if this work was stopped. Has the investigating committee had before it a complete statement of what has been done, of lands purchased, buildings under construction, contracts made, and so forth?

Mr. REED. Yes; we have a summary of it.

Mr. WEEKS. Was that obtained from the report which is provided for in the law?

Mr. REED. No; the statement was made to us that the report is being prepared. We obtained this statement from Mr. Eidlitz, who is the head of this building corporation.

Mr. WEEKS. Did the Senator notice that it was one of the duties of the President to report to Congress at the beginning of each session what had been done under this act?

Mr. REED. I did. The statement was made by Mr. Eidlitz that they were preparing a report of their transactions to be transmitted to the President, and of course I presume that when it is transmitted to him he will transmit it to us. The statement was made, however, that the report was not yet completed, but that it would be out in a few days.

Mr. WEEKS. I am interested, in looking at the law on this subject, to notice something about which perhaps the Senator can give us some information:

Provided further, That the expenditure in the District of Columbia shall be made with a view to caring for the alley population of the District when the war is over, so far as it can be done without interfering with war housing purposes.

How would it be possible to erect buildings on a public park and provide that they shall be used by the alley population after the war is over?

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, somebody put that in this bill. What his object was, I do not know; but I think there has been no attempt made to erect any buildings for the alley population.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, does the Senator know who is responsible for locating these buildings on the Plaza?

Mr. REED. Mr. Eidlitz stated that there was a committee that inspected the sites. If the Senator wants full information in regard to the matter, it appears that this project was carried out through the organization of a corporation in New York, the officers of which were made up very largely of the board which Mr. Eidlitz had gotten together; and the contracts, and so forth, have been made in the name of that corporation. While its proceedings may have been irregular, I have not seen anything wrong about it from the standpoint that the Government would lose anything.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator one more question about the law itself. It seems to provide that a certain amount of money may be expended for the erection of buildings in the District of Columbia, provided war employees can not be employed in some other locality equally well. Has the committee made any investigation as to whether the war-insurance activities and the food activities could not have been conducted as well in some other city as in Washington?

Mr. REED. No; we have not. Will the Senator kindly point out that language to me?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. It is in paragraph 8, page 3, of the act, which I have before me. I will read it:

Provided, That $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the amount hereby authorized shall be used only to build or acquire, as herein provided, housing accommodations within the District of Columbia for such Government employees as can not be used as advantageously in other cities in the service of the Government, of which the sum of $75,000—

And so forth. In other words, it would seem that if this work could have been conducted as advantageously in other cities there would be no authority to spend the money for erecting buildings in the District of Columbia. Now, the shipping forces were removed to Philadelphia; and it seems to me—in fact, I brought it to the attention of the Senate some two months ago—that it would be a comparatively easy matter to remove from the city of Washington a great number of these activities, and thereby prevent the congestion here, and the necessity for the expenditure of this money.

Mr. REED. The committee has made no investigation of the question raised by the Senator. As I have stated, our investigation has only begun; but we have thought it was necessary to make an immediate report, in order that the continued expenditure of money might be stopped until we find out where we are and until some steps can be taken to salvage these various propositions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Masssachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] inquired with reference to the provision relating to taking care of the alley population. I think I was responsible for having that provision put into the bill. There was not any idea, of course, that the buildings put up here on the Plaza should take care of the alley people; but it was hoped that out of this $10,000,000 that we authorized to be expended in the District of Columbia there might possibly be some work done in the alleys that would not only help in taking care of war workers but would also take care of the conditions there. It was never thought by anybody, however, that the buildings on the Plaza would be used for taking care of the alley population; and I was interested in the statement of the Senator that nothing in fact had been done with that provision relating to the alleys.

Mr. REED. Nothing that we know of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, my reason for making that inquiry was that it seemed to me that with that provision relating to the alley population in the bill it was absolutely essential that such localities be selected that provision could be made for the alley population after the war. Of course, that is not possible where buildings are located on any public park.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that we hoped they would follow the very course suggested by the Senator—that they would select locations like these alleys in which to put up these buildings, so that they would be of very great service afterwards; but, of course, they have not done so. They have taken the Plaza.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there may be other members of the committee who would like to speak this morning. I am going to yield the floor unless some Senator has another question to ask.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri was about to answer the question which I asked him.

Mr. REED. I had forgotten what it was.

Mr. McLEAN. The question related to the responsibility for placing these buildings where they have been put. I asked the Senator if he knew who was responsible for locating these buildings.

Mr. REED. I am trying to find the testimony. Perhaps some member of the committee can answer that question more accurately than I can.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, Mr. Eidlitz said that he and some of his people went around, and finally they got the President and took him around and showed him these lots, and that he picked out the site. The President, of course, did it all, he says.

Mr. McLEAN. That is the information I have had. I did not know whether it was correct or not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have found it generally to be true that when people do anything that gets unpopular they always, some way or other, say that the President did it. My own opinion about the matter is that this ground was really selected by Mr. Eidlitz and by somebody representing the Secretary of Labor, and that they did it with the idea that the buildings would be temporary, and would be removed the moment the war was over. I think it was a mistake. I think it would have been very much wiser to have taken other ground, which it is admitted they could have easily obtained, and to have built these buildings in a little more substantial manner, so that when we were through with the war we could have sold the buildings to people who wanted to occupy them. But these were war times, and there seems to have been an impression—indeed, one of the witnesses said, "You are talking about the expenditure of this money when we were shooting away millions of dollars' worth of ammunition every day." The answer that was made to that was that the shooting away of ammunition was all right if you were shooting at something, but that you could even waste ammunition, and you could even waste money in war times. I think we wasted some money here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question or two about the necessity for carrying forward any housing program. The Senator gave some figures that were quite instructive, showing that already, I think, since the armistice was signed, something like 5,000 temporary employees have left the city, and that it is expected that before the 1st of July something like 27,000 will go out of employment.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Thus diminishing very greatly the demand for housing facilities.

Mr. REED. And those figures do not include one large department—the Navy Department—which has not yet reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator know, or has the Senator's committee made any investigation sufficient to form an opinion, as to whether the housing facilities will be adequate for those who are required to stay here and those who will be required, for instance, in connection with the coming decennial census? I am told that there will be about 5,000 additional employees in connection with that; and what I am trying to get at is whether there is a real necessity for completing these buildings. If there is, we want to do it, in view of the fact that they are so nearly completed; but if there is not, we ought not to do it. I am firmly of the opinion that a mistake was made in locating temporary buildings upon that particular plot of ground. It does seem to me that some other place ought to have been found.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator when the census organization is to be created?

Mr. ROBINSON. It ought to be done during the coming year. I should think it would begin about the 1st of March, although, of course, that is merely an opinion of mine, founded upon former experience.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The work will begin on June 30. The decennial census period begins on June 30 of next year.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I suppose the assembling of the force to do the work will probably begin before that time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very probably.

Mr. ROBINSON. I assume that it will begin about the 1st of March.

Mr. REED. The question is a double one. I will try to answer it with entire frankness.

First, the committee has given no consideration to the question of the census employees who may be brought here. I do not think it very material, however, in view of the fact that the estimates are that over 27,000 will go away, and that does not include one of the largest departments of the Government. I do not think these figures—27,000—give us a true picture, either. They are confined to the Government employees. Everybody knows that Washington has been filled up all winter with people who have come here, some of them out of mere curiosity, many of them because they have been wanting to get Government contracts or get into the Government service or get Government business in some way, and that large population is now disappearing.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not see much hope of that condition being relieved in the early future, I fear—the number who will be required to come here, or who will probably feel that they are required to come here, in the adjustment of controversies connected with the public service.

Mr. REED. I think it will be; but then I think there is still a larger item than that. Washington has been filled up with thousands of people who have come here in one way or another in connection with their relatives who are in the war. There is a marked decrease in that character of congestion. It must be true that we will reduce this enormous pay roll in the city of Washington. If we do not do it——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. He may have answered it, as I have not been able to listen to all he said. I wish to ask him whether this building commission is erecting any buildings in the District of Columbia other than those on the Union Station Plaza?

Mr. REED. Yes; they are erecting permanent buildings in two other places. They had one or two other large projects, which they stopped.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But no other temporary buildings?

Mr. REED. I think not.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I simply rose to inquire whether it is the purpose of the Senator from Missouri to go on with the discussion of the joint resolution now.

Mr. REED. I was going to ask that we come to a vote; but if we can not vote, I can not ask the Senator from North Carolina to lay aside his important bill very long. This is a matter of emergency, and it ought to be passed speedily, if passed at all.

Mr. PENROSE. Perhaps it can be disposed of now without prolonged discussion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I realize that the matter ought to be disposed of as speedily as possible, and I will state to the Senator from Missouri I would like to have it go over until to-morrow, in order to make some investigation. As far as I am concerned, a vote may be had to-morrow morning, but, of course, I have no power to bind anybody else.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the Senator from Missouri does not expect to have a vote upon the joint resolution to-day, and I merely wish to inquire as to the condition of the business of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I will say that the request of the Senator from Arkansas is a very reasonable one, and while I think we ought to have the joint resolution disposed of to-day, of course it will lie over.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to state to the Senator from Missouri also that I want to discuss the joint resolution briefly. I would be perfectly willing to go on now, if it is the desire to lay aside the revenue bill. I think I will take no more than 10 or 15 minutes, and I have an amendment which I wish to propose. I have no objection, of course, to its going over until to-morrow, but I do not want to delay it long.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is understood that the joint resolution shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. That is understood.

Mr. REED. I shall ask to-morrow morning the indulgence of the Senate to the extent of giving the joint resolution, as far as possible, the right of way.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that; but, if I am permitted to quote the chairman of the committee, while he is very anxious to go on with the revenue bill, if the joint resolution could be considered now, or at least some discussion had to expedite it, there may be no objection on the part of the Finance Committee. And why not proceed with it?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that considerable time has been devoted to the discussion of the joint resolution this morning. It was suggested to me by the Senator from Missouri that he could finish it probably in a very short time. In that situation I would be willing to lay aside the revenue bill for a short time, but I understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to request that the joint resolution go over until to-morrow, and the Senator from Missouri has yielded to that.

Mr. REED. That is the situation. The Senator from Arkansas asked for time to investigate it, and I think it will save time by letting him have the opportunity.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not advised that any Senator desires to address himself to the bill at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question about an amendment the committee proposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I was going to propose now is that we take up the bill for the purpose of considering committee amendments. I would suggest to the Senator from Washington that I think we will save time if we take up the amendments as they are reached in the bill and not undertake to go into a discussion of an amendment before we reach it. However, I have no objection to answering the Senator's question, if I can do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably the course suggested by the chairman would save time. I did not suppose that we were going on with the amendments to the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I do not know of anyone who expects to address the Senate on the bill to-day, and I concur in his thought to proceed with the committee amendments. I only want to state as far as I am concerned that I expect very soon, in a few days, to address the Senate upon the pending bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Before we begin with the amendments, as I stated yesterday that I would prepare my views on the bill, I now submit my views and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

The views this day submitted by Mr. SMOOT (Report No. 617, part 4) are as follows:

"Differing materially from the plan of taxation imposed by House bill 12863 as reported to the Senate, I avail myself of the privilege of expressing my personal views, in a separate report, of the provisions of the bill that I believe should never be enacted into law. The unworkable, unscientific, and discriminatory provisions of the act of October 3, 1917, have not been eliminated by House bill 12863, the pending revenue bill. In some respects they have been modified, but in others increased. If I could have framed the pending revenue bill, I would have made it very simple and so plain that any ordinary business man or individual could have understood it and would have had no trouble in making out a tax return.

"Every individual, whether in business as such or as a member of a partnership, would have been treated alike. Every corporation would have been taxed upon the same basis, and the question of capital invested, watered stock, and bonded indebtedness would not have entered into the question of the amount of tax to be imposed, with the single exception of a few corporations with a capital stock of over $1,000,000 and making undue profits during the prewar period. I would have provided a separate provision for taxing these few corporations. I would have provided for a straight war-profits tax following the principles outlined in my amendment that I offered on January 5, 1918, to House joint resolution 195, with certain modifications to meet to-day's changed conditions.

"I believe that there should be eliminated from the bill all the harassing, nagging taxes, all of which are consumption taxes, and substituted for them a 1 per cent sale tax on all goods sold for consumption or use. A tax of that character would in no way embarrass the producer or consumer and would yield a revenue of over $1,000,000,000.

"In addition to the 1 per cent sale tax and a straight war-profits tax as above referred to, I would include in the bill title 2, income tax; title 5, tax on transportation with certain modifications; title 6, tax on beverages only so far as it affects alcohol, beer, wine, and the floor tax on the same; title 7, tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufacturers thereof with increased rates; title 9, the tax to be limited on automobiles and on leases for exhibition of any positive motion-picture film; title 10, tax upon capital stock, brokers, manufacturers of tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes, and pleasure boats. All other items found in any of the above titles should be eliminated.

"If this plan were adopted, the bill would provide a larger revenue for the Government than will be received under the provisions of the pending bill, and unjust and discriminatory taxation would be avoided.

"That part of the pending bill that deals with the imposition of a tax for the calendar year 1919 I disapprove of and agree with the statement made in the minority report upon this subject. The majority base their action of including in the pending bill provisions for the collection of taxes for the year 1920 upon the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury and the indorsement of that plan by the President. I call attention to the fact that the majority have not followed the plan of taxation as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, but maintain the unjust and discriminatory plan of taxation on so-called excess profits as provided in existing law and the pending bill. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended that a flat normal tax be imposed upon all net profits (less certain exemptions) in place of the discriminatory excess-profits tax, in which are involved the questions of watered stock, borrowed money, over and under capitalization, and the definition of invested capital—questions that if incorporated in a revenue bill can not result in anything but the collection of a discriminatory and unjust tax. I much prefer the Secretary's plan to the one proposed in the pending bill.

"I call the attention of the country to the fact that the requirements of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, will approximate $10,000,000,000, which I will explain in detail when I discuss the bill in the Senate. This estimate of $10,000,000,000 does not take into consideration future estimates that may be sent to Congress that will be included in deficiency appropriation bills. The $10,000,000,000, with the amount of deficiency appropriations added, will be reduced by whatever amount is received as salvage from the sale of war material paid for and not now needed either in this country or Europe. There are many relief provisions incorporated in the bill, and I frankly admit as to some of them I do not know what effect they will have upon the revenues to be collected, but that will greatly depend upon the construction that will be placed upon them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"Respectfully submitted.

"REED SMOOT."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think it was the general understanding that the amendments to the bill would be taken up at this time. So I suggest the absence of a quorum in order that Senators may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Henderson	Nugent	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	Page	Spencer
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Penrose	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pollock	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Underwood
Dillingham	Kellogg	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fernald	Kenyon	Reed	Warren
Fletcher	Kirby	Robinson	Watson
France	La Follette	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gay	Lenroot	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	Lewis	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McCumber	Sherman
Hale	McKellar	Simmons
Harding	New	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "includes," to insert "individuals"; in line 6, before the word "corporations," to insert "and," and after the word "corporations" to strike out "and associations as well as individuals," so as to read:

The term "person" includes individuals, partnerships, and corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "companies," to strike out "as well as private corporations," so as to read:

The term "corporation" includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to insert:

The term "life insurance company" means an insurance company engaged in the business of issuing life insurance and annuity contracts (including contracts of combined life, health, and accident insurance continuing for the life of the insured and not subject to cancellation by the company), whose reserve funds held for the fulfillment of such contracts comprise more than 50 per cent of its total reserve funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 6 to 13, inclusive, in the following words:

The term "Government contract" means (a) a contract made with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency under the United States and acting in its behalf, or with any agency controlled by any of the above if the contract is for the benefit of the United States, or (b) a subcontract made with a contractor performing such a contract if the products or services to be furnished under the subcontract are for the benefit of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to insert lines 14 to 18, inclusive, in the following words:

The term "military or naval forces of the United States" includes the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Army Nurse Corps (female), and the Navy Nurse Corps (female), but this shall not be deemed to exclude other units otherwise included within such term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert lines 19 to 21, inclusive, in the following words:

The term "present war" means the war in which the United States is now engaged against the German Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert lines 22 to 24, inclusive, in the following words:

For the purposes of this act the date of the termination of the present war shall be fixed by proclamation of the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, in "Title II, income tax," to strike out "212 or section 232" and insert "212, 232, or 246," so as to read:

TITLE II.—INCOME TAX.

PART I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 200. That when used in this title—

The term "taxable year" means the calendar year, or the fiscal year ending during such calendar year, upon the basis of which the net income is computed under sections 212, 232, or 246. The term "fiscal year" means an acounting period of 12 months ending on the last day of any other month other than December. The first taxable year, to be called the taxable year 1918, shall be the calendar year 1918 or any fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1918;

The term "fiduciary" means a guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, conservator, or any person acting in any fiduciary capacity for any person, trust, or estate;

The term "withholding agent" means any person required to deduct and withhold any tax under the provisions of section 221 or section 237.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert:

The term "personal service corporation" means a corporation whose income is to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation and in which capital (whether invested or borrowed) is not a material income-producing factor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, to strike out lines 1 to 19, inclusive, in the following words:

The term "dividend" means any distribution made by a corporation out of its earnings or profits, accrued since February 28, 1913, and payable to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation. Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or subsequent years shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accrued since February 28, 1913; but any earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accrued since February 28, 1913, have been distributed. If paid in stock of the corporation, a dividend shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed. Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I simply wish to ask the chairman of the committee why the definition of dividends is stricken out? I presume the term occurs several times in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. It follows at the bottom of the page, the Senator will observe.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I see; in section 201. I looked at the provision immediately following the part stricken out and did not observe the section further on.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert lines 20 to 22, inclusive, in the following words:

The terms "paid or incurred" and "paid or accrued" shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert from line 23, on page 5, to line 6, on page 7, inclusive, in the following words:

DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 201. (a) That the term "dividend" when used in this title means (1) any distribution made by a corporation, other than a personal service corporation, to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) any such distribution made by a personal service corporation out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, and prior to January 1, 1918.

(b) Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or any year thereafter shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or, in the case of a personal service corporation, since December 31, 1917; but any earnings or profits accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed.

(c) A dividend paid in stock of the corporation shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed. Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

(d) Any dividend received by a taxpayer shall be taxed to the recipient at the rates prescribed by law for the years in which the corporation accumulated the earnings or profits from which such dividend was paid, but the dividend shall be deemed to have been paid from the most recently accumulated earnings or profits.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire that subdivision (d) of this amendment shall go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator will be granted and, without objection, the other subdivisions of the amendment are agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 8, to strike out "201" and insert "202 (a)," so as to read:

BASIS FOR DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

SEC. 202 (a). That for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, the basis shall be—

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 11, to strike out "(a)" and insert "(1)," so as to read:

(1) In the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of that date; and

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 14, to strike out "(b)" and insert "(2)"; in line 15, to strike out "(1)" and insert "(a)"; in the same line, to strike out "(2)" and insert "(b)"; and, in line 16, to strike out "202" and insert "203," so as to read:

(2) In the case of property acquired on or after that date, (a) the cost thereof; or (b) the inventory value, if the inventory is made in accordance with section 203.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 16, to insert:

(b) When property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange shall for the purpose of determining gain or loss be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value, if any; but when in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation a person receives in place of stock or securities owned by him new stock or securities of no greater aggregate par or face value, or when a person or persons owning property receive in exchange for such property stock of a corporation formed to take over such property, no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange, and the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock, securities, or property exchanged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Inventories," page 8, line 6, to strike out "202" and insert "203"; in line 10, after the word "may," to strike out "approve or"; in line 11, after the word "prescribe," to insert "as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and"; and in line 13, after the word "income," to strike out "of the taxpayer," so as to read:

INVENTORIES.

SEC. 203. That whenever in the opinion of the commissioner the use of inventories is necessary in order clearly to determine the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and as most clearly reflecting the income.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have received a great many letters and telegrams with reference to this provision of the bill. I have not those telegrams and letters here. I did not expect that the matter would come up to-day. So I ask that the committee amendment to this section may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the Senator from Washington has asked that the amendment shall go over, and in that case he will want all that affects inventories to go over in the same way?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I prefer that that should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Because they are all related, and it is a very important part of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is a member of the committee and knows the other provisions better than I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have also received a number of letters and some petitions opposing the provision as it passed the House. I have not had time to study the Senate committee bill, but I join in the request of the Senator from Washington that it all go over.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not object to that, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that the only amendment made by the committee in that section seems to be rather a formal one. It only provides that the "Secretary may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know exactly what is the effect of the language, and I prefer to have it all go over so as to consider the subject together.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I would call attention in this connection to subsection (12) on page 29, which must be considered in connection with the inventory section if we are to understand the extent of the amendment the committee has made with respect to the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator for calling that to my attention.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina asks that that may go over?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, that subdivision (b) on page 29 shall go over if section 203 goes over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope that will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. To make it complete, as the same question comes up under the heading of corporations on page 60, subsection (13) ought to go over at the same time. Then we will not be bothered by watching for it as the Secretary reads the bill. Subsection (13), line 5, has reference to corporations just the same as the other has reference to individuals.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope that also will go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will see if the request is understood. The request is that section 203 on page 8 shall go over and also paragraph (12) on page 29 and paragraph (13) on page 60.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, and there is one other, so that we may have them all, and that is section 204 (a) on page 8—(a), (b), and (c), I should say, because those are involved in the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the parts of the bill indicated will be passed over. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 10, line 9, the next amendment of the committee being to insert at that point the following:

FISCAL YEAR WITH DIFFERENT RATES.

SEC. 205. That if a fiscal year of a taxpayer ends during a calendar year for which the rates of tax differ from those for the preceding calendar year, then (1) the rates for such preceding calendar year shall apply to an amount of the net income for such fiscal year equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to the remainder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am going to ask to have the provisions regarding the income tax go over. I do not think that it is best to take time to read them.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; certainly not. I think we shall make no objection to passing them over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The request is a broad one, that shall take in everything which in any way affects part 2 relating to income taxes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have no desire to obstruct the very proper suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin, but I feel that this is the largest tax bill in the history of civilization, perhaps, and I want to have some of it read. The Secretary is only reading the committee amendments, I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Secretary is reading the bill in connection with the committee amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Is the whole bill being read?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is being read right now.

Mr. PENROSE. When I mentioned the matter of the propriety of reading the whole bill to the chairman, I understood that what he thought ought to be done was to read only the committee amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator misunderstood me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the whole bill is being read, except the portion passed over.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad to know that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish the matter to pass without stating that I misunderstood the Senator's request. I understood the Senator's request to be that we should now take the bill up and have it read without acting at all on amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are doing, then, exactly what the Senator wishes.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad to know that. I was called to the telephone and I did not know just what was being done.

Mr. President, I ask to have the income-tax schedule read, so that it may appear in the RECORD, and then let it go over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. PENROSE. It will not take more than a few minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he means that all the balance of the income-tax sections of the bill shall go over, or if he means that the section which we have now reached, which provides for the normal tax, and the next section, which provides for the surtax, shall go over. I supposed when the Senator was speaking to me about it a few minutes ago he wished to have the provision imposing a normal tax and the provision imposing a surtax go over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, those sections are included in my request.

Mr. PENROSE. The sections had better be read, however.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then also such other provisions immediately following as affect and qualify those provisions.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be the remainder of the title.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that would be the whole of it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is, it must go over under the unanimous-consent agreement that was obtained on yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the title containing the 1920 provisions, on page 11?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It certainly is.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to understand that, because I desire those provisions to go over. They are a separate bill, and I want to say something about them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair requests the Senator from Wisconsin, or some other Senator, to state, for the benefit of the Secretary, what paragraphs it is desired shall go over. In the absence of such a statement, the Secretary can not make a record.

Mr. PENROSE. Before that is done, I desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that he adopt this procedure: That the bill be read in an orderly way, including the amendments, and that, when the reading of an amendment has been proceeded with and finished, then any Senator can arise and object to the present consideration of the amendment; but let it be first read.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is exactly what we are doing now.

Mr. PENROSE. No, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill is being read just as it is printed, and we are considering amendments as they are reached.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] suggested just now that the income-tax schedule should not be read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I am not criticizing the suggestion at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that.

Mr. PENROSE. And I did not hear any objection from the chairman of the committee. Now, I want it distinctly understood that the procedure shall be that the bill and the amendments shall be read and that when the reading of any particular amendment is finished it will then be the right of a single Senator to object to its immediate consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my suggestion that the portion which I had asked to have passed over should not be read was made for the reason that it includes a number of pages and I thought time might be saved by passing over that part of the bill, because it will have to be read when it is taken up for consideration. I thought, therefore, that the reading at this time would be a waste of time. That was my only reason for making the suggestion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not resist the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], that this part of the bill, which we now agree shall go over, shall now be read; but I think it is an unnecessary consumption of the time of the Senate. However, if the Senator insists upon its being read I shall not object.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, unless the amendments to the bill are read they will not be printed in the RECORD. I say candidly that while I am as anxious as is the chairman of the committee to expedite the passage of this measure, I think it is a pretty important proceeding, and the usual procedure of deliberative bodies ought to be followed even if it does take a couple of hours longer. I should like to have a distinct understanding that whenever an amendment shall be read and the reading is finished of any particular amendment it shall then be the right of any Senator to object to its consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in view of that statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania I ask that whenever an amendment or section is put over by consent or otherwise the Secretary shall read it.

Mr. PENROSE. Clearly such an amendment or section should first be read, and then objection made after the reading is finished. It does not seem very logical to object to an amendment before it is read.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, inasmuch as the matter objected to at this time is of considerable length, might not the suggestion just made by the Senator from Wisconsin be adopted; that is, that as to this part of the bill it ought to be printed in the RECORD at this point without reading. That will answer the purpose of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it seems to me, and it would get it into the RECORD and avoid all this unnecessary consumption of time.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, while that suggestion might perhaps practically serve the purpose, I think this is a pretty important occasion. We are passing the largest tax bill in the history of any country of which I know, since very ancient times, in any event, and it seems to me that we ought not to incur the criticism that we have had this bill proceed in any irregular or hasty or ill-advised way. There is a certain solemnity and dignity attached to a measure of this importance, which we ought to observe; and I, at least, am impressed with the fact that these taxes are staggering in their character, and in many cases are going to cause actual distress in many parts of the country. Their only redeeming feature is the fact that they are temporary, and we all hope only for this year. I hope that the reading of the bill will be proceeded with in the regular way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning on page 10, line 19.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "Part II—Individuals, normal tax," in section 210, page 11, line 1, after the word "tax," to strike out "as follows," and to insert "at the following rates," so as to read:

PART II.—INDIVIDUALS.

NORMAL TAX.

SEC. 210. That, in lieu of the taxes imposed by subdivision (a) of section 1 of the revenue act of 1916 and by section 1 of the revenue act of 1917, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax, at the following rates:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if it will comply with the notions of orderly procedure in this business to make the request for the passing over at the end of a section instead of at the beginning of each paragraph, I will make the request in that way. Otherwise I shall make it at the end of each paragraph; but at the end of each section I should think would be sufficient.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not desire to inconvenience any Senator. I am perfectly content to have objection made to the whole section without going into details, but I would like to have it read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At the end of each section?

Mr. PENROSE. Objection to be made at the end of each section. That is all I ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 11, after line 2, to strike out, down to and including line 9, as follows:

(a) In the case of a citizen or resident of the United States, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That upon the first $4,000 of this amount the rate shall be 6 per cent;

(b) In the case of a nonresident alien, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 6 per cent;

(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 4 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 210, which has just been read, may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Surtax," section 211, to strike out from line 3, on page 12, to line 14, on page 13, in the following words:

2 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $7,500;
3 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $7,500 and does not exceed $10,000;
7 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $15,000;
10 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $15,000 and does not exceed $20,000;
15 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $30,000;
20 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $30,000 and does not exceed $40,000;
25 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $50,000;
32 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $60,000;
38 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $70,000;
42 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $70,000 and does not exceed $80,000;
46 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $90,000;
48 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $90,000 and does not exceed $100,000;
50 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $200,000;
52 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $300,000;
54 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000;
58 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;
60 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000; and
65 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

1 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $6,000;
2 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $6,000 and does not exceed $8,000;
3 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $8,000 and does not exceed $10,000;
4 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $12,000;
5 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $12,000 and does not exceed $14,000;
6 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $14,000 and does not exceed $16,000;
7 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $16,000 and does not exceed $18,000;
8 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $18,000 and does not exceed $20,000;
9 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $22,000;
10 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $22,000 and does not exceed $24,000;
11 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $24,000 and does not exceed $26,000;
12 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $26,000 and does not exceed $28,000;
13 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $28,000 and does not exceed $30,000;
14 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $30,000 and does not exceed $32,000;
15 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $32,000 and does not exceed $34,000;
16 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $34,000 and does not exceed $36,000;
17 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $36,000 and does not exceed $38,000;
18 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $38,000 and does not exceed $40,000;
19 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $42,000;
20 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $42,000 and does not exceed $44,000;
21 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $44,000 and does not exceed $46,000;
22 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $46,000 and does not exceed $48,000;
23 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $48,000 and does not exceed $50,000;
24 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $52,000;
25 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $52,000 and does not exceed $54,000;
26 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $54,000 and does not exceed $56,000;
27 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $56,000 and does not exceed $58,000;
28 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $58,000 and does not exceed $60,000;
29 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $62,000;
30 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $62,000 and does not exceed $64,000;
31 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $64,000 and does not exceed $66,000;
32 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $66,000 and does not exceed $68,000;
33 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $68,000 and does not exceed $70,000;
34 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $70,000 and does not exceed $72,000;
35 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $72,000 and does not exceed $74,000;
36 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $74,000 and does not exceed $76,000;
37 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $76,000 and does not exceed $78,000;
38 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $78,000 and does not exceed $80,000;
39 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $82,000;
40 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $82,000 and does not exceed $84,000;
41 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $84,000 and does not exceed $86,000;
42 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $86,000 and does not exceed $88,000;
43 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $88,000 and does not exceed $90,000;
44 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $90,000 and does not exceed $92,000;
45 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $92,000 and does not exceed $94,000;
46 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $94,000 and does not exceed $96,000;
47 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $96,000 and does not exceed $98,000;
48 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $98,000 and does not exceed $100,000;
52 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000;
56 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $200,000;

60 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $300,000;
63 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000;
64 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;
65 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $1,000,000.

(b) In the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil or gas wells, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by this section attributable to such sale shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price of such property or interest.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 211, the reading of which has just been completed, may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 211 will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 212, page 18, paragraph (b), line 19, after the word "if," to strike out the word "it" and insert "the method employed," so as to make the section read:

NET INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 212. (a) That in the case of an individual the term "net income" means the gross income as defined in section 213, less the deductions allowed by section 214.

(b) The net income shall be computed upon the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period (fiscal year or calendar year, as the case may be) in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if the method employed does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made upon such basis and in such manner as in the opinion of the commissioner does clearly reflect the income. If the taxpayer's annual accounting period is other than a fiscal year as defined in section 200 or if the taxpayer has no annual accounting period or does not keep books, the net income shall be computed on the basis of the calendar year.

If a taxpayer changes his accounting period from fiscal year to calendar year, from calendar year to fiscal year, or from one fiscal year to another, the net income shall, with the approval of the commissioner, be computed on the basis of such new accounting period, subject to the provisions of section 226.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire this section to go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; each of these sections in this part of the bill were to be passed over on request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 9, to strike out the numerals "233" and insert the numerals "247"; and in line 12, after the word "service," to strike out "(including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, or of any State, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such)," so as to read:

GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 213. That for the purposes of this title (except as otherwise provided in section 247) the term "gross income"—

(a) Includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire that this go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from Wisconsin does not desire it to go over, I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment from the Committee on Finance was, on page 19, line 25, after the word "whatever" and the period, to strike out the word "The," and in lieu thereof to insert "Except as otherwise provided in subdivision (d) of section 201, the," so as to read:

Except as otherwise provided in subdivision (d) of section 201, the amount of all such items shall be included in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer, unless, under methods of accounting permitted under subdivision (b) of section 212, any such amounts are to be properly accounted for as of a different period.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 10, after the word "insured," to strike out "to individual beneficiaries or to the estate of the insured," so as to make the paragraph read:

(1) The proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon the death of the insured.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 22, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "issued on or prior to the date of the passage of this act, or (if authorized by law on or prior to the date of the passage of this act) issued within six months after the passage of this act and containing a statement of such authorization and its date, or (if issued after the passage of this act) containing a statement that they are issued for the purpose of funding or refunding any interest-bearing indebtedness outstanding on the date of the passage of this act or for the purpose of carrying out a contract entered into on or prior to the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That there shall be excluded from gross income in the case of any person owning obligations of States, Territories, political subdivisions thereof, or the District of Columbia (the interest upon which is included in gross income) the interest upon an amount of such obligations the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000." On page 21, line 14, after the word "its," to strike out "possessions." and insert "possessions; or (d) bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation"; in line 17, after the date "September 1, 1917," to insert "and in the case of bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation"; in line 20, before the word "authorizing," to strike out the word "act" and insert "respective acts"; in line 23, after the word "taxation," to insert "to the taxpayer"; and, in line 24, after the word "Title," to strike out the "III." and insert "III;", so as to make the paragraph read:

(4) Interest upon (a) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or (b) securities issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916; or (c) the obligations of the United States or its possessions; or (d) bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, and in the case of bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from taxation to the taxpayer both under this title and under Title III;

The next amendment was, on page 22, in line 16, after the words "government of," to strike out "the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico" and insert "any possession of the United States," so as to make the paragraph read:

(7) Income derived from any public utility or the exercise of any essential governmental function and accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or income accruing to the government of any possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 22, after the word "person," to strike out "or corporation"; on page 23, line 4, after the word "person," to strike out "or corporation"; in line 6, after the word "person," to strike out "or corporation"; and in line 8, after the word "person," to strike out "or corporation," so as to make the paragragh read:

Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered in good faith into a contract with any person the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, District of Columbia, or political subdivision; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person from the payment of a tax as provided for in this title upon the part or portion of such income to which such person is entitled under such contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 10, before the word "amount," to strike out "So much of the" and insert "The"; in the same line, after the word "received," to insert "during the present war"; in line 13, after the word "for," to insert "active"; in the same line, after the word "services," to strike out "abroad or at sea"; and in line 14, after the word "forces," to strike out "as does not exceed $3,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

(8) The amount received during the present war by a person in the military or naval forces of the United States as salary or compensation in any form from the United States for active services in such forces.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 213, which has just been read, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment to the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Deductions allowed," in section 214, page 24, line 3, after the word "or," to strike out "possession" and insert "possession of property"; and in line 4, after the word "business," to strike out "of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 214. (a) That in computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

(1) All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered, and including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property for purposes of the trade or business.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, after the word "indebtedness," to insert: "except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917), the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under this title as income to the taxpayer"; and in line 14, after the word "interest" to strike out "paid," so as to make the paragraph read:

(2) All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917), the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under this title as income to the taxpayer, or, in the case of a nonresident alien individual, the proportion of such interest which the amount of his gross income from sources within the United States bears to the amount of his gross income from all sources within and without the United States.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 1, after the word "benefits" to insert "of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed"; and in line 6, after the numerals "222" to insert "or (c) in the case of a nonresident alien individual, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title"; so as to make the paragraph read:

(3) Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year imposed (a) by the authority of the United States, except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes; or (b) by the authority of any of its possessions, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 222; or (c) by the authority of any State or Territory, or any county, school district, municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State or Territory, not including those assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; or (d) in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States, by the authority of any foreign country, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 222; or (e) in the case of a nonresident alien individual, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 14, after the word "sustained," to strike out "and charged off," so as to make the clause read:

(4) Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in trade or business.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 8, after the word "the," strike out "exhaustion, wear and tear" and insert "depreciation," and in line 8, after the word "business," to strike out "but in the case of a nonresident alien individual only as to property within the United States," so as to make the clause read:

(8) A reasonable allowance for the depreciation of property used in the trade or business.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 13, after the words "present war," to insert "and in the case of vessels constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war"; in line 16, after the word "there," to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; in line 18, after the word "facilities," to insert "or vessels"; in line 19, after the word "including," to strike out "amounts otherwise allowed under this title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear" and insert "any amount otherwise allowed under this title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income"; in line 25, after the word "war," to strike out "with the Imperial German Government as declared by proclamation of the President"; on page 27, line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "necessary adjustment of the"; in the same line, after the word "taxes," to insert "imposed by this title and by Title III"; in line 6, after the word "be," to strike out "made" and insert "redetermined"; in line 7, after the word "such," to strike out "readjustment" and insert "redetermination"; and in line 11, after "section 252," to strike out "In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States. In no case shall the deduction allowed under this paragraph exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph or paragraph (11)," so as to make the paragraph read:

(9) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, erected, installed, or acquired, on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war, and in the case of vessels constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war, there shall be allowed a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer, but not again including any amount otherwise allowed under this title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income. At any time within three years after the termination of the present war the commissioner may, and at the request of the taxpayer shall, reexamine the return, and if he then finds as a result of an appraisal or from other evidence that the deduction originally allowed was incorrect, the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for the year or years affected shall be redetermined; and the amount of tax due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not wish to request the reading of the portions of the House bill which are stricken out when there are large blocks of such amendments, but I do think they should be printed in the RECORD, for one reading the bill in the RECORD will not see the relation of the changes to the House provisions unless the House provisions are printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that the Secretary states that the House provisions stricken out by the committee will be included in the RECORD under the reading as it is now proceeding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Although not read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Secretary, in reading the rates, omitted the reading of the House rates. I wish to be certain that they are published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that under the custom that is done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That all of those stricken-out portions of the House bill will be published whether read or not? Is that the rule that is followed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporters are instructed to do that, without objection. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 27, after line 16, to strike out:

(10) (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion; (c) in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber, a reasonable allowance for depreciation of improvements; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made according to the peculiar conditions in each case and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. In the case of a nonresident alien individual deductions under this paragraph shall be allowed only as to property within the United States.

And insert:

(10) In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber, a reasonable allowance for depletion and for depreciation of improvements, according to the peculiar conditions in each case, based upon cost including cost of development not otherwise deducted: Provided, That in the case of such properties acquired prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value of the property (or the taxpayer's interest therein) on that date shall be taken in lieu of cost up to that date: Provided further, That in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, discovered by the taxpayer, on or after March 1, 1913, and not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, where the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost, the depletion allowance shall be based upon the fair market value of the property at the date of the discovery, or within 12 months thereafter; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 9, after the word "the," to strike out "vocational rehabilitation" and insert "Vocational Rehabilitation"; and in line 18, after the word "rehabilitation," to strike out the period and insert a semicolon, so as to make the clause read:

(11) Contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the Vocational Rehabilitation act, to an amount not in excess of 15 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to contributions or gifts made to domestic corporations or to such vocational rehabilitation fund.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 18, to insert:

(12) If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 or 1920 the taxpayer (a) has for the first time ascertained the amount of a loss sustained during the preceding taxable year and not deducted from the gross income therefor, or (b) has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition), resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for the preceding taxable year, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for such preceding taxable year, and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 10, after the numeral "(9)," to strike out "and (10)" and insert "(10), and (12)"; on line 12, after the word "with," to strike out "a trade or business carried on" and insert "income arising from a source"; in line 15, after the words "with respect to," to strike out "trade or business within and without" and insert "sources of income within and without," so as to make the clause read:

(b) In the case of a nonresident alien individual the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1), (4), (7), (8), (9), (10), and (12) of subdivision (a) shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are connected with income arising from a source within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources of income within and without the United States shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 214, just read by the Secretary, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Items not deductible," in section 215, page 31, line 7, after the word "taxpayer," to strike out "or anyone financially interested in such trade or business," and in line 8, after the word "is," to insert "directly or indirectly," so as to make the section read:

ITEMS NOT DEDUCTIBLE.

SEC. 215. That in computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of—

(a) Personal, living, or family expenses;

(b) Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate;

(c) Any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made; or

(d) Premiums paid on any life insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 215 be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Credits allowed," in ection 216, on page 31, line 16, after the words "United States," to insert "and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation," and in line 17, after the word "Corporation," to strike out "any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 216. That for the purpose of the normal tax only there shall be allowed the following credits:

(a) The amount received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income.

(b) The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, which is included in gross income under section 213.

(c) In the case of a single person, a personal exemption of $1,000, or in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $2,000. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption of $2,000 against their aggregate net income; and in case they make separate returns, the personal exemption of $2,000 may be taken by either or divided between them.

(d) Two hunderd dollars for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer, if such dependent person is under 18 years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

(e) In the case of a nonresident alien individual who is a citizen or subject of a country which imposes an income tax, the credits allowed in subdivisions (c) and (d) shall be allowed only if such country allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States not residing in such country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary read section 217, on pages 32 and 33, beginning with line 13, as follows:

NONRESIDENT ALIENS—ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS.

SEC. 217. That a nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits allowed in this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector a true and accurate return of his total income received from all sources corporate or otherwise in the United States, in the manner prescribed by this title, including therein all the information which the commissioner may deem necessary for the calculation of such deductions and credits: Provided, That the benefit of the credits allowed in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216 may, in the discretion of the commissioner, and except as otherwise provided in subdivision (e) of that section, be received by filing a claim therefor with the withholding agent. In case of failure to file a return, the collector shall collect the tax on such income, and all property belonging to such nonresident alien individual shall be liable to distraint for the tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 33, line 6, to strike from the heading the word "Partners" and insert "Partnerships and personal-service corporations," so as to make the heading read: "Partnerships and personal-service corporations"; and on page 34, after line 23, to insert:

(e) Personal-service corporations shall not be subject to taxation under this title, but the individual stockholders thereof shall be taxed in the same manner as the members of partnerships. All the provisions of this title relating to partnerships and the members thereof shall, so far as practicable, apply to personal-service corporations and the stockholders thereof: Provided, That in the case of any such corporation any amounts distributed during its taxable year shall be taxed to the distributees; and any portion of the net income remaining undistributed at the close of its taxable year shall for the purposes of this subdivision be assigned to the stockholders of such corporation at the close of its taxable year in proportion to their respective shares.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if he desires to have the section with reference to personal-service corporations go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; Mr. President, I think that should go over with the other sections; that is, I think all of part 2 had better go over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Estates and trusts," in section 219, page 35, line 24, after the word "regular," to strike out the word "intervals" with a period, and insert the words "intervals, and the income collected by a guardian of an infant to be held or distributed as the court may direct," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 219. (a) That the tax imposed by sections 210 and 211 shall apply to the income of estates or of any kind of property held in trust, including—

(1) Income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate;

(2) Income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained persons or persons with contingent interests;

(3) Income held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust; and

(4) Income which is to be distributed to the beneficiaries periodically, whether or not at regular intervals, and the income collected by a guardian of an infant to be held or distributed as the court may direct.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 4, after the word "section," to strike out "212" and insert: "212, except that there shall also be allowed as a deduction any part of the gross income which, pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating the trust, is during the taxable year paid out or permanently set aside for exclusively religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) The fiduciary shall be responsible for making the return of income for the estate or trust for which he acts. The net income of the estate or trust shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in section 212, except that there shall also be allowed as a deduction any part of the gross income which, pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating the trust, is during the taxable year paid out or permanently set aside for exclusively religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; and in cases under paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) of this section the fiduciary shall include in the return a statement of each beneficiary's distributive share of such net income, whether or not distributed before the close of the taxable year for which the return is made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The Secretary read to the end of section 219, on page 37, line 13.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in the heading, on page 37, line 14, to strike out the words "Undistributed profits subject to surtax," and insert "Profits of corporations taxable to stockholders."

The next amendment was, in section 220, page 37, line 16, after the word "That," to strike out "for the purpose of the surtax, the net income of any individual includes the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all corporations," and insert "if any corporation"; in line 20, before the word "formed," to insert "is"; in line 21, after the word "or," to strike out "fraudulently"; in line 22, after the words "imposition of," to strike out "such tax" and insert "the surtax upon its stockholders or members"; in line 23, after the word "permitting," to strike out "such" and insert "its"; in line 24, after the words "divided or," to strike out the word "distributed" and the semicolon and insert "distributed, such corporation shall not be subject to the tax imposed by section 230 or by Title III, but the stockholders or members thereof shall be subject to taxation under this title in the same manner as provided in subdivision (e) of section 218 in the case of stockholders of a personal service corporation"; and, on page 38, line 5, after the word "corporation," to strike out "and the," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 220. That if any corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its stockholders or members through the medium of permitting its gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed, such corporation shall not be subject to the tax imposed by section 230 or by Title III, but the stockholders or members thereof shall be subject to taxation under this title in the same manner as provided in subdivision (e) of section 218 in the case of stockholders of a personal service corporation.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 6, before the word "fact," to insert "The"; in the same line, after the word "any," to strike out "such"; in line 9, before the word "purpose," to strike out "fraudulent"; in the same line, after the word "escape," to strike out "such tax" and insert "the surtax"; in line 13, before the word "certifies," to strike out "Secretary" and insert "commissioner," so as to make the paragraph read:

The fact that any corporation is a mere holding company, or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to escape the surtax; but the fact that the gains and profits are in any case permitted to accumulate and become surplus shall not be construed as evidence of a purpose to escape the tax in such case unless the commissioner certifies that in his opinion such accumulation is unreasonable for the purposes of the business. When requested by the commissioner or any collector, every corporation shall forward to him a correct statement of such gains and profits and the names and addresses of the individuals or shareholders who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed, and of the amounts that would be payable to each.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 220 be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Payment of tax at source," in section 221, page 39, line 11, after the words "equal to," to strike out "12" and insert "8," and in the same line, after the word "thereof," to insert a colon and the words "Provided, That the commissioner may authorize such tax to be deducted and withheld from the interest upon any securities the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 221. (a) That all individuals, corporations, and partnerships, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income of any nonresident alien individual (other than income received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income) shall (except in the cases provided for in subdivision (b) and except as otherwise provided in regulations prescribed by the commissioner under section 217) deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income a tax equal to 8 per cent thereof: Provided, That the commissioner may authorize such tax to be deducted and withheld from the interest upon any securities the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 3, after the words "United States," to insert "or to a partnership: Provided, That the commissioner may authorize such tax to be deducted and withheld in the case of interest upon any such bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations, the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) In any case where bonds, mortgages, or deeds of trust, or other similar obligations of a corporation contain a contract or provision by which the obligor agrees to pay any portion of the tax imposed by this title upon the obligee, or to reimburse the obligee for any portion of the tax, or to pay the interest without deduction for any tax which the obligor may be required or permitted to pay thereon or to retain therefrom under any law of the United States, the obligor shall deduct and withhold a tax equal to 2 per cent of the interest upon such bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations, whether such interest is payable annually or at shorter or longer periods and whether payable to a nonresident alien individual or to an individual citizen or resident of the United States or to a partnership: Provided, That the commissioner may authorize such tax to be deducted and withheld in the case of interest upon any such bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations, the owners of which are not known to the withholding agent. Such deduction and withholding shall not be required in the case of a citizen or resident entitled to receive such interest if he files with the withholding agent, on or before February 1, a signed notice in writing claiming the benefit of the credits provided in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216; nor in the case of a nonresident alien individual if so provided for in regulations prescribed by the commissioner under section 217.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 9, after the word "imposed," to insert "upon," so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) If any tax required under this section to be deducted and withheld is paid by the recipient of the income, it shall not be re-collected from the withholding agent; nor in cases in which the tax is so paid shall any penalty be imposed upon or collected from the recipient of the income or the withholding agent for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have section 221 passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to call attention to a misprint. On page 40, line 3, the word "of," after the word "citizen," should be "or." We might as well change that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 41, after line 12, to strike out:

CREDIT FOR FOREIGN TAXES.

SEC. 222. (a) That in the case of a citizen of the United States, the tax computed under this title shall be credited with the amount of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, upon income derived from sources therein, including in the case of a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust his proportionate share of such taxes so paid during the taxable year by the partnership or by the estate or trust.

(b) In the case of an alien resident of the United States who is a citizen or subject of a country which imposes income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes, a like credit shall be allowed if such country allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country.

(c) The credits allowed in subdivisions (a) and (b) shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income received from sources within such foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, as the case may be, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credits.

And to insert:

CREDIT FOR TAXES.

SEC. 222. (a) That the tax computed under Part II of this title shall be credited with:

(1) In the case of a citizen of the United States, the amount of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, upon income derived from sources therein, or to any possession of the United States; and

(2) In the case of a resident of the United States, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to any possession of the United States; and

(3) In the case of an alien resident of the United States who is a citizen or subject of a foreign country, the amount of any such taxes paid during the taxable year to such country, upon income derived from sources therein, if such country, in imposing such taxes, allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country; and

(4) In the case of any such individual who is a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust, his proportionate share of such taxes paid during the taxable year by the partnership or by the estate or trust to a foreign country or to any possession of the United States, as the case may be.

(b) These credits shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income derived from sources within such foreign country or such possession of the United States, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credits.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Individual returns," in section 223, page 43, line 12, after the word "every," to strike out "person" and insert "individual"; in line 13, before the word "income," to strike out "net" and insert "gross"; and in line 19, after the word "aggregate," to strike out "net" and insert "gross," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 223. That every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or of $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife, shall make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. If a husband and wife living together have an aggregate gross income of $2,000 or over, each shall make such a return, unless the income of each is included in a single joint return.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to the end of section 223, on page 43, line 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to have section 223 passed over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That action will be taken.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read section 224, page 44, as follows:

PARTNERSHIP RETURNS.

SEC. 224. That every partnership shall make a return for each taxable year, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and shall include in the return the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed and the amount of the distributive share of each individual. The return shall be sworn to by any one of the partners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to have section 224 passed over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir; if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Fiduciary returns," in section 225, page 44, line 15, before the word "income," to strike out "net" and insert "gross"; in line 19, before the word "income," to strike out "net" and insert "gross"; and in line 25, after the words "filed in the," to insert "office of the collector of the," so as to make the section read:

FIDUCIARY RETURNS.

SEC. 225. That every fiduciary (except receivers appointed by authority of law in possession of part only of the property of an individual) shall make under oath a return for the individual, estate, or trust for which he acts (1) if the gross income of such individual is $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife, or (2) if the gross income of such estate or trust is $1,000 or over or if any beneficiary of such estate or trust is a nonresident alien, stating specifically the items of the gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. Under such regulations as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may prescribe, a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries and filed in the office of the collector of the district where such fiduciary resides shall be a sufficient compliance with the above requirement. The fiduciary shall make oath that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such individual, estate, or trust to enable him to make the return, and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct.

Fiduciaries required to make returns under this act shall be subject to all the provisions of this act which apply to individuals.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over, if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read section 226, on pages 45 and 46, as follows:

RETURNS WHEN ACCOUNTING PERIOD CHANGED.

SEC. 226. That if a taxpayer, with the approval of the commissioner, changes the basis of computing net income from fiscal year to calendar year a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last fiscal year for which return was made and the following December 31. If the change is from calendar year to fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last calendar year for which return was made and the date designated as the close of the fiscal year. If the change is from one fiscal year to another fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the former fiscal year and the date designated as the close of the new fiscal year. If a taxpayer making his first return for income tax keeps his accounts on the basis of a fiscal year, he shall make a separate return for the period between the beginning of the calendar year in which such fiscal year ends and the end of such fiscal year.

In all of the above cases the net income shall be computed on the basis of such period for which separate return is made, and the tax shall be paid thereon at the rate for the calendar year in which such period is included; and the credits provided in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216 shall be reduced, respectively, to amounts which bear the same ratio to the full credits provided in such subdivisions as the number of months in such period bears to 12 months.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Time and place for filing returns," in section 227, page 46, line 19, after the word "therefor," to strike out: "Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than two months"; so as to make the paragraph read:

TIME AND PLACE FOR FILING RETURNS.

SEC. 227. (a) That returns shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year, or, if the return is made on the basis of the calendar year, then the return shall be made on or before the 15th day of March. The commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing returns whenever in his judgment good cause exists and shall keep a record of every such extension and the reason therefor.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to the end of section 227, on page 47, line 3.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read section 228, on page 47, as follows:

UNDERSTATEMENT IN RETURNS.

SEC. 228. That if the collector or deputy collector has reason to believe that the amount of any income returned is understated, he shall give due notice to the taxpayer making the return to show cause why the amount of the return should not be increased, and upon proof of the amount understated, may increase the same accordingly. Such taxpayer may furnish sworn testimony to prove any relevant facts and if dissatisfied with the decision of the collector may appeal to the commissioner for his decision, under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the secretary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading of "Part III.—Corporations," subhead "Tax on Corporations," in section 230, line 17, before the word "that," to insert "(a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 21, after the word "corporation," to insert "other than a life insurance company," and in line 22, after the word "tax," to strike out "as follows" and insert "at the following rates," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 230. (a) That, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 10 of the revenue act of 1916, as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and by section 4 of the revenue act of 1917, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation other than a life insurance company a tax at the following rates:

The next amendment was, on page 47, beginning on line 23, to strike out:

(a) In the case of a domestic corporation 18 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236: Provided, That the rate shall be 12 per cent upon so much of this amount as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year, plus (2) the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds and other interest-bearing obligations outstanding prior to the beginning of the taxable year, plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918; and

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation 18 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236: Provided, That the rate shall be 12 per cent upon so much of this amount as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year to citizens or residents of the United States or to domestic corporations or partnerships, plus (2) the same proportion of the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year which the amount of gross income of the corporation from sources within the United States bears to the amount of its gross income from all sources within and without the United States, plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918.

And insert:

(1) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236; and

(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of such amount.

(b) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," five-sixths of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) and three-fourths of the tax imposed by paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin, section 230 will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Conditional and other exemptions," on page 50, line 7, after the word "purposes," to insert "or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals," so as to make the paragraph read:

(6) Corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 2, to strike out:

(11) Farmers', fruit growers', or like associations, organized and operated as sales agents for the purpose of marketing the products of members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them.

And to insert:

(11) Farmers', fruit growers' or like associations, or cooperative societies, organized and operated as sales agents for the purpose of marketing the products of members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expense, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them, or as purchasing agents for the purpose of supplying merchandise to members at cost, including the necessary expense: Provided, That associations or societies of the kind herein described but which also sell for or to nonmembers shall be liable to taxation under this title, but shall be allowed in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, of subdivision (a) of section 234, amounts paid during the taxable year to members on the basis of the quantity of products furnished by them representing the profits thereon, and (b) amounts repaid during the taxable year to members as discounts or rebates upon amounts paid by them for merchandise; but in no case shall the additional deductions authorized in this paragraph exceed the proportion of the total profits of the association or society which the amount of sales for or to members bears to the total amount of purchases or sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 16, to strike out:

(14) Joint-stock land banks as to income derived from bonds or debentures of other joint-stock land banks or any Federal land bank belonging to such joint-stock land bank.

And to insert:

(14) Personal service corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire simply to call attention to page 50, line 16, where there is a typographical error in the spelling of the word "social."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has instructed the Secretary to correct that error.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Net income defined," in section 232, page 52, line 22, after the word "corporation," to insert "subject to the tax imposed by section 230," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 232. That in the case of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230 the term "net income" means the gross income as defined in section 233 less the deductions allowed by section 234, and the net income shall be computed on the same basis as is provided in subdivision (b) of section 212 or in section 226.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Gross income defined," in section 233, page 53, line 4, after the word "corporation," to insert "subject to the tax imposed by section 230," and in line 6, after the numerals "213," to strike out "except that," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 233. (a) That in the case of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230 the term "gross income" means the gross income as defined in section 213.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 7, to strike out:

(1) In the case of life insurance companies there shall not be included in gross income such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder within the taxable year as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium of such policyholder within the taxable year.

(2) Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 233 will be passed over, under the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Deductions allowed," in section 234, page 53, line 23, after the word "computing," to insert "the," and in the same line, after the word "income," to insert "of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 234. (a) That in computing the net income of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230 there shall be allowed as deductions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that whole section passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over upon the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I speak early, because the Presiding Officer was submitting the amendments for adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator means the entire section?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I mean the entire section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; the Secretary will continue to read, then. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that a verbal amendment on page 53 was agreed to, in lines 23 and 24. There are two small amendments there which were agreed to. Does the Senator desire to reserve them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think they had better be reserved with the balance of the section. Then it will be understood that the whole section is reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had no way of knowing that the Senator intended to object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendments were agreed to will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 3, after the word "benefits," to insert "of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed"; in line 8, after the words "section 238," to insert: "; or (e) in the case of a foreign corporation, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon the property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title," so as to read:

(3) Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year imposed (a) by the authority of the United States, except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes; or (b) by the authority of any of its possessions, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 238; or (c) by the authority of any State or Territory, or any county, school district, municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State or Territory, not including those assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; or (d) in the case of a domestic corporation, by the authority of any foreign country, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 238; or (e) in the case of a foreign corporation, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon the property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title: Provided, That in the case of obligors specified in subdivision (b) of section 221 no deduction for the payment of the tax imposed by this title or any other tax paid pursuant to the contract or provision referred to in that subdivision shall be allowed.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 19, after the word "sustained," to strike out "and charged off," so as to read:

(4) Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 1, to strike out "exhaustion, wear and tear" and insert "depreciation" before the words "of property"; and in line 2, after the word "business," to strike out "but in the case of a foreign corporation only as to property within the United States," so as to read:

(7) A reasonable allowance for the depreciation of property used in the trade or business.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 8, after the word "war," to insert "and in the case of vessels constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war"; in line 11 to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; in line 13, after "facilities," to insert "or vessels"; in line 14, after "including," to strike out "amounts otherwise allowed under this title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear" and insert "any amount otherwise allowed under this title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income"; in line 19, after "war," to strike out "with the Imperial German Government as declared by proclamation of the President"; in line 24, before "taxes," to strike out "necessary adjustment of the"; to insert, after "taxes," the words "imposed by this title and by Title III"; in line 1, page 57, to strike out the first word "made" and insert "redetermined"; in line 2 to strike out "readjustment" and insert "redetermination"; and in line 6, after the words "section 252," to strike out "In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States. In no case shall the deduction allowed under this paragraph exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph," so as to read:

(8) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, erected, installed, or acquired, on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war, and in the case of vessels constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war, there shall be allowed a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer, but not again including any amount otherwise allowed under this title or previous acts of Congress as a deduction in computing net income. At any time within three years after the termination of the present war the commissioner may, and at the request of the taxpayer shall, reexamine the return, and if he then finds as a result of an appraisal or from other evidence that the deduction originally allowed was incorrect, the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for the year or years affected shall be redetermined; and the amount of tax due upon such redetermination, if any, shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 11, to strike out:

(9) (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion; (c) in the case of mines, oil, and gas wells, other natural deposits and timber, a reasonable allowance for depreciation of improvements; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made according to the peculiar conditions in each case and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions under this paragraph shall be allowed only as to property within the United States.

And to insert:

(9) In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber, a reasonable allowance for depletion and for depreciation of improvements, according to the peculiar conditions in each case, based upon cost, including cost of development not otherwise deducted: Provided, That in the case of such properties acquired prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value of the property (or the taxpayer's interest therein) on that date shall be taken in lieu of cost up to that date: Provided further, That in the case of mines, oil and gas wells discovered by the taxpayer on or after March 1, 1913, and not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, where the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost, the depletion allowance shall be based upon the fair market value of the property at the date of the discovery, or within 12 months thereafter; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 6, before the word "contracts," to strike out "and annuity," so as to read:

(10) In the case of insurance companies, in addition to the above: (a) The net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers, pursuant to law, as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and (b) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy contracts.

The next amendment was, on page 59, to strike out lines 7 to 14, inclusive, in the following words:

(11) In the case of corporations issuing policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan continuing for life and not subject to cancellation, in addition to the above, such portion of the net addition (not required by law) made within the taxable year to reserve funds as the commissioner finds to be required for the protection of the holders of such policies only.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 15, to strike out "(12)" and insert "(11)."

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 21, to strike out "(13)" and insert "(12)."

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 1, to insert "(unless already allowed under such paragraphs)," so as to read:

(12) In the case of mutual insurance companies (other than mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, (unless already allowed under such paragraphs), the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 4, to insert:

(13) If it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that during the taxable year 1919 or 1920 the taxpayer (a) has for the first time ascertained the amount of a loss sustained during the preceding taxable year and not deducted from the gross income therefor, or (b) has sustained a substantial loss (whether or not actually realized by sale or other disposition), resulting from any material reduction (not due to temporary fluctuation) of the value of the inventory for the preceding taxable year, then the amount of such loss shall be deducted from the net income for such preceding taxable year, and the taxes imposed by this title and by Title III for such year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 23, to strike out "a trade or business carried on" and insert "income arising from a source," and on page 61, line 1, to strike out "trade or business within and without" and insert "sources of income within and without," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions allowed in subdivision (a), except those allowed in paragraphs (2) and (3), shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are connected with income arising from a source within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources of income within and without the United States shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 234, just read, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 10, after "That," to insert "except in the case of life insurance companies," so as to read:

CREDITS ALLOWED.

SEC. 236. That except in the case of life insurance companies there shall be allowed the following credits:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I request that section 236 be passed over when its reading is completed.

The next amendment was, in section 236, on page 61, line 13, to insert "and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation"; and in line 14 to strike out "any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia," so as to make the paragraph read:

(a) The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States and bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation which is included in gross income under section 233.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 17, to strike out "war-profits or excess-profits taxes"; in line 18, to strike out "by act of Congress" and insert "by Title III"; in line 21, to strike out "the portion of the excess-profits tax specified in clause (1) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income specified in clause (1) of section 239, and the portion of the war-profits or excess-profits tax specified in clause (2) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income specified in clause (2) of section 239; and," and to insert: "or beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the portion of the tax specified in clause (1) of subdivision (a) or (b) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income for such fiscal year specified in clause (1) of section 205, and the portion of the tax specified in clause (2) of subdivision (a) or (b) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income for such fiscal year specified in clause (2) of section 205; and," so as to read:

(b) The amount of taxes imposed by Title III for the same taxable year: Provided, That in the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, or beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the portion of the tax specified in clause (1) of subdivision (a) or (b) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income for such fiscal year specified in clause (1) of section 205, and the portion of the tax specified in clause (2) of subdivision (a) or (b) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income for such fiscal year specified in clause (2) of section 205; and.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 236 be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over on the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 17, to strike out "18," before "per cent," and insert "8," so as to read:

PAYMENT OF TAX AT SOURCE.

SEC. 237. That in the case of foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein, there shall be deducted and withheld at the source in the same manner and upon the same items of income as is provided in section 221 a tax equal to 8 per cent thereof, and such tax shall be returned and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided in that section: Provided, That in the case of interest described in subdivision (b) of that section the deduction and withholding shall be at the rate of 2 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have section 237 passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 23, in the subhead "Credit for foreign taxes," to strike out the word "foreign."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 25, to strike out "income, war profits, and excess profits"; on page 63, line 1, to strike out "by act of Congress" and insert "by this title and by Title III"; in line 4, to strike out "Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands"; and in line 6, at the end of the paragraph, to insert "or to any possession of the United States," so as to read:

CREDIT FOR TAXES.

SEC. 238 (a). That in the case of a domestic corporation the total taxes imposed for the taxable year by this title and by Title III shall be credited with the amount of any income, war profits, and excess profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country upon income derived from sources therein or to any possession of the United States.

The next amendment was, in section 238, on page 63, line 9, to strike out "received" and insert "derived"; in line 10 to strike out "country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands," and insert "country or such possession of the United States"; and after line 13 to insert:

(b) In the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, any tax paid for such fiscal year, under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 or Title I of the revenue act of 1917, shall be credited against the tax imposed by this title—

So as to read:

This credit shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income derived from sources within such foreign country or such possession of the United States, as the case may be, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credit.

(b) In the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, any tax paid for such fiscal year, under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 or Title I of the revenue act of 1917, shall be credited against the tax imposed by this title.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection of the Senator from Wisconsin, section 238 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 18, to strike out:

RATES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1917–18.

SEC. 239. That if a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the net income shall be divided into two parts, namely: (1) The portion which bears the same ratio to the total net income as the period between the beginning of such fiscal year and December 31, 1917, bears to the full fiscal year; and (2) the remaining portion of the net income.

The portion specified in clause (1) shall be subject to the rates prescribed by Title I of the revenue act of 1917 and by Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917; and the portion specified in clause (2) shall be subject to the rates prescribed by this title.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 7, to strike out "240" and insert "239," and in line 8, to insert "subdivisions (1) to (13) of," so as to make the section read:

CORPORATION RETURNS.

SEC. 239. That every corporation not exempt under subdivisions (1) to (13) of section 231 shall make a return, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer and by the treasurer or assistant treasurer. If any foreign corporation has no office or place of business in the United States, but has an agent in the United States, the return shall be made by the agent. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

Returns made under this section shall be subject to the provisions of sections 226 and 228.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 239 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 65, beginning with line 1, to insert:

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.

SEC. 240. (a) That corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, make a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and Title III, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return

In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income and invested capital properly assignable to each. There shall be allowed in computing the income tax only one specific credit of $2,000 (as provided in section 236); in computing the war-profits credit (as provided in section 311) only one specific exemption of $3,000; and in computing the excess-profits credit (as provided in section 312) only one specific exemption of $3,000.

(b) For the purpose of this section, two or more corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated—

(1) If one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests, or if one such corporation buys from or sells to another products or services at prices above or below the current market, thus effecting an artificial distribution of profits, or in any way so arranges its financial relationships with another corporation as to assign to it a disproportionate share of net income or invested capital.

(2) A foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be affiliated with a domestic corporation unless substantially all its stock is owned or controlled by such domestic corporation or by a resident taxpayer or group of resident taxpayers owning or controlling substantially all the stock of such domestic corporation. Where under this subdivision a foreign corporation is affiliated with a domestic corporation, the total tax (computed as a unit as above provided) shall be reduced by the credit authorized in section 238.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to have that passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over on the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The next amendment was, on page 67, to insert lines 1 to 17, inclusive, as follows:

PART IV. LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

SEC. 245. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every life insurance company a tax as follows:

(a) In the case of a domestic life insurance company—

(1) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of its net income;

(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of its net income.

(b) In the case of a foreign life insurance company—

(1) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the same proportion of the net income which the reserve fund upon business transacted within the United States is of the total reserve fund upon all business transacted, whether within or without the United States;

(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of such proportion of its net income.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over upon the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The next amendment was, after line 17, on page 67, to insert to line 20, on page 68, as follows:

SEC. 246. (a) That in the case of a life insurance company the term "net income" means the gross income less—

(1) The amount of interest received during the taxable year which under paragraph (4) of subdivision (b) of section 213 is exempt from taxation under this title;

(2) An amount equal to the excess, if any, of 4 per cent of the mean of the reserve funds required by law and held during the taxable year, over the amount specified in paragraph (1) of this subdivision;

(3) An amount equal to 2 per cent of any sums held at the end of the taxable year as a reserve for dividends (other than dividends payable during the year following the taxable year) the payment of which is deferred for a period of not less than five years from the date of the policy contract;

(4) Investment expenses paid during the taxable year not exceeding one-fourth of 1 per cent of the mean invested assets;

(5) Taxes and other expenses paid during the taxable year exclusively in connection with real estate owned by the company not including taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed and not including any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property;

(6) In the case of a domestic life insurance company, $2,000.

(b) The net income shall be computed on the same basis as is provided in subdivision (b) of section 212 and in section 226.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested by the Senator from Wisconsin to ask to have this section go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 246 will be passed over on the objection of the Senator from North Dakota.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 247. That in the case of a life insurance company the term "gross income" means the gross amount of income received during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that section 247 may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection of the Senator from North Dakota section 247 will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 1, in the heading, after the word "Part," to strike out "IV" and insert "V."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

The next amendment was, on page 69, to strike out the first paragraph of section 250 in the following words:

SEC. 250. That except as provided in sections 221 and 237 the tax shall be paid in installments, one-third of the amount of the tax shown in the return to be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return, one-third on the 15th day of the second month thereafter, and the remaining one-third on the 15th day of the fourth month after the time fixed by law for filing the return; but where an extension of time for filing the return is granted, the first installment shall be due upon the expiration of the period of such extension, and the second and third installments shall be due as above stated, except that in the case of any taxpayer who is abroad the commissioner may extend the time for payment of the second and third installments not more than four months after the expiration of the period of any extension of time for filing his return. If any installment is not paid when due, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall become due and payable upon notice and demand by the collector.

And to insert:

SEC. 250. (a) That except as otherwise provided in this section and sections 221 and 237 the tax shall be paid in four installments, each consisting of one-fourth of the total amount of the tax. The first installment shall be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return, and the second installment shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month, the third installment on the 15th day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the 15th day of the ninth month, after the time fixed by law for filing the return. Where an extension of time for filing a return is granted the date of the expiration of the period of the extension shall be deemed to be the time fixed by law for filing the return. In any case in which the time for the payment of any installment is thus postponed because of an extension of time for filing the return, there shall be added as part of such installment interest thereon at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month from the time it would have been due if no extension had been granted, until paid. If any installment is not paid when due, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall become due and payable upon notice and demand by the collector.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

The next amendment was, in section 250, on page 70, line 18, to strike out "or, where an extension of time for filing the return has been granted, on or before the expiration of the period of such extension" and insert "and in the case of any tax of not over $200 so paid there shall be allowed a discount of 1 per cent of the amount thereof. Where an extension of time for filing the return has been granted no interest shall be added to the tax if the whole amount of the tax is paid on or before the time the third installment would have been due if no extension had been granted," so as to read:

The tax may, at the option of the taxpayer, be paid in a single payment instead of in installments, in which case the total amount shall be paid on or before the time fixed by law for filing the return, and in the case of any tax of not over $200 so paid there shall be allowed a discount of 1 per cent of the amount thereof. Where an extension of time for filing the return has been granted no interest shall be added to the tax if the whole amount of the tax is paid on or before the time the third installment would have been due if no extension had been granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 1, to insert, as a designation of the paragraph, "(b)".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 7, to strike out "next" and insert "subsequent," and in line 8, after the word "installments," to strike out the words "falling due," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) As soon as practicable after the return is filed the commissioner shall examine it. If it then appears that the correct amount of the tax is greater or less than that shown in the return, the installments shall be recomputed. If the amount already paid exceeds that which should have been paid on the basis of the installments as recomputed, the excess so paid shall be credited against the subsequent installments; and if the amount already paid exceeds the correct amount of the tax, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provision of section 252.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on line 2, page 72, after the word "then," to insert "in lieu of the penalty provided by section 3176 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, for false or fraudulent returns willfully made, but," and in line 6, before the words "per centum," to strike out "100" and insert "50," so as to read:

If the understatement is false or fraudulent with intent to evade the tax, then, in lieu of the penalty provided by section 3176 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, for false or fraudulent returns willfully made, but in addition to other penalties provided by law for false or fraudulent returns, there shall be added as part of the tax 50 per cent of the amount of the deficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 8, to insert, as a designation of the paragraph, "(c)".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert in line 12, on page 72, as a designation of the paragraph, "(d)"; in the same line, after the word "returns," to insert "with intend to evade the tax"; and in line 18, before the word "false," to insert the word "such," so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) Except in the case of false or fraudulent returns with intent to evade the tax, the amount of tax due under any return shall be determined and assessed by the commissioner within five years after the return was due or was made, and no suit or proceeding for the collection of any tax shall be begun after the expiration of five years after the date when the return was due or was made. In the case of such false or fraudulent returns, the amount of tax due may be determined at any time after the return is filed, and the tax may be collected at any time after it becomes due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 22, to insert, as a designation of the paragraph, "(e)".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 3, after the word "due," to insert:

Provided, That as to any such amount which is the subject of a bona fide claim for abatement, the interest from the time the amount was due until the claim is decided shall be at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per month.

In the case of the first installment provided for in subdivision (a) the instructions printed on the return shall be deemed sufficient notice of the date when the tax is due and sufficient demand, and the taxpayer's computation of the tax on the return shall be deemed sufficient notice of the amount due.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 12, to insert:

(f) In any case in which in order to enforce payment of a tax it is necessary for a collector to cause a warrant of distraint to be served, there shall also be added as part of the tax the sum of $5.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 16, to insert:

(g) If the commissioner finds that a taxpayer designs quickly to depart from the United States or to remove his property therefrom, or to conceal himself or his property therein, or to do any other act tending to prejudice or to render wholly or partly ineffectual proceedings to collect the tax for the taxable year then last past or the taxable year then current unless such proceedings be brought without delay, the commissioner shall declare the taxable period for such taxpayer terminated at the end of the calendar month then last past and shall cause notice of such finding and declaration to be given the taxpayer, together with a demand for immediate payment of the tax for the taxable period so declared terminated and of the tax for the preceding taxable year or so much of said tax as is unpaid, whether or not the time otherwise allowed by law for filing return and paying the tax has expired; and such taxes shall thereupon become immediately due and payable. In any action or suit brought to enforce payment of taxes made due and payable by virtue of the provisions of this subdivision the finding of the commissioner, made as herein provided, whether made after notice to the taxpayer or not, shall be for all purposes presumptive evidence of the taxpayer's design. A taxpayer who is not in default in making any return or paying income, war profits, or excess-profits tax under any act of Congress may furnish to the United States, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, security approved by the Commissioner that he will duly make the return next thereafter required to be filed and pay the tax next thereafter required to be paid. The commissioner may approve and accept in like manner security for return and payment of taxes made due and payable by virtue of the provisions of this subdivision, provided the taxpayer has paid in full all other income, war profits, or excess-profits taxes due from him under any act of Congress. If security is approved and accepted pursuant to the provisions of this subdivision and such further or other security with respect to the tax or taxes covered thereby is given as the commissioner shall from time to time find necessary and require, payment of such taxes shall not be enforced by any proceedings under the provisions of this subdivision prior to the expiration of the time otherwise allowed for paying such respective taxes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that subsection (g) be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Subsection (g) is passed over, and, without objection, the remainder of the section is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the subhead "Receipts for taxes," section 251, on page 75, line 10, after the word "shall," to insert the words "upon request," so as to read:

RECEIPTS FOR TAXES.

SEC. 251. That every collector to whom any payment of any tax is made under the provisions of this title shall upon request give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt, stating the amount paid and the particular account for which such payment was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Refunds," section 252, page 76, line 14, after the word "then," to strike out the words "subject to," and to insert "notwithstanding"; and in line 16, after the word "Revised," to strike out "Statutes," and to insert "Statutes," so as to read:

REFUNDS.

SEC. 252. That if, upon examination of any return of income made pursuant to this act, the act of August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the act of October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," the revenue act of 1916, as amended, or the revenue act of 1917, it appears that an amount of income, war profits or excess-profits tax has been paid in excess of that properly due, then, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes, the amount of the excess shall be credited against any income, war profits or excess-profits taxes, or installment thereof, then due from the taxpayer under any other return, and any balance of such excess shall be immediately refunded to the taxpayer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 20, after the word "taxpayer," to insert:

Provided, That no such credit or refund shall be allowed or made after five years from the date when the return was due, unless before the expiration of such five years a claim therefor is filed by the taxpayer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 23, on page 77, the last clause read being as follows:

RETURNS OF PAYMENTS OF DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 254. That every corporation subject to the tax imposed by this title shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, stating the name and address of each stockholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to this section. On page 52, line 20, of the bill, the Senator will recall that we included under that title personal service corporations. That being the case, we ought to add, after the word "title," on line 19, of this section, the words "and every personal service corporation," so that it will read:

That every corporation subject to the tax imposed by this title and every personal service corporation shall, when required by the commission—

And so forth.

In other words, they are exempt in one case, and we must specifically state here that they shall make returns. We want them to make returns. I offer the amendment which I have suggested in behalf of the committee, after the word "title," in line 19, to add the words "and every personal-service corporation."

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head "Returns of brokers," in section 255, page 77, line 16, after the word "broker," to strike out "on any exchange or board of trade or other similar place of business," so as to make the section read:

RETURNS OF BROKERS.

SEC. 255. That every individual, corporation, or partnership doing business as a broker shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, showing the names of customers for whom such individual, corporation, or partnership has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the commissioner to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Information at source," in section 256, page 78, line 20, after the word "of," to insert "or at the rate of," and on page 79, line 2, after the word "manner," to insert "and to such extent," so as to read:

INFORMATION AT SOURCE.

SEC. 256. That all individuals, corporations, and partnerships, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, and employers, making payment to another individual, corporation, or partnership, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed, or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments described in sections 254 and 255), of or at the rate of $1,000 or more in any taxable year, or, in the case of such payments made by the United States, the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, shall render a true and accurate return to the commissioner, under such regulations and in such form and manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Returns to be public records," section 257, page 79, line 26, after the word "commissioner," to strike out "shall be filed in the office of the commissioner and"; on page 80, line 5, after the word "State," strike out "imposing an income tax to which corporations are subject"; and in line 10, after the word "prescribe," to insert: "Provided further, That all bona fide stockholders of record owning 1 per cent or more of the outstanding stock of any corporation shall, upon making request of the commissioner, be allowed to examine the annual income returns of such corporation and of its subsidiaries," so as to read:

RETURNS TO BE PUBLIC RECORDS.

SEC. 257. That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records; but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President: Provided, That the proper officers of any State may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to the returns of any corporation, or to an abstract thereof showing the name and income of the corporation at such times and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe: Provided further, That all bona fide stockholders of record owning 1 per cent or more of the outstanding stock of any corporation shall, upon making request of the commissioner, be allowed to examine the annual income returns of such corporation and of its subsidiaries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 17, after the word "inspection," to strike out "in the office of each collector, a list," and to insert "in such manner as he may determine lists"; in line 18, after the word "names," to strike out in "alphabetical order"; and in line 20, after the word "returns," to strike out "in such district," so as to make the clause read:

The commissioner shall as soon as practicable in each year cause to be prepared and made available to public inspection in such manner as he may determine lists containing the names and the post-office addresses of all individuals making income-tax returns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 17, to strike out the following words:

PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

SEC. 260. That in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916, as amended by the revenue act of 1917: Provided, That the Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 2, to insert:

CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES POSSESSIONS.

SEC. 260. That any individual who is a citizen of any possession of the United States and who is not a resident of the United States shall be subject to taxation under this title only as to income derived from sources within the United States, and in such case the tax shall be computed and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as in the case of other persons who are taxable only as to income derived from such sources.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 11, to insert:

PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

SEC. 261. That in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916 as amended.

Returns shall be made and taxes shall be paid under Title I of such act in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as the case may be, by (1) every individual who is a citizen or resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or derives income from sources therein, and (2) every corporation created or organized in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands or deriving income from sources therein. An individual who is neither a citizen nor a resident of Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands but derives income from sources therein shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a nonresident alien individual, and a corporation created or organized outside Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands and deriving income from sources therein shall be taxed in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands as a foreign corporation.

The Porto Rican or Philippine legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall ask to have the next title passed over, but I will make the request by sections as they are read.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in the heading on page 83, line 10, after the words "Title III," to strike out "War Profits and," and insert "War," so as to read: "Title III.—War Excess-Profits Tax."

The next amendment was, on page 83, under the subhead "General definitions," in section 300, in line 14, after the words "fiscal year," to insert "personal service corporation," "paid or accrued"; and in line 16, after the word "in," to strike out "section 200" and to insert "sections 200 and 201," so as to make the section read:

PART I.—GENERAL DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 300. That when used in this title the terms "taxable year," "fiscal year," "personal service corporation," "paid or accrued," and "dividends" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in sections 200 and 201. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the same as the first taxable year for the purposes of the income tax under Title II.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire it all to go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I should like to have it all go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. "Part I" will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Part II.—Imposition of tax," in section 301, on page 83, after "Sec. 301," to insert "(a)"; in line 23, after the word "shall," to strike out "(except as otherwise provided in section 303)"; in line 24, after the word "for," to strike out "each" and insert "the"; in line 25, after the word "year," to insert "1918"; in the same line, after the word "every," to strike out the comma; and on page 84, line 1, after the word "tax," to strike out "computed according to whichever of the two following methods yields the higher amount of tax in the case of such corporation: (a) The war-profits method specified in Part III of this title, or (b) the excess-profits method specified in Part IV of this title," and insert "equal to the sum of the following," so as to make the clause read:

PART II.—IMPOSITION OF TAX.

SEC. 301. (a) That in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1917, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1918 upon the net income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 6, to insert:

FIRST BRACKET.

Thirty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under sec. 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Sixty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

THIRD BRACKET.

The sum, if any, by which 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under sec. 311) exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets.

(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following:

FIRST BRACKET.

Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under sec. 312) and not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Forty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

(c) In any case where the full amount of the excess-profits credit is not allowed under the first bracket of subdivision (a) or (b), by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the second bracket.

(d) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just this section, or the entire subject?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The entire subject; but there was a sort of understanding when the reading was commenced that the request should be made after the reading of each section. That is the reason I have been interrupting and making separate requests, as some Senator insisted upon its being done in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 302, on page 85, line 16, after the word "That," to strike out "in the case of a corporation whose invested capital for the taxable year is not more than $25,000, the tax imposed by section 301 shall not be more than 35 per cent of the amount of its net income for such year in excess of $3,000; and if its invested capital for the taxable year is more than $25,000, but not more than $50,000, such tax shall not be more than 40 per cent of the amount of its net income for such year in excess of $3,000. This section shall not apply to any corporation whose net income is more than $50,000," and insert "the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 30 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000; and the tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 301 shall in no case be more than 20 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $20,000, plus 40 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of $20,000. Nothing in this section shall be construed in such manner as to increase the tax imposed by section 301."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 86, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 303. That in the case of a corporation the earnings of which are to be ascribed primarily to the activities of the principal owners or stockholders who are themselves regularly engaged in the active conduct of the affairs of the corporation, and in which capital (whether invested, borrowed, rented, or otherwise secured) is not directly or indirectly a material income-producing factor, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon its net income (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1917 and in lieu of the tax imposed by section 301 of this act, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this act) a tax of 20 per cent of the amount of its net income in excess of $3,000. A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

A corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income (as defined in section 213 for income-tax purposes) consists of gains or profits derived from purchase and sale, or of gains, profits, or commissions derived from Government contracts, or whose invested capital is more than $100,000, shall not be subject to the tax imposed by this section, but shall be subject to the tax imposed by section 301.

Wherever in this act reference is made to "war-profits" or "excess-profits" taxes, and the context shows that taxes imposed by act of Congress are referred to, such reference shall include the tax imposed by this section.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 27, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 303. That if part of the net income of a corporation is derived (1) from a trade or business (or a branch of a trade or business) in which the employment of capital is necessary, and (2) a part (constituting not less than 30 per cent of its total net income) is derived from a separate trade or business (or a distinctly separate branch of the trade or business) which if constituting the sole trade or business would bring it within the class of "personal service corporations," then (under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) the tax upon the first part of such net income shall be separately computed, and the tax upon the second part shall be the same percentage thereof as the tax so computed upon the first part is of such first part.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 88, line 5, after "(b)" to strike out "The taxes imposed by this title shall not be imposed in the case of a foreign corporation the net income of which during the taxable year is less than $3,000" and insert "Life insurance companies shall be exempt from taxation under this title."

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 8, to insert:

(c) Any corporation whose net income for the taxable year is less than $3,000 shall be exempt from taxation under this title.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 11, to insert:

(d) In the case of any corporation engaged in the mining of gold, the portion of the net income derived from the mining of gold shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this title, and the tax on the remaining portion of the net income shall be computed upon the basis of an invested capital which bears the same ratio to the full invested capital as such remaining portion of the net income bears to the entire net income.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 88, line 24, in the heading, to strike out "War Profits Method" and insert "Credits," so as to make the heading read: "Part III.—Credits."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am going to ask to have Part III passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 89, after line 3, to strike out section 311, as follows:

SEC. 311. That the tax, if computed by the war-profits method, shall be 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under section 312).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 89, line 8, to change the number of the section from 312 (a) to 311 (a); and on page 89, line 13, after the word "the," to strike out "invested capital added or withdrawn since the close of the prewar period; but if," and insert "difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year if," so as to read:

SEC. 311. (a) That the war-profits credit shall consist of the sum of:

(1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and

(2) An amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus or minus, as the case may be, 10 per cent of the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year. If the tax is computed for a period of less than 12 months, such amount shall be reduced to the same proportion thereof as the number of months in the period is of 12 months.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 20, after the word "corporation," to strike out "was not in existence during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, or if it," so as to make the clause read:

(b) If the corporation had no net income for the prewar period, or if the amount computed under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) is less than 10 per cent of its invested capital for the taxable year, then the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 3, to insert:

(c) If the corporation was not in existence during the whole of at least one calendar year during the prewar period, then the war-profits credit shall be the sum of:

(1) A specific exemption of $3,000; and

(2) An amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year as the average percentage of net income to invested capital, for the prewar period, of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer; but such amount shall in no case be less than 10 per cent of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year. Such average percentage shall be determined by the commissioner on the basis of data contained in returns made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917, and the average known as the median shall be used. If such average percentage has not been determined and published at least 30 days prior to the time when the return of the taxpayer is due, then for purposes of such return 10 per cent shall be used in lieu thereof; but such average percentage when determined shall be used for the purposes of section 250 in determining the correct amount of the tax.

The next amendment was, on page 91, at the beginning of line 1, to strike out "(e)" and insert "(d)."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the section passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 91, beginning with line 3, to strike out:

PART IV.—EXCESS-PROFITS METHOD.

SEC. 315. That the tax, if computed by the excess-profits method, shall be the sum of the following:

Thirty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit (determined under section 316) and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year;

Fifty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 per cent and not in excess of 20 per cent of such capital; and

Seventy per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent of such capital.

In any case where the full amount of the credit is not allowed under the first bracket above provided, by reason of the fact that such credit is in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital, the part not so allowed shall be deducted from the amount in the next succeeding bracket, and if not then fully allowed the remaining part shall be deducted from the amount in the last bracket.

And on line 22, after the word "SEC.," to strike out "316" and insert "312," so as to read:

SEC. 312. That the excess-profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year.

A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that all passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 3, in the heading, after the word "Part," to strike out "V" and insert "IV," so as to make the heading read: "Part IV.—Net Income."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be agreed to, if there is no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There will be a request for part of this section to go over; and I think perhaps it might as well all go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to striking out "V" and inserting "IV"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be agreed to, then.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 92, line 25, after the word "act," to strike out "except that in the case of oil and gas wells there shall be deducted (in lieu of the deduction provided in clause (a) of paragraph (9) of subdivision (a) of section 234) a reasonable allowance for depletion (including in the case of producers or prospectors a reasonable allowance for hazard not to exceed 10 per cent of the value in the ground of the oil withdrawn during the taxable year) such deduction to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have all that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 93, line 14, in the heading, after the word "Part," to strike out "VI" and insert "V," so as to read: "Part V.—Invested Capital."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 94, line 6, after the word "thereof," to insert "or where all or part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in the net income because of the limitation on the deduction of interest under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234," and in line 11, after the word "inadmissible," to insert "assets," and after the word "assets" to insert: "The term 'admissible assets' means all assets other than inadmissible assets, but only to the extent that they are allowed to be included in invested capital under the provisions of section 326," so as to read:

The term "inadmissible assets" means stocks, bonds, and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income, but where the income derived from such assets consists in part of gain or profit derived from the sale or other disposition thereof, or where all or part of the interest derived from such assets is in effect included in the net income because of the limitation on the deduction of interest under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234, a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall not be deemed to be inadmissible assets;

The term "admissible assets" means all assets other than inadmissible assets, but only to the extent that they are allowed to be included in invested capital under the provisions of section 326.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 17, after the word "shares," to insert "issued at a nominal value or," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) For the purposes of this title, the par value of stock or shares shall, in the case of stock or shares issued at a nominal value or having no par value, be deemed to be the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section all go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 95, line 4, after the word "therefor," to insert a comma and the words "unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid in surplus," so as to read:

(2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor, unless the actual cash value of such tangible property at the time paid in is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been clearly and substantially in excess of such par value, in which case such excess shall be treated as paid-in surplus.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 12, after the words "taxable year," to strike out "and not including the increase in the value of any asset above the original cost until such increase is actually realized by sale," so as to make the paragraph read:

(3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits, not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the taxable year.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 19, after the word "aggregate," to strike out "20" and insert "30," so as to make the paragraph read:

(4) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 30 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917, whichever is lowest.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 22, after the numeral "(5)," to strike out "Patents and copyrights" and insert "Intangible property," so as to make the paragraph read:

(5) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 30 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest; but

The next amendment was, on page 96, after line 6, to strike out:

(1) Borrowed capital; or

(2) Intangible property (other than patents and copyrights) paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917.

And insert:

borrowed capital.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 12, after the word "defined," to strike out "an amount equal to the average amount of capital invested in inadmissible assets held by the corporation during the year: Provided, That at the option of the corporation the amount to be so deducted shall be reduced to the amount by which such average amount invested in inadmissible assets exceeds the average amount of borrowed capital of the corporation (other than indebtedness maturing within one year of its creation, all accounts payable and current liabilities) for such year, but in such case in computing the tax under this title there shall be included in the net income for such year the same proportion of the total amount of interest and dividends received during such year from such inadmissible assets as the amount of such capital invested in inadmissible assets not deducted from invested capital bears to the total amount of such inadmissible assets," and to insert "a percentage thereof equal to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets is of the amount of admissible and inadmissible assets held during the taxable year: Provided, That no such deduction shall be made in the case of any dealer in securities, insurance company, bank, banking association, loan or trust company which elects to include in its net income all income derived from inadmissible assets; but where such election is made there shall be deducted from the net income any interest paid or accrued during the taxable year which has not been deducted under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234: Provided further, That such election once made shall be adhered to in subsequent taxable years unless permission to change is granted by the commissioner," so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) There shall be deducted from invested capital as above defined a percentage thereof equal to the percentage which the amount of inadmissible assets is of the amount of admissible and inadmissible assets held during the taxable year: Provided, That no such deduction shall be made in the case of any dealer in securities, insurance company, bank, banking association, loan or trust company which elects to include in its net income all income derived from inadmissible assets; but where such election is made there shall be deducted from the net income any interest paid or accrued during the taxable year which has not been deducted under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234: Provided further, That such election once made shall be adhered to in subsequent taxable years unless permission to change is granted by the commissioner.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 16, after the letter "(d)," to strike out:

In the case of a foreign corporation the term "invested capital" includes only its invested capital used or employed within the United States.

(e) The invested capital for any year shall be the average invested capital for such year, as above defined, but in the case of a corporation making a return for a fractional part of the year a corresponding reduction shall be made in the invested capital.

And to insert:

The invested capital for any period shall be the average invested capital for such period, but in the case of a corporation making a return for a fractional part of a year, it shall (except for the purpose of paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 311) be the same fractional part of such average invested capital.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that section may be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 98, line 5, after the words "Sec. 327," to strike out:

(a) That in the following cases the invested capital shall be determined as provided in subdivision (b) of this section: (1) Where the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326; or (2) where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, as to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively; or (3) where capital is a material income-producing factor, but where, because of the fact that the capital employed is in large part borrowed, there is no invested capital or the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business. This section shall not apply in the case of a corporation 50 per centum or more of whose gross income (as defined in section 213 for income-tax purposes) consists of gain, profits, or commissions derived from Government contracts, unless the commissioner is satisfied that such corporation is overcapitalized.

(b) In the cases specified in subdivision (a) the invested capital shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation for the taxable year as the average invested capital for the taxable year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such year.

SEC. 328. (a) That in cases where invested capital is to be determined in the manner provided in section 327.

And to insert:

That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(a) Where the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

(d) Where, as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, the taxpayer would (under section 326) be placed in a position of substantial inequality because of the time or manner of organization or because the actual value of the assets on March 1, 1913, was substantially in excess of the amount at which such assets would be valued for the purpose of computing invested capital under the provisions of section 326;

(e) Where the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business because:

1. The capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or is in large part borrowed;

2. There are excluded from the invested capital as computed under the provisions of section 326 intangible assets of recognized and substantial value built up or developed by the taxpayer;

3. The net income for the taxable year is abnormally high, due to the realization in one year of (a) gains, profits, or income earned or accrued during a period of years or (b) extraordinary gains or profit derived from the sale of property the principal value of which has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer. When the tax is determined under this paragraph proper allowance shall be made for the taxes which would have been payable in prior years if the gains, profits, or income earned or accrued in such years had been taxed at the rates then applicable.

4. Proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the present war or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purpose of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that whole section passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 328, page 101, line 7, after the numerals "328," to insert: "(a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year"; in line 13, before the words "the commissioner," to insert "In such cases"; and in line 19, after the word "war," to insert "profits," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In such cases the commissioner shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 21, after the words "purposes of," to strike out "section 327" and insert "subdivision (a)"; in line 22, after the word "average," to strike out "invested capital" and insert "tax"; and in line 24, after the word "determined," to strike out "for each calendar year," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) For the purposes of subdivision (a) the ratios between the average tax and the average net income of representative corporations shall be determined by the commissioner in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 2, to strike out:

In the case of a corporation making a return on the basis of a fiscal year the ratios determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used, except that in the case of a fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1918 the ratios based upon returns made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be used.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 10, after the word "which," to strike out "invested capital" and insert "the tax," and in line 11, after the word "in," to strike out "section 327," and insert "subdivision (a)," so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) The commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which the tax is determined in the manner prescribed in subdivision (a), containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, and the amount of invested capital as determined under such section. The commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 20, in the heading, after the word "Part," to strike out "VII" and insert "VI" so as to make the heading read: "Part VI.—Reorganizations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 330, page 102, line 23, after the word "by," to strike out "a corporation, the corporation," and insert "the taxpayer, the taxpayer"; in line 25, after the word "been," to strike out "in existence" and insert "engaged in such trade or business"; on page 103, line 3, after the words "prior to," to strike out "the organization of the corporation now carrying on such trade or business" and insert "such reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership"; and, in line 7, after the word "of," to strike out "such corporation" and insert "the taxpayer," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 330. That in the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership after January 1, 1911, of a trade or business now carried on by the taxpayer, the taxpayer shall for the purposes of this tile be deemed to have been engaged in such trade or business prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of such predecessor trade or business for all or any part of the prewar period prior to such reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership shall be deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of the taxpayer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is this also part of the part objected to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir; the first section is, at least.

The next amendment was, on page 103, beginning with line 8, to strike out:

If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period shall be ascertained and returned upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for income-tax purposes in Title II, except that the credits provided in subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 216 shall be deducted.

And to insert:

If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period shall, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, be ascertained and returned as nearly as may be upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for corporations in Title II, including a reasonable deduction for salary or compensation to each partner or the individual for personal services actually rendered.

If any asset of the trade or business in existence both during the taxable year and any prewar year is included in the invested capital for the taxable year, but is not included in the invested capital for such prewar year, or is valued on a different basis in computing the invested capital for the taxable year and such prewar year, respectively, then under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, such readjustments shall be made as are necessary to place the computation of the invested capital for such prewar year on the basis employed in determining the invested capital for the taxable year.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 331, page 104, line 9, after the word "business," to insert a comma and the words "or change of ownership of property"; in line 11, after the word "business," to insert "or property"; in line 13, after the word "the," to strike out "predecessor trade or business" and insert "previous owner"; in line 17, after the word "such," to strike out "prior trade or business" and insert "previous owner"; and in line 19, after the word "received," to insert: "Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment, or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise since March 1, 1913, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 331. In the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business, or change of ownership of property, after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business or property of 50 per cent or more remains in the same persons, or any of them, then no asset transferred or received from the previous owner shall, for the purpose of determining invested capital, be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such previous owner if such asset had not been so transferred or received: Provided, That if such previous owner was not a corporation, then the value of any asset so transferred or received shall be taken at its cost of acquisition (at the date when acquired by such previous owner) with proper allowance for depreciation, impairment, betterment, or development, but no addition to the original cost shall be made for any charge or expenditure deducted as expense or otherwise since March 1, 1918, in computing the net income of such previous owner for purposes of taxation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 3, in the heading, after the word "Part," to strike out "VIII" and insert "VII," so as to make the heading read: "Part VII—Miscellaneous."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 335, page 105, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out:

(1) A tax computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 for the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1917; and (2) a tax computed under this title for the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1918.

The tax under clause (1) shall be computed upon the same proportion of the net income (as determined under Title II of this act for income-tax purposes) for such fiscal year as the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1917 is of the full fiscal year; and the tax under clause (2) shall be computed upon the remainder of such net income.

And to insert:

(1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period: Provided, That in the case of a partnership or a personal-service corporation, the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (1).

Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax imposed by this title, or, in the case of a partnership or a personal-service corporation, the amount specified in clause (1), the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

In the case of a partnership or personal-service corporation no tax shall be paid under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1918; and any tax so paid shall be immediately refunded to the partnership or corporation.

(b) If a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax for such fiscal year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed at the rates specified in subdivision (b) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 335. (a) That if a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the tax for the first taxable year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1917 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period: Provided, That in the case of a partnership or a personal-service corporation, the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (1).

Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed for such fiscal year by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax imposed by this title, or, in the case of a partnership or a personal-service corporation, the amount specified in clause (1), the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

In the case of a partnership or personal-service corporation no tax shall be paid under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 for any period beginning on or after January 1, 1918; and any tax so paid shall be immediately refunded to the partnership or corporation.

(b) If a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1918 and ending in 1919, the tax for such fiscal year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed at the rates specified in subdivision (a) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1918 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed at the rates specified in subdivision (b) of section 301 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1919 is of the entire period.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that that section go over, because all of the other 1920 provisions have been passed over; and therefore I should like to have this one passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 336, page 106, line 25, after the numerals "304," to strike out "having a net income of $3,000 or over for the taxable year," and on page 107, after line 8, to strike out—

In no case shall the tax under this title or Title II be determined on the basis of a so-called consolidated return, but shall in each case be determined upon the basis of the net income and invested capital of the corporation liable to the tax.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 336. That every corporation not exempt under section 304 shall make a return for the purposes of this title. Such returns shall be made, and the taxes imposed by this title shall be paid, at the same times and places, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, as is provided in the case of returns and payment of income tax by corporations for the purposes of Title II, and all the provisions of that title not inapplicable, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the taxes imposed by this title.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 13, to insert:

SEC. 337. That in the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil or gas wells, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by this title attributable to such sale shall not exceed 20 per cent of the selling price of such property or interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the same provision appears in two other places in the bill. They have been asked to go over, so I think we had better allow this to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 107, beginning with line 21, to strike out:

TITLE IV. ESTATE TAX.

SEC. 400. That when used in this title—

The term "executor" means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent; and

The term "collector" means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or, if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the commissioner.

SEC. 401. That (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916, as amended, and in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917) a tax equal to the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate (determined as provided in section 403) is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

3 per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

6 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

9 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

12 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

15 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

18 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

21 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

24 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

27 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

30 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

35 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; and 40 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

SEC. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

(b) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, courtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or courtesy;

(c) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has at any time created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer or trust is made or created before or after the passage of this act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within three years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title;

(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent;

(e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

(f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $40,000 of the amount receivable by all other beneficiaries as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

SEC. 403. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and such amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes;

(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property—real, personal, or mixed—which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in the decedent's gross estate; and

(3) An exemption of $50,000;

(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

(1) That proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per cent of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States; and

(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property—real, personal, or mixed—which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if any estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States.

No deductions shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 404 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States.

For the purpose of this title, stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent, and the amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent where the insurer is a domestic corporation, shall be deemed property within the United States, and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 402, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

SEC. 404. That the executor, within 60 days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 403; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 403; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

SEC. 405. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 404, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

SEC. 406. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death, but in any case where the commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate, he may grant an extension of time for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed two years from the due date. If the tax is not paid within one year and 180 days after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax.

SEC. 407. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector. If the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the commissioner shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid, the collector shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess and demand payment thereof. If such excess part of the tax is not paid within 10 days after such notification, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the expiration of such 10 days' period until paid, and the amount of such excess shall be a lien upon the entire gross estate, except such part thereof as may have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment, and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

SEC. 408. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 180 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law, or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution. If any part of the gross estate consists of proceeds of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent receivable by a beneficiary other than the executor, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiary such portion of the total tax paid as the proceeds, in excess of $40,000, of such policies bear to the net estate. If there is more than one such beneficiary, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiaries in the same ratio.

SEC. 409. That unless the tax is sooner paid in full, it shall be a lien for 10 years upon the gross estate of the decedent, except that such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be divested of such lien. If the commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged, he may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate releasing any or all property of such estate from the lien herein imposed.

If (a) the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) or (b) if insurance passes under a contract executed by the decedent in favor of a specific beneficiary, and if in either case the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, then the transferee, trustee, or beneficiary shall be personally liable for such tax, and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, or to the extent of such beneficiary's interest under such contract of insurance, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

SEC. 410. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 404, or, having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper, containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or, having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request to the commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States.

And to insert:

TITLE IV.—INHERITANCE TAX.

SEC. 400. That when used in this title—

The term "executor" means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent; and

The term "collector" means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or, if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the commissioner.

SEC. 401. That (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916, as amended, and in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917) a tax is hereby imposed upon the transfer by reason of the death of a resident of the United States, dying after the passage of this act, of any tangible or intangible property wherever situated, or any interest therein or income therefrom, or by reason of the death of a nonresident of the United States, dying after the passage of this act, of any tangible or intangible property within the United States, or any interest therein or income therefrom, to any person in trust or otherwise, equal to the sum of the following percentages of the total value of the beneficial interests transferred to such person in any manner by reason of the death of the decedent:

1 per cent of the amount by which the beneficial interests passing to such person exceed $10,000 and do not exceed $25,000;

2 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $25,000 and do not exceed $50,000;

3 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $50,000 and do not exceed $100,000;

4 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $100,000 and do not exceed $150,000;

5 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $150,000 and do not exceed $200,000;

6 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $200,000 and do not exceed $250,000;

10 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $250,000 and do not exceed $500,000;

15 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $500,000 and do not exceed $1,000,000;

20 per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $1,000,000 and do not exceed $2,500,000;

Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which such beneficial interests exceed $2,500,000.

Transfers by reason of the death of a decedent dying during the continuance of the present war while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States or dying within one year after the termination of such war from injuries received or disease contracted in such service shall not be taxable hereunder.

Transfers to or for the use of the United States, a State, or any political division thereof, for public purposes exclusively, transfers to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, and transfers to a trustee or trustees exclusively for such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, shall not be taxable hereunder.

SEC. 402. That the following shall be deemed to be taxable transfers under the provisions of this title:

(a) Transfers by the laws of intestate succession or by will, including the creation by will of powers of appointment and the exercise by will of general powers of appointment;

(b) Transfers by deed, grant, or gift, including the exercise by deed of general powers of appointment, made in contemplation of the death of the vendor, grantor, or donor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death, except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth, whether such deed, grant, or gift was made before or after the passage of this act. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within two years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title; and

(c) Other transfers by reason of the death of the decedent, to wit: (1) The consummation in a surviving spouse of dower or curtesy or statutory rights in lieu thereof; (2) the accrual to a surviving tenant or depositor through survivorship of complete title to property held jointly or as tenants by the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent; and (3) the receipt by a beneficiary of an amount of insurance in excess of $25,000 under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

SEC. 403. That taxes upon transfers shall be computed upon the total value of all the beneficial interests transferred to the same person in any manner by reason of the death of a decedent. Whenever at the time a tax becomes due the persons to whom beneficial interests are transferred by reason of the death of a decedent are not in being or can not be ascertained, or the extent of the beneficial interests transferred can not be ascertained, for the reason that the transfers are conditioned upon the happening of a contingency or of the exercise of a discretion or a power of appointment, all the property so transferred shall for the purpose of the computation and collection of the tax be deemed to be transferred to the estate of said decedent, and as to such transfers such estate shall be treated under the provisions of this title as a person, and, except in the case of the exercise of a general power of appointment, no further tax under this title shall be collected on transfers of such beneficial interests at the time the persons to whom they are transferred or the extent of the interests transferred to such persons are ascertained.

SEC. 404. That the value of the beneficial interests, transfers of which are taxable under this title, shall be determined as follows:

(a) The total value of the beneficial interests transferred to any transferee shall be the value of that part of the property included within the net estate of the decedent (determined as provided in sec. 406) which passes to such transferee by any of the methods of transfer described in section 402: Provided, however, That whenever a beneficial interest transferred to any person by reason of the death of a nonresident decedent is not an interest in specific property, the value of the beneficial interest the transfer of which is subject to taxation under this title shall be such proportion of the value of the total beneficial interest so transferred as the value of that part of the gross estate which at the time of the death of the decedent is situated in the United States bears to the value of his entire gross estate wherever situated. If an executor does not include in the return required to be filed under section 407 the value at the time of the death of the nonresident decedent of that part of his gross estate not situated in the United States, the amount of the net estate shall be apportioned among the transferees of the beneficial interests in the manner which will result in the greatest possible amount of tax upon the transfer of such net estate.

(b) In the case of resident and nonresident decedents the following rules of valuation shall apply: (1) The value of an annuity, life estate, term of years, or other interest terminating on the expiration of a certain period shall be determined by the American experience tables of mortality at per cent compound interest or by such other tables of mortality at such rate of interest as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary; (2) the value of a remainder in any property after an annuity, life estate, term of years, or other interest terminating on the expiration of a certain period shall be ascertained by deducting the value of such annuity, life estate, term of years, or other interest terminating on the expiration of a certain period from the value of such property; (3) there shall not be included in the value of a beneficial interest the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 was collected from such estate or an inheritance tax under this act was collected on the transfer of such property; and (4) there shall not be included in the value of a beneficial interest any amounts paid or required to be paid therefrom as estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes imposed by any authority other than that of the United States.

SEC. 405. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

(b) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer is made before or after the passage of this act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth;

(c) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, curtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or curtesy;

(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants by the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent;

(e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

(f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $25,000 of the amount receivable by any beneficiary as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

SEC. 406. That the value of the net estate shall be determined—

(a) In the case of a resident decedent, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and such amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon incomes received after the death of the decedent or any inheritance taxes imposed by this title. If a decedent gives, bequeaths, or devises to his executor any property in lieu of compensation the value thereof in excess of reasonable compensation shall not be deducted from the value of the gross estate.

(b) In the case of a nonresident decedent, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

That proportion of the deductions specified in subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per centum of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States.

No deduction shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident decedent unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 407 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident decedent not situated in the United States.

For the purpose of this title stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent, and the amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent where the insurer is a domestic corporation, shall be deemed property within the United States and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 405 shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or at the time of the decedent's death.

SEC. 407. That the executor, within sixty days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such time and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 406; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 406; (d) the names of the persons to whom beneficial interests are transferred in any manner by reason of the death of the decedent and descriptions of the beneficial interests so transferred; and (e) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $10,000 and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

SEC. 408. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 407, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

SEC. 409. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death; but in any case where the commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate, he may grant an extension of time for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed three years from the due date. If the tax is not paid within one year and 180 days after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax.

SEC. 410. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector. If the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the commissioner shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid, the collector shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess and demand payment thereof. If such excess part of the tax is not paid within 30 days after such notification, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the expiration of such 30 days' period until paid.

The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment, and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

SEC. 411. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 180 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law, or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid, and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 412. That each person shall be liable to the executor for the tax upon transfers to such person and the executor shall collect from such person the tax upon all transfers to such person, or shall deduct it from any property in his possession or control transferred to such person. The executor shall not pay or deliver any property the transfer of which is subject to tax to any transferee unless the tax upon such transfer has been so collected or deducted. Whenever there is a transfer of property taxable under this title of which the executor has no possession or control, the person having possession or control thereof, or under liability to make any payment to the transferee, shall be liable to the executor for the tax upon such transfer and unless the tax has been paid by the transferee to the executor shall collect or deduct it from such property or such payment and pay it to the executor: Provided, however, That the commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary by regulations authorize the payment of such tax directly to the collector and relieve the executor from liability therefor: Provided further, That in the case of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent payable to a beneficiary other than the executor or the estate of the decedent the corporation liable for the payment thereof shall be relieved from liability for any tax thereon if such beneficiary suomits with the proofs of death and claims a written statement showing that the aggregate amount of insurance payable to such beneficiary under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life does not exceed $25,000. All taxes, including taxes on the transfer of annuities, life estates, terms for years, and other interests terminating on the expiration of a certain period, shall be paid out of and chargeable to capital and not to income. Nothing in this title shall prevent an executor from paying taxes out of such property as the will or other instrument under which transfer is made shall direct, but such directions shall not affect any right of the United States or of the collector to collect the tax or to a lien therefor.

If the amount of tax paid or collected out of property transferred to any person exceeds the amount of tax of which such person is liable, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement to the extent of such excess out of any part of the estate still undistributed, or to a just and equitable contribution by the persons liable for the tax so paid or collected under this title.

SEC. 413. That the tax and interest thereon shall be a lien upon the property included in the gross estate of the decedent and the property acquired in substitution therefor from the death of the decedent for a period of 10 years unless it is sooner paid in full, except that such property as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, and such personal property as is sold to purchasers for value in good faith and without notice of the lien shall be divested of such lien. If the commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability on all transfers by reason of the death of a decedent has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate releasing any or all property of such decedent from the lien hereby imposed, or if he is satisfied that the tax liability on all transfers to any person by reason of the death of a decedent has been fully discharged, he may, under such regulations, issue his certificate releasing any or all property transferred to such person from the lien hereby imposed.

SEC. 414. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 407, or having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or, having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request of the commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, in lieu of all other penalties, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States.

SEC. 415. That the taxes imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the act entitled "an act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, and by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917, shall not apply to the transfer of the net estate of any decedent dying before the passage of this act while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States in the present war or from injuries received or disease contracted while in such service, and any such tax collected upon such transfer shall be refunded to the executor.

During the reading of the foregoing:

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator ask to have this amendment as a substitute go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes.

After the conclusion of the reading:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is understood that these sections will go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All will go over.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BROUSSARD.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall convene on Sunday, January 26, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m., to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of the late Senator from Louisiana, Hon. ROBERT F. BROUSSARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? There is none, and it is so ordered.

CABLE SERVICE.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask permission of the Senate to have printed in the RECORD matter of some importance. I addressed a letter to the Postmaster General in which I stated that the public press had reported correspondence showing the reasons for taking over the cable; also correspondence between him and the president of the Commercial Cable Co., the president of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and the vice president of the Commercial Cable Co. I felt that the correspondence should be put before the public, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1918.

Hon. J. H. LEWIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR LEWIS: Referring to your request for copies of the recent reports of Mr. Theodore N. Vail on the telephone, telegraph, and cable situation, and other correspondence relative thereto, I am inclosing Mr. Vail's tentative report dated December 6, 1918, and his letter of transmittal of the same date; also copies of my letters to Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Commercial Cable Co.; Mr. Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Co.; and Mr. George G. Ward, vice president of the Commercial Cable Co., all dated December 4, 1918, together with copies of the replies of Mr. Mackay and Mr. Carlton, dated December 4 and 6, respectively. I am also inclosing a copy of my letter to Mr. Mackay dated December 7, 1918. There is some earlier correspondence with respect to this matter which will be furnished if you desire it.

Sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

[Theodore N. Vail, 195 Broadway, New York. Personal.]

DECEMBER 6, 1918.

DEAR MR. BURLESON: I am inclosing herewith a tentative report of what, in my opinion, would bring about the most extended use of the telephone, telegraph, and cable.

"This idea of a unified system is not a new one. It is one with which our public is familiar and one to which they have given their unmistakable approval through its acceptance of all that has been done in the furtherance of this idea in a unified telephone system and of the common management of the telephone and telegraph, although the latter had to be undone under the interpretation and application of existing laws.

"The present problem is how much can be brought about under present conditions?

"What should be done to create an ideal system can not be done because of existing laws, nor would complete consolidation be justified since to undo such a consolidated system into its former units would lead to unwarranted waste.

"There are, however, many things which can be done which would not produce waste and which might by improvement of service help to further educate the public and create an actively favorable attitude toward some correlation or coordination of operation and service with the control and regulation and restriction, through some combination of governmental authority and private ownership or operation, retaining all the advantages and incentives of both.

"If it is within the scope of what you ask me to do, my suggestion is:

ORGANIZATION.

"That, first, to create a comprehensive operating organization by which all the properties can be brought under one executive operating head through whom all operations should be conducted, subject to the Postmaster General.

"This executive head should be one of unmistakable qualifications developed by large experience in similar situations.

"This single head should, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General, appoint experienced assistants and organize directly under him three operating 'divisions,' each embracing the distinctive operation of 'telephone service' and 'telegraph service' and the 'maintenance and manipulation of wires of the systems' as distinct from the traffic operations.

"Each of these 'divisions' to be under control of an experienced operating head, experienced in the operation of the work of the 'division' through actual developed qualification and experience in similar work on a similar scale of operation.

"Below these 'divisions' the organization can be amplified and arranged to meet the necessities. There is abundant material for most of these positions, and there is opportunity for every experienced man now in the combined services to be employed to the full scope of his abilities.

"Under this organization the distinctive traffic operations would be amply cared for, while with the telegraph and telephone wires under one head they could be utilized for both purposes in one Government operating system without any merger or change other than to bring them to one switching terminal at each great center, involving only some temporary loop connections.

"In this way congestion in any part of the traffic could be overcome by so distributing the wires as to best carry that load.

"All the operations under this plan could be so corelated and coordinated as to bring about a very considerable increase in efficiency and much economy without doing anything disturbing to the actual property or which could not be undone at the end of the period. Your operating organization would at once plan many things which would work toward the end desired and which would not necessitate any destructive undoing at the end of Government control.

"In connection with efficiency of operation, I wish to say that never in my experience has the efficiency of operation been so handicapped by abnormal conditions as now, and until conditions become normal the public should be tolerant.

CABLES.

"There is one thing that calls for immediate action. The cable situation is and has been grave. Congestion is now the rule, and accumulation of business is at times serious, and when the activities of the peace conference are really commenced in Europe it will be greatly increased.

"By one traffic head controlling cable operation and a few slight changes in the physical property, which could centralize the cable terminals, as it were, and which would not involve any dismemberment of the property or could not be undone, the efficiency can be somewhat increased; that is, the distribution of the cable load could be effected more readily and with less confusion than under independent and coequal traffic management, each more or less jealous of his personal prerogatives or of his system and giving his system more consideration than the emergency.

"As pointed out in my letter of October 22, if it were lawful or if it could be brought about by consent of the proprietors, it would be a great feature for the commercial and political interest of the United States and of great advantage to every country reached by direct communication if the cable systems could be consolidated into one system and the cable systems rearranged and extended more or less as outlined in my letter of October 22.

"Such a combination would at once bring about an important saving in cost of operation, particularly by the commercial department. As charges for service are dependent on costs, it would eventually bring about considerable reductions in charges. So long as each independent cable company must maintain its commercial organization to obtain and retain its business, so long must this cost be distributed in the charges for service.

"A broader, cheaper, and more abundant service will be a most effectual adjunct to our own commercial agents abroad in securing business of the United States industries. There is already an active movement being inaugurated, particularly in South America, by German commercial agents to recover their prewar conditions, and which must be promptly met if the United States is to get any advantage from the present situation.

"It would seem that such a merger would appeal to the business sense of the proprietors of the cable and could be brought about, particularly if the Government could put itself behind the movement.

"While considerable can be done in improving the cable operation under one management, the big features of a readjustment of the cable situation involve considerable expense and time. Cables take time to build and time to lay. There is no manufacturing of submarine cable established in the United States, and orders from American companies when placed abroad are filled after the requirements of their own companies. This is not surmise; it is the experience of American companies needing cable for repairs and extensions.

"In any event, if this country is to become a commercial and industrial world center, as it is now great in financial, political, and national industrial lines, an American cable system consonant with our obligations and opportunities must be organized and that system freed from the uncertainties of foreign cable manufacture.

"There must be a United States system which will place this country directly in communication with every country with which we have or hope to have important commercial relations. As it is now, and as my letter of October 22 pointed out, we are on one side of the world system. We must be made one of the centers of the world system if we expect to compete on even terms with the world or be properly considered by the countries we wish to reach.

"The immediate and pressing necessity is for the East Coast-South American cable to give this country and the River Plate countries direct cable communication.

"Of what use in commerce will be our investment of billions in ships to carry commerce if we do not give them and the business agents of all commerce direct communication with their home ports and home business houses?

"The cable industry and the proposed cable changes could not be brought about except through Government aid under existing conditions.

"Congress has authorized combination in foreign commercial enterprises. If the advantages and necessities were properly presented, it should be possible to obtain promptly such authorization or legislation as would give, under the ægis of the Government, authority for combination and operation of all electric intercommunicating systems in direct connection and coordination with the national wire system between this country and all foreign countries.

"Time is an element, and whatever is done should be done at once."

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) THEO. N. VAIL.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT WIRE SYSTEM.

Responding to your request, I beg leave to submit the following in answer to your broad inquiry into the problem of the most efficient and beneficent "extended use of the telephone, telegraph, and cable."

In the annual report of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for 1910 the opinion is advanced that the wire system of the future should and would afford facilities for the annihilation of time and distance by the general use of electrical transmission for written or personal communication, which would afford electrical communication of every kind of intelligence from anyone at any one place to anyone at any other place; that the service should be comprehensive, nation wide, economical; and that the service rendered should be at a minimum price so that potential business could be developed.

To do this efficiently and economically requires the combination of every kind of electrical transmission of intelligence into one system over which the most efficient service could be rendered through the development of new and useful services, and the wire plant and other facilities thus being utilized to their fullest extent.

Time and events have demonstrated and emphasized the underlying truth of this, and public opinion now recognizes the advantages of such a system. This is evidenced by the general regret which was expressed at the divorce of the telegraph and telephone under the interpretation and application of existing laws, and also by the almost universal public demands for one telephone system which have come to exist, and also in all municipal utilities the increasing tendency to the merger of all similar services.

It may be considered as settled that "extended use of the telephone, telegraph, and cable" is to be obtained through "one national system, interdependent, interconnecting, intercommunicating, by or over which direct and continuous transmission can be had within the limits of possible transmission."

Some of these beneficial results can be obtained at once, but for some the immediate cost of reconstructing parts of the systems would not warrant the expenditure, particularly as it could be done in a relatively short period without any capital charge through the normal process of reconstruction.

Under the present "state of the art" the distance of possible direct electrical communications can not for any length of time be limited by either ocean or continents.

It is possible under present conditions to send a continuous signal, without the intervention of human agency, around the world either by land wire and submarine cable or aero signal or a combination of all. The transmission of speech or electrical continuous signals is now practical from every commercial, industrial, or social community as a center to the limits of effective common control over a continuity of circuits. Any limitations are wholly in the lack of contiuuity in the facilities, not in the "state of the art."

The principle of "one system" not only applies to our intranational electrical intercommunication but, as the world at large is transoceanic, the cable systems within national jurisdiction must be so closely interrelated as to be integral parts of such a system.

The making up of long-distance circuits for any transmission, particularly the combination of wire and radio transmission, is impossible without perfect coordination, which can only come from one unified system or from that reciprocity between independent systems which would be virtual subordination for the time and purpose of a part of the facilities of one system to the operating control of the other system.

To get the best results, therefore, the common control of this unified system should extend to the farthest possible limits. It should cover our own Nation and the international connections to the boundaries of all other nations with which we have existing or potential relations.

Whatever may be done in the practical reorganizations and operation of electrical intercommunication—domestic or international—in or by the United States, whether "open wire," "cable," or "radio," there should be such close harmony of effort and operation each with the other and all with the internal wire system that, in effect, there should be "one control" of all, and the cooperation and coordination of all connected or related activities, including research, investigation, and experimentation.

Only in this way can the greatest results in service, in public benefit, in economy, or in cheapness be obtained.

Even in the remote past, telegraphically speaking, when the cable was relatively primitive, the necessity of a connecting land and cable system was demonstrated in an unmistakable way.

The original Commercial, or Mackay-Bennett, cables were laid by an independent cable company without any, or, at least, with very litte, land connection. At that time no common interest existed between cables and land systems except physical interchange of business. The necessity of building up a land system in connection with the cable was the genesis of the Postal Telegraph-Cable System.

In addition, the utilitarian reasons which attach to one system—nation wide, comprehensive—the utilization of one set of wires for both telegraphic and telephonic purposes, which has become common practice, establishes a strong economic reason. To illustrate, the telephone circuit primarily calls for two wires. There must be an outgoing and an incoming channel or circuit for the electrical speaking current. These two wires under the present developed state of the art can be so equipped, composited, or arranged as to provide additional circuits or channels not only for telephonic transmission but for telegraphic transmission. A very new development, the result of several years of research and investigation, has made it possible to build up on each of the original pairs of wires at least three or four superimposed telephonic channels or circuits in addition to the "phantom" circuits. While there still remains much to be worked out, four of these imposed telephonic speaking circuits have very recently been put in simultaneous commercial use between Washington and Pittsburgh on one pair of wires.

When in addition to the primary telephonic speaking circuits over one pair of wires it is also possible to superimpose a number of secondary telephonic circuits upon the same pair of wires, some realization of the utilitarian as well as economic value of one system can be had, and also the great advance that has been made in the relatively short time since one pair of wires was exclusively needed for a telephonic circuit; conversation was only possible over a limited distance and the wires could not be used simultaneously for any other purpose.

The great economic advantage is not alone in the increased number of telephonic and telegraphic circuits or channels that can be superimposed on one pair of wires, but there follows a great reduction in the investment for plant, due to the large decrease in the size of and the amount of copper used in the wires, the great increase in capacity of pole and cable conduit due to this decrease and also in the possible use of aerial cables for concentrated traffic because of the continuous increased distance of transmission through cables.

The Annual Report of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for 1916 contains an account of "aero" telephonic transmission and of the combined "aero" and "wire" transmission. Mare Island Navy Yard talked direct with a battleship off Hatteras by combined wire and aero. Among the developments of the near future will be connection by aero and wire between ships at sea and the telephonic exchange system on land as readily as it is now possible to telephone from ships at sea to telephone exchange stations.

This development of aero transmission was the essential feature of the aero telephonic communication between acroplanes in action and between aeroplanes in action and the ground, which played such an important part of the war.

The utilitarian advantages of such a unified system can be appreciated by all, and closely second to the utilitarian advantage is the economic advantage.

In any utility the permanent plant and equipment are by far the largest items of capital investment; the maintenance of plant and the proper provision for depreciation and obsolescence and taxes are second only to the cost of wages.

If the uses of combined plant can be multiplied, extended, and utilized, it not only means reduction in investment relative to the increased utilization; it means one charge for taxes, maintenance, depreciation, and obsolescence, all of which will be reflected in the cost of operation, for, broadly speaking, upon the cost of operation charges for service are based.

To establish such a combined system would be the greatest piece of constructive work of the age.

There never has been a time when the foreshadowed development in the entire field of electrical intercommunication or electrical transmission of intelligence is greater or more promising than at present. All that has been stated has been the result of consistent coordinated research, investigation, and experimentation which have been and are being carried on by the organized staffs or departments of research and investigation of the Bell system. While this has necessitated large and continued expenditures, it is estimated that on the basis of present development at least $50,000,000 a year has been saved in construction and operating expense.

While much has been done and much more will be done by individuals working along more or less the same general lines of investigation, such work has been contributory. Without exception, improvements in operating apparatus or operating methods are the coordinated results of many individuals working upon many ideas in connection with experimentation and practical application to obtain certain results. The progress is continuous, step by step. The marked accomplishments, apparently novel, are but the milestones of progress. No new idea is complete in itself, and to be made effective it must be combined with other ideas and must be tried out upon a system substantially of the character and extent of the system to which it is to be applied. All laboratory and experimental work in all the different lines must be coordinated and carried on in connection with the practical operation and the larger and more embracing the system over which the novelties are to be demonstrated or from which suggestions will come, the greater will be the advance.

These experiments can not be confined to either telephonic transmission, telegraphic transmission, cable transmission, or aero transmission. The art of electrical transmission has reached a point in development where it is impossible to differentiate in research and experimentation as between the separate methods of transmission. Investigation, research, and experimentation are at best expensive and seemingly very wasteful, but if the work is coordinated and correlated and the cost spread over a large combination, the cost is relatively small.

The development of the past has most markedly reflected itself in the cost of and in the average charges for service, which until the "war period" have been continuously decreased, notwithstanding the increased scope and breadth of service and notwithstanding the gradual increase in wages, cost of improved working and increased beneficial conditions, and in the costs of material, which have increased enormously.

Fully 80 per cent of the telephone users get their service at much less than average rates, most of them much less, as the average rate is largely increased by the very large users who find advantage and profit and should be charged according to use.

It is well-known law that, as accomplishment broadens, the rate increase of accomplishment decreases. Soon after the beginning of the "war period," the rate of decrease in cost, from improvements in methods and plant, was overtaken by the rate of increase in wages and cost of material. No corresponding increase in charges has been made for service such as has been made for all other utilities, services, and commodities. This in itself virtually constitutes a relative reduction of at least one-half in the cost of wire service.

As to our international intercommunication and transportation, I beg leave to quote from Appendix A of my letter of October 22:

"In the building up of commerce progress is directly relative to the available and dependable facilities of interchange and intercommunication.

"The international 'transportation' of the United States is substantially all by merchant marine. For this there will be abundant facilities which can be so distributed as to meet the varying demands of trade and commerce.

"Immediate intercommunication, national or international, is all electrical. Except that with adjacent countries, the international communication of the United States is all by submarine cable. These facilities take time and enterprise to establish. The construction and location are permanent and can not be substantially varied from their original location except by reconstruction, which requires time and capital. Where abundant facilities exist, however, if brought under one control, they can oftentimes be readily and quickly rearranged and connected to suit changing conditions.

"The world's system of international electric communication, largely cable, is comprehensive, abundant, and efficient. It has been built up primarily on the basis of connecting the world with the great centers, focusing these facilities, as it were, on the world's centers of finance, commerce, and industry. National prestige, local interests, competitive enterprises have influenced location, extension, and combination, so that those facilities are not in all cases arranged to be productive of the maximum possibilities of either broad efficiency or the greatest economy; but aggressive competition and strife for business have stimulated operating efficiency.

"The United States is connected with this world system only as a subordinate part, as a field to be reached and exploited, and not as a world center. This must be changed, and the United States, if full advantage is to be taken of its position and the opportunities now existing, must be put into its relative world position, put into the focus of a world system of electrical intercommunication as one of the most, if not the most, important center of commerce, industry, and finance."

To this end I have recommended in the memorandum referred to extensions of existing systems which, if carried out, will give immediately a much wider expression to the overseas trade of the United States, and ultimately make the United States one of the world centers of international commerce.

Mr. CLARENCE H. MACKAY, DECEMBER 4, 1918.
President Commercial Cable Co.,
253 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR MR. MACKAY: The interests of the public service during the present emergency necessitate the unification in operation to the fullest extent possible the cable systems leading from this country to Europe, so that the full capacity of all the cables may be made available to the public and the press. It is manifest that this can only be accomplished through the operation of the two systems under one management. I have made a survey of the situation and am satisfied that the object sought can best be accomplished by placing the cables with the operating head of the Commercial Cable Co. I therefore direct, so far as I am authorized by the joint resolution of Congress under which the cable systems are now controlled by the Government of the United States, that Mr. George G. Ward, vice president of the Commercial Cable Co., and who I understand now has direct charge of your cable system, assume the management and operation of both the Commercial Cable system and the cable system operated by the Western Union Telegraph Co. I trust that I will have the hearty cooperation of the officials of both cable systems in carrying out these directions.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Ward; also to Mr. Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Very sincerely,

(Signed) A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

DECEMBER 4, 1918.

Mr. GEORGE G. WARD,
Vice President Commercial Cable Company,

DEAR MR. WARD: I am inclosing a copy of a communication I have this day sent to Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, president of your company, containing instructions with respect to the unification in operation of the cables leading to Europe.

I trust I will have your hearty cooperation and assistance in making these instructions effective.

Very sincerely, (Signed) A. S. BURLESON,

THE COMMERCIAL CABLE CO.,
New York, December 4, 1918.

HON. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter to me of to-day, which has been given to the newspapers, I beg to say that the most expert cable advice that I have been able to get convinces me that better work can be done by a continuance of the present separate management of the two cable companies than by an attempt to amalgamate two plants which have been operated separately and successfully for so many years. As you doubtless are aware, the Commercial Cable Co. to-day has filed a bill in equity in the United States court in this city to prevent just such an amalgamation, and I am assured that the best interests of the public will be advanced instead of retarded if no such amalgamation takes place.

I am, sir,

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) CLARENCE H. MACKAY,
President.

Mr. NEWCOMB CARLTON,
President Western Union Telegraph Co.,
195 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. CARLTON: I am inclosing a copy of a communication I have this day written to Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Commercial Cable Co., containing instructions with respect to the unification in operation of the cable systems leading from this country to Europe.

I am sure I may count upon your cooperation and assistance in making such unification effective and successful.

Very sincerely, (Signed) A. S. BURLESON,

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.,
New York, December 6, 1918.

HON. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURLESON: I have your letter of December 4 and beg to assure you of our hearty cooperation in your plan for the unification of the operation of the American cable system.

In my judgment, joint operation will result in an increase in the total daily capacity of the cables comprising the two systems, which is so much needed at this time, as well as in important economies in operation, and I trust that no time will be lost in beginning this unification.

Faithfully, yours,

(Signed) NEWCOMB CARLTON,
President.

Mr. CLARENCE H. MACKAY,
President the Commercial Cable Co.,
253 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: This acknowledges the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant. Please advise me whether Mr. George G. Ward has taken charge of the joint operation of the trans-Atlantic cables in accordance with the directions contained in my letter to him under date of December 4, a copy of which has been furnished you. I am not interested in any suit you may have filed or contemplate filing, as I do not regard such action as of any importance.

Respectfully, yours,

(Signed) A. S. BURLESON.
Postmaster General.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 11, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee this morning for the coming and the going of the seasons, for the sunshine and for the rain, for the pleasant paths and for those that are steep and difficult. We only pray Thee, O God, to give us strength and the wisdom and the courage to go on, trusting in Thee for needed strength day by day, and for light upon the pathway as we may onward go. Bless us this day, and from us may there go some good thing to other lives, and may our country and its cause to-day stand before Thee justified and right, and may we, the servants of Thine and of the people, be blessed in our doing. We ask for Thy great name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-day, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of Government employees whose services no longer are required, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, H. R. 13261. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the reason for that? Why should we not go into committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. I merely thought it might expedite the matter. I have no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. I think we would better go into committee. I do not know that there will be any debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we go into the committee, the gentleman realizes that in general debate it might take considerable time, and therefore postpone the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no wish to delay the matter at all. I do not know what the gentleman may say. I am on the committee, and I do not know whether I shall want to discuss it or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no desire to curtail debate. I expect to make a statement to the House as to the general purport of the measure, and if anyone desires to discuss the bill in reason I shall not object.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman would take an hour——

Mr. MANN. There is no hour. It would be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. It would be considered under the five-minute rule, I presume, the same as if we were in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I believe it has been decided that there is no general debate when the House is acting as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GILLETT. I shall make no objection.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen might want a little more time than five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I assume that the House would grant a reasonable extension of my time and I would to anyone else.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the heads of the several executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia are authorized to furnish to such civilian employees, receiving compensation at the rate of $2,500 per annum or less, of the services under their respective jurisdiction as have come to the District of Columbia since April 6, 1917, whose services are no longer required and whose employment has been or may be terminated by the Government without delinquency or misconduct on their part during the period from November 11, 1918, to March 31, 1919, inclusive, their actual railroad transportation, including sleeping-car fare, from the District of Columbia to the place from which they accepted employment, or to such other place not a greater distance as the employee may elect.

SEC. 2. That such transportation must be applied for within 10 days after the termination of service and shall be used within five days after issuance unless an extension of time on account of illness be granted by the proper authority: Provided, That as to the employees whose services have been terminated during the period between November 11, 1918, and the date of the passage of this act, inclusive, the foregoing limitation of 10 days shall operate from the date of the passage of this act. Any person who shall sell, exchange, or transfer such transportation for the use of another shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100.

SEC. 3. That the expenses authorized by this act shall be paid from the following appropriations for the fiscal year 1919, which hereby are made available therefor:

For the War Department, from "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

For the Navy Department, from "Pay, miscellaneous."

For all other executive departments and independent establishments, from the appropriations for the support of the services in which such persons are employed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "compensation," insert the words "exclusive of the additional $120."

"SEC. 4. That any employee who would be entitled to transportation, including sleeping-car fare, under this act and who has left the District of Columbia prior to the passage of this act, but not before December 10, 1918, upon application and presentation of proper proof shall have refunded the cost of actual railroad transportation, including sleeping-car fare, from the District of Columbia to the place from which employment was accepted or to such other place not a greater distance to which the employee may have gone: Provided, That payment to any employee for leave of absence not earned in proportion to the term of employment shall be deducted from the refund authorized in this section.

"SEC. 5. That the provisions made in this act for the transportation of employees shall not be supplemented in any manner by the various services in which they are employed."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the heads of the several executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia are authorized to furnish to such civilian employees receiving compensation at the rate of $2,500 per annum or less, of the services under their respective jurisdiction as have come to the District of Columbia since April 6, 1917, whose services are no longer required and whose employment has been or may be terminated by the Government without delinquency or misconduct on their part during the period from November 11, 1918, to March 31, 1919, inclusive, their actual railroad transportation, including sleeping-car fare, from the District of Columbia to the place from which they accepted employment, or to such other place not a greater distance as the employee may elect.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House is somewhat familiar with the situation that has existed and still exists in the District of Columbia in respect to clerks brought here as a result of the country's entrance into the war. There were slightly more than 30,000 clerks in the District of Columbia in the various departments at the time of the outbreak of the war. It has been roughly estimated that something over 60,000 clerks have been added to that number. It is manifest that there ought to be a very rapid reduction in the number of clerks that are employed here. That is desirable in the interest of economy, it is desirable in the interest of efficiency of administration of governmental affairs, and it is particularly desirable from the standpoint of the city and the residents of the city. A very large proportion of these additional clerks are young women, who came here as a result of the intensive campaign for additional help by the various departments, due to war emergency. Many of the girls have not made that provision for their future which should have been made by them, as well as by others, and the very sudden termination of the war, with the consequent early dismissal of these clerks, finds many of them in a position without the means to provide for their transportation to their homes or elsewhere, where they may seek and obtain employment. I take it that the House is thoroughly of the opinion that there ought to be as rapid a reduction of the clerical force as is possible. If that is to take place there will inevitably result hardships in a great many cases where the clerks have not made provision for their transportation to their homes, and if no provision is made for them one of two things will happen. Either there will be such pressure to retain them upon the pay rolls as will result in a very great delay in the reduction of the clerical force here, or they will be left in this city subject to the charity of others to get home, with the result that a great many of them never will return to their homes.

I can imagine no situation worse for the community and no situation worse for those employees than for them to be dismissed from the Government service and remain here in Washington or in near-by cities without active employment. The result of such a situation would be bad from every standpoint—economic, moral, and otherwise. Any number of welfare workers in the various departments and any number of the personnel of the offices in the various departments have come to me from time to time since the assembling of Congress, stating the acute situation that existed in regard to a number of these clerks and urging that Congress should take some action to relieve the matter. As a result of that I introduced into the House, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the bill which is now pending. In the committee the bill was subjected to careful consideration, with the result of various amendments which, I think, served to perfect it in several degrees, and the first amendment, which is now pending and which is important, seeks to reduce the salary from $2,500 to $1,400 of the clerks who are entitled to relief under the act.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman's resolution, it includes the dollar-a-year men.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I had not thought of that. I suppose technically it does; but I question very much whether such employees would desire or accept such compensation, and I have no objection to excluding them.

Mr. GARNER. I am not so credulous as the gentleman from Kentucky, and I would like for this resolution to be very specific on that point. In that connection, may I ask if the gentleman knows the number of dollar-a-year men who have been employed by the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but I think they are very much less in number than the common impression is.

Mr. GARNER. If I understood the gentleman, there are some ninety-odd thousand employees who have been brought here under civil service——

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say 60,000.

Mr. GARNER. Well, 90,000 now under civil service, including the 32,000 here at the time the war broke out. Now, that 90,000 does not include the dollar-a-year men or the military people; that is, the people in uniform?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not include the people in uniform, and I presume it does not include the dollar-a-year men.

Mr. GARNER. Did the gentleman say it does include the people in uniform?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not.

Mr. GARNER. That is my understanding. I would like very much to hear why these dollar-a-year men should be included in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to continue for 10 minutes further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Was the committee able to ascertain the number of people who would be relieved from service between now and the 31st of March?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not with any degree of definiteness. I have asked the departments—and I hoped to have had that information—to prepare me a statement as to the number that they expected to dispense with, but I should hope that of the sixty-odd thousand who have been brought here by the war over 50 per cent of them might be dismissed from the service by that time. There are a number of bureaus that of necessity will have to continue for a while at their present strength, but I should think that at least 30,000 or more employees might leave the service, and one of the purposes, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, in offering this resolution was the desirability of encouraging the separation from the service of unnecessary employees. It was felt that if you fixed the time in which the employees would receive their traveling expenses home, that a great many of them would voluntarily leave the service and that it would serve to expedite the lessening of the rolls of the Government service.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to the gentleman that some of the bureaus, one of them I know of, have issued a circular saying to the employees that if they resigned and went home that the department would give them the pay, and then pay them for the time coming to them on annual leave, and then they would be paid for an addition of 15 days, not to exceed 30 days' time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The War Department issued such an order and I think it terminates at a near date. The committee considered that matter and did not feel there ought to be this double gratuity, and so in the committee amendment, which is offered as section 4, the gentleman will find the proviso in these terms:

Provided, That payment to any employee for leave of absence not earned in proportion to the term of employment shall be deducted from the refund authorized in this section.

Mr. FOSTER. So that under this they would only get the pay coming to them at the time?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. Is the gentleman willing to enumerate the bureaus which he states will have to keep in existence for a considerable period?

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not do that. For instance, the War-Risk Bureau is going to be required to stay at pretty much its present strength for a time, and I hope it may develop an efficiency that will bring it more current with its work, which in some particulars is greatly behind. Then there will be certain accounting bureaus of the War Department that will have considerably heavier work almost than they have had heretofore, because of the adjustments that have grown out of the war.

There will be a number of bureaus in the War Department, and some in the Navy Department, that will have to stay at approximately their present strength. I will say to the gentleman that personally I am looking at the other side of the picture whenever the matter comes before the Committee on Appropriations. I think that it is incumbent upon the department in every instance to show cause why they should not reduce, and the presumption ought not to be indulged that they need to stay except where the facts demonstrate it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In section 1 you provide for their actual railroad transportation. Does not the gentleman intend to give these employees actual tickets or equivalent of tickets?

Mr. SHERLEY. This bill does not contemplate the giving of the cash. I think they ought to give the tickets or an order for them. It was attempted so to write the bill that the transportation would not be salable or transferable. My objection to a bonus, which many urged, was that it would not help the employees very much, but simply meant that it was that much more money that the improvident would spend in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman believe, in view of giving them transportation or its equivalent, that it would be a sort of enforced deportation, and would not that be humiliating?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. As to enforced deportation—if the gentleman insists on that word; I use it without any sense of reflection on anybody—I think a Government employee who has come here to perform a particular task, when that task has passed away ought to go back to where he came from in the interest of the Government, in the interest of those who have to stay in the District of Columbia, and particularly in the interest of the employee himself or herself. And I can imagine no worse condition that could happen to most of the young women employees who have come here than to remain here after their employment has ceased.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to ask one question. You give transportation to the place from which they accepted employment. Is that their home at the time of their accepting employment, if they happen to be here, or would there be no transportation at all if they came here first and accepted employment after they came?

Mr. SHERLEY. I had not thought of just the exception of which the gentleman speaks. I think that practically all of these people came here as the result of employment that was offered them while they were at their homes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. A great many people came here without any offer, and just received employment after they got here.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the number. I think it ought to be construed in a fair sense.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I only say that I think it ought to be more definite in the bill. While we are considering this very amendment, I think we ought to know what we are doing.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For the reason that the gentleman gives as to the advisability of practically forcing the deportation of these Government employees whose services are no longer needed, does not the gentleman think the fine of $100 is very light for what I would regard as a very serious offense in disposing of the transportation?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is light. But I become merciful as I get older. I have no objection to an increase in the penalty. I think that provision is not the effective way. The effective way is to give them the actual transportation and to make it not transferable.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Even so, some persons who wanted to remain here might be tempted, if their home was pretty far away, to sell their transportation for quite a considerable sum.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not object to an amendment to raise it from $100 to a larger sum.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understand, or I have heard at least, that the departments, or some of them, now offer to the employees not only any leave which may be accumulated and their pay but also two weeks' pay if they resign now. Is that the case in a number of instances?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the War Department has issued such an order. I do not know of any other department having issued it.

Mr. MANN. Now, is the amendment known as section 5 intended to prevent such action?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. The idea that prevailed in the committee was——

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at is another matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. The idea of the committee was that if Congress voted this compensation there ought not to be various other inducements held out or granted by the departments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I both agree, and I hope others agree with us, that it is desirable, in order to reduce the force as rapidly as possible, to offer some inducements to clerks to resign. But what is going to be the effect of this provision? A very large proportion of temporary clerks come from near-by places. I suppose there have been a great many more applications for temporary places in the Government service in Washington from points within a radius of 100 to 200 miles than there have been in a radius of 1,000 miles. Now, those clerks will not get very much from receiving railroad transportation to their homes. That is infinitesimal, almost. Does the gentleman think that any of them would be inclined to resign for the purpose of getting railroad transportation, which amounts to nothing as against the inducement that is now offered to them of two weeks' pay?

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps not. But I hope the departments will understand that they are not to limit the reduction from their force to those who voluntarily resign.

Mr. MANN. That may be; but the gentleman knows that the departments will naturally first accept resignations.

Mr. SHERLEY. My own idea is that if the Committee on Appropriations can get the information—and it is exceedingly difficult to do so—that, along with what else we are getting, we should cut out some of the moneys that are available for clerks and to force reductions.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but they will naturally take the resignations first. Now, if you offer an inducement in this bill in this form to people who reside at a considerable distance from Washington to quit the Government service you offer no inducement whatever to anyone living in the District of Columbia to quit the Government service and a very slight inducement, compared with what has already been offered, to the people who live in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, or West Virginia, or a good many other points near by. I wonder what the effect would be?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, what the gentleman has stated raises an interesting phase of the matter. The Committee on Appropriations was reluctant to make too great a drain upon the Treasury, and it did not seem altogether fair that the people should be paid two weeks' additional compensation for work that they were not doing and, in addition to that, get transportation home. In point of fact, the clerks have not near as much of an equity as their advocates represent. I am dealing with the situation, not out of an agreement with the arguments of many who urge the action, as I am from the necessity of getting rid of the clerks. Most of the clerks who came here could, under proper foresight, have made provision for themselves. In some instances they could not.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think there is any way of amending the language of this bill so as to require them to dismiss the clerks whose services are not needed?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know if the gentleman does not think we ought to employ language that will require the departments to dismiss them, not to wait until they resign?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know of any language that you could use that would produce that result and leave it in the judgment of the department. You could put in here a provision to the effect that a certain given number—if you had the information—should be dismissed in each department; but I take it that we have not that information. Now, if you say they shall dismiss all those who are not required, that simply passes the matter back to where it was before, and the department is the determining factor as to who is required. I know of nothing you can do short of an enumeration of the clerks who are to be dismissed or the taking away of the money to pay them, except to offer an inducement of dismissal, and it is hoped a realization of the obligation to the country and the Treasury will prompt them to dispense with all unnecessary employees.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, we are only offering an inducement here, and I assume we are depending on the good faith of the bureaus and the departments to the extent that we mean that they shall dismiss them. Of course, I do not pretend to know what particular language should be employed, but what I would like to see, if it were possible to do it, would be some language inserted that would serve notice on the department heads that they shall dismiss all nonessential department employees just as fast as they can be dismissed.

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is that the various Cabinet heads have sent from the departments statements in substance such as the gentleman speaks of, and that the War Department contemplates that it will have by the 1st of July reduced its force 90 per cent. Personally I do not think that is possible, but their estimates for next year were predicated upon a 90 per cent reduction.

Now, a little while ago some one asked me what departments would probably have to continue the services of these extra clerks. The Adjutant General's Department will probably need all the clerks it has and an increase. It has had transferred to it all of the rolls in connection with the draft, and it is highly important, if we are to protect the Government against wrongful claims, that there should be an accurate statistical record of all the men who have gone into the service and who have left the service, so that I take it that there will be a legitimate need for a large number of clerks in that department.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the reorganization will call for a lot of additional work there.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LOBECK. The point I was thinking about was brought up by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who referred to the people who came here to fill positions in the Government service. Most of them came through the Civil Service Commission, and they had to take their examination from the States where they lived. That is where they belong.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true of the majority of cases, but of course it is impossible to write a law here that will work perfectly in every instance. You have got to deal with broad averages.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HILLIARD. Is it not true that a considerable number of persons have been employed elsewhere than in the District of Columbia under like circumstances and that similar provision should be made for them?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are such cases, perhaps, but I do not think they are acute, and I do not think we should undertake to legislate at this time to cover them.

Mr. HILLIARD. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair under the circumstances to make like provision for them?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think you can get theoretical and actual fairness in all cases. War in its nature is the very essence of unfairness and inequality, and the contributions that each citizen makes to that war range from the supreme sacrifice of life to a very nominal sacrifice. There is no way to equalize conditions, and I think it would be a very grave mistake to open up this bill so as to deal with employees the country over.

Mr. HILLIARD. Notwithstanding what the gentleman says, I am sure he would be the last man to want to have it unfair, and if it can be made fair, without injustice to the Government, I think he would want to do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a factor that is often forgotten, and that is the taxpayers of the United States and the Treasury. I am trying to protect them. [Applause.]

Mr. HILLIARD. Why leave out deserving people when you take so many in?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because I have not sufficient information to warrant me in extending the rule.

Mr. HILLIARD. The gentleman will not claim that he has a monopoly of information?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. I am merely giving you my opinion. It is not binding on anybody.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Should not those three words, "other governmental establishments," relating to the service there, be stricken from the bill? It seems to me the language is a little awkward.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a little awkward, but if it were undertaken to use any other language it may be found that it is not generic enough. There are a great many establishments under the Government that are not departments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would it not take care of that section by striking out those words?

Mr. SHERLEY. It might.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So that it will read, "That the heads of the several executive departments" shall have authority under their respective jurisdictions to furnish the transportation. If you strike out those three words, it seems to me it would relieve it of any ambiguity.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to say that that might not be a proper amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just call attention to it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman know whether at this time the various departments are employing any additional clerks or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as I know, they are not. Here and there an individual may be taken on in some department. I would not say that there is not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I saw a statement in one of the local papers to the effect that all of the departments were employing new help at this time and were discharging some, and the statement gave a sort of balancing of the account, showing that they were being discharged faster than they were being employed.

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume that there are some employments. There have been some vacancies in special lines of work that have not been filled because eligible people on the rolls were not available. I take it that some have been employed. It is quite possible that the Internal-Revenue Department is enlarging its force in some particulars as a result of the added work that is placed on it in connection with the revenue. Frankly, I have not been able to check up the departments so as to know.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me in that connection, I understand there was an increase of a little over 1,000 employees in Washington during the month of November, as shown by the civil-service statement a few days ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. It may be that a large part of that came prior to the signing of the armistice.

Mr. WINGO. There were a little over 5,000 additions and a little over 4,000 separations from the service.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am quite sure that at this particular date there are quite a number of thousand less employees in Washington than there were at the date of the signing of the armistice.

Mr. WINGO. I think that is true. This statement also went to show that there had been a smaller increase in November than in any preceding month, and it was expected that the report for December would show a decrease instead of an increase.

Mr. WHEELER. These various employees came here anticipating that they would return home after the war closed. In some departments they are still needed. In case they resign while they are still needed, will they be entitled to any transportation under this act?

Mr. SHERLEY. I take it that if they are separated from the service without fault on their part they will be entitled to this relief.

Mr. WHEELER. Suppose they separate themselves from the service?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think they would be entitled to the relief. I am not fearful of losing the services of employees indispensable to the Government who will be affected by this act.

Mr. EAGLE. Were the thirty thousand and odd employees who were in the departments at the outbreak of the war all under the civil service?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think practically all of them were.

Mr. EAGLE. And the 60,000 additional who have come here, are they under the civil service?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have come in under the kind of civil service that we have had since the war started.

Mr. EAGLE. I am asking that for the purpose of trying to develop a bit of information. Is there anything in the fact that they are under the civil service to prevent their discharge when their services are no longer needed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I know of no civil-service law that gives indefinite tenure to anybody.

Mr. EAGLE. That is the thing I am trying to develop. Now, I gather from the observation of the chairman a moment ago that the only way by which the Treasury may in the future be relieved of the burden of paying these superfluous clerks, unless they choose to resign or unless the heads of the departments choose to cause them to resign, is that we may withhold appropriations to pay them, so that they will be compelled to leave the service.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is always the most pronounced remedy.

Mr. McFADDEN. Section 2 provides that such transportation must be applied for within 10 days, and so forth. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not a special ticket will be issued to these people when they apply, or will the heads of the departments buy the regular railroad transportation?

Mr. SHERLEY. That detail was not worked out. The idea was that they would be actually furnished the transportation—that application would be made for transportation to a given place, and then that transportation would be furnished.

Mr. McFADDEN. I realize that there is a penalty for transferring the transportation to anyone else, but at the same time I want to make this suggestion to the gentleman: It seems to me that if a special ticket is printed and each applicant is compelled to sign an affidavit, and then perhaps to sign again on the train when the conductor takes up the ticket, it will avoid any misuse of the ticket or any transfer.

Mr. SHERLEY. It did not seem quite practicable in an act of this kind to set out in detail what is purely a regulatory matter. I take it that the departments will in good faith issue the transportation in such a way as to prevent its being wrongfully used. That was the idea.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for five minutes, and then I will not further delay the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to ask the gentleman if in his judgment this could be construed so as to allow its benefits to those who may come into the service between now and March 31 next? If it could, it might very easily be abused by the heads of departments or their subordinates, if they were disposed to permit it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to say that the case the gentleman supposes might not be possible. Of course that was not the intention of this act.

Mr. DENISON. The intention was to confine it to those who are now in the service?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The act does not so state, and I think when we reach the point for amendment we should limit it to those who are now in the service.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to say that is not wise. It is pretty difficult to draw a provision of this kind and cover every idea that may be presented.

Mr. DENISON. I understand; but I thought it worth while to call the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. GARD. Has the gentleman any information as to how much money is to be applied for this purpose and how it is to be apportioned to those who come from different States?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was no attempt to allot moneys according to geography. The purpose of the bill is to deal concretely with actual cases. If a person lives in Mississippi, California, Utah, New York, or Massachusetts, he comes within the rule and would get transportation home. The War Department estimated that in their department it would cost as much as $450,000, but that related to all employees. It has been limited to employees drawing $1,400 a year or less. I take it that would result in very great reduction in the expense placed on the Government.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman know to what extent the Government has paid for transportation of clerks to Washington?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not.

Mr. RUBEY. I will say that in September last, I think it was, when I came to Washington, there were about a dozen on the train who had transportation paid from St. Louis to Washington, including sleeping-car fare and $5 allowance for meals, and even went so far as to allow them for the transportation of baggage in St. Louis and from the station in Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not sure that in all instances where transportation was furnished it was a bonus. I think it was advanced.

Mr. RUBEY. This was paid outright.

Mr. SHERLEY. It may have been paid outright, and yet with the understanding that it should be repaid out of the salary of the employee. But I am not advised about that.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. LOBECK. There was a captain came from the Quartermaster's Department to Omaha and made certain offers for stenographers, and said that they would pay the transportation from there to Washington if they could get expert people. Whether any was paid or not I do not know.

Mr. SHERLEY. There may have been some justifiable expenditures in certain instances; I am not prepared to say.

Now, gentlemen, I want to state this in connection with the bill and its consideration: It is not presented as a perfect piece of legislation. The committee is not prepared to resist any proper amendment, but I hope gentlemen will realize that no matter what form it takes it will not meet with every conceivable case that men may be able to state. You can not write an act that will not be faulty in some respects, where in a matter of this kind personal equation enters into it. I believe that it should receive the support of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to oppose a measure supported by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, because I know that upon all matters that have to do with taking money out of the Treasury of the United States he reports them only after the most careful consideration.

I appreciate the fact that in a spirit of exaltation over the cessation of hostilities and the approach of the Christmas season the idea should be encouraged that the Government and the Treasury of the United States is one great generous Santa Claus. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] spoke of inducing the employees of the Government to quit the service, and that this was a scheme to further that plan. These employees were brought here after frantic efforts to get them to fill these positions. They were paid salaries, for the most part, larger than they would receive in private employment. I have seen no great disposition on the part of these employees to get out of the Government service. I have had numerous clerks come to me and seek my help to get them transferred into permanent positions rather than to assist in securing their dismissal.

But I want to direct the attention of the House to the fact that in the Navy Department men who have enlisted and who have been discharged, men who enlisted for a period of years and whose discharges have been approved, are put ashore, and they do not get a cent of transportation—men who have been serving on the battleships and cruisers, and they are not even given the benefit of the 1 cent a mile transportation. I had a young man call on me the other day, discharged from a battleship—the Mississippi, I think it was—and he was told that he could not get the benefit of the 1 cent a mile nor could he get any transportation.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think that a proper condition?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know; but because that exists I do not think we ought to be more generous to these civil employees. These people who have been employed, a good many, will be entitled to vacation. The result will be that they will get 10 days or two weeks with pay. They will make application for transportation. They will stay in Washington for the vacation season, spend their money, and then go home. I submit that the more orderly way to handle this situation—and it may have been considered—was to have granted these people the leave to which they are entitled, pay them in advance, let them go home, and upon the expiration of the vacation at their homes their connection with the Government pay roll should cease.

I do not know how much this will cost, but it will be an immense sum. We will be in a position of establishing a principle that the Government employees in the civil-service branch who have come here and accepted positions in the National Capital shall upon their termination of services be entitled to transportation home. It will be cited as a precedent, and I submit that, despite the emergency, we ought not to enact this into law, and we ought not to be compelled to pay the thousands of workers their transportation home. Why not give them the benefit of the 1 cent a mile, and why not let them contribute in some part at least to the expense that will be incumbent upon them when they quit the Government service?

I am opposed to giving these employees, who have been well paid and a great many of them overpaid, a great many who have not given the equivalent in work and service, this gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States, particularly in view of the fact that some of the men who have been in the active military and naval service of the Government in time of war, who have been in places of danger, who have been risking their lives, are dumped ashore upon their discharge and told to take their dunnage and find the best way they can to pay their expenses home. In the case I cited I should say that I have taken it up with the department, but have been unable as yet to get any satisfactory explanation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the only explanation I have heard is that these men enlisted for a term of years, and that the transportation pay applied only to the Naval Reserves and to the men who enlisted for the period of the war. While I have my opinion of the valiant conduct and splendid courage of some of the men in the Naval Reserve Force, I submit that men who enlisted in the Navy after the declaration of war and who, as in some cases I know, although they enlisted for a term of years, were told there would be no difficulty in their procuring their discharge if the war terminated before the expiration of the term for which they enlisted—that those men, although enlisted in the regular service, ought not to receive any less generous treatment than these clerks and stenographers who have come here to the Capital. If we have men at the heads of these departments who are competent to run them, they ought to be willing, when the need for the services of these people has ceased, to discharge them.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman has spoken of a matter which I have had brought to my attention also, namely, the question of transportation for these men in the regular service who are discharged. I think it is outrageous that they do not get their transportation; but there is one thing still worse. The regulations of the Navy Department that I have seen—and I have taken up the matter with the Bureau of Navigation—provide that those men in the regular service who are released can not get an honorable discharge.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is another condition that attaches in some cases, I understand. Mr. Speaker, as I say, if we have men who are competent to act as the chiefs and the heads of these various departments and bureaus where the force has been so tremendously enlarged as a result of the war emergency, then when the need of their services ceases the heads of bureaus and departments ought to be courageous enough to inform the employees that their services are no longer required. Certainly the Government of the United States and its officials here in Washington ought not to be put in the position where they must have legislation in order to induce these clerks to quit the Government service and resign, and, as the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out, there are a great many of them who live near by—in the immediate vicinity—where the mere payment of the railroad transportation or offer to pay or provide them with a ticket home will be no inducement for them to resign or give up their work. I submit the proper way to do, in view of the salaries that have been paid, up to $1,400—and I notice it was originally $2,500 in the bill—would be either to give them the benefit of the 1 cent a mile which prevails for men in the service or else to give them 10 days' leave with pay and provide that upon the expiration of the 10 days if they were at home their services should cease. For that reason—although it is with some reluctance, as I said—I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill ought to be passed. I believe that every person who entered the Government service, either in the civil or the military or naval establishments, on account of the war ought to be returned home at the expense of the Government. I do not think it is an extravagant view, and I have never been unduly favorable to governmental extravagance. Here was an emergency such as probably we never have experienced before and that we Members will never experience again. We have poured out billions of money, and extravagance was unavoidable—I was about to say necessary. The emergency has now ceased. These people responded, many of them at considerable personal loss or effort, and I think even as to those who received higher compensation than they otherwise would have received, treating all alike, we can afford to give them an opportunity to go home.

It will not be so very expensive, in my judgment, if we look at it from the standpoint of expense. It will certainly be cheaper for the Government to pay the railroad fare of these clerks home than it will be to keep them in the service. My friend from Massachusetts, Mr. WALSH, and a most capable man he is, thinks that the heads of the bureaus ought to discharge the clerks, regardless of whether they desire to go or not. Much of that will be done, but everyone knows that for many years we have carried provisions in the law each year requiring the discharge of those who were known as superannuated, and if anyone has ever heard of one person being discharged because of superannuation, that knowledge he has not communicated to me. I never heard of one. It is a condition which exists.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to stop at that. I think we ought to pay the men who are in the Army now up to date. I have a telegram here from West Baden, Ind., which reads as follows:

Several hundred wounded men arrived at West Baden hospital. A large number are without any funds and state have had no pay for many months. Can not some plan be put in operation to give them money when they disembark?

It is a scandal to send wounded men clear from the point of disembarkation to southern Indiana, with money due them for months and not a cent paid to them. The War Department stated yesterday, as I understand, to my colleague, Mr. MCKENZIE, of the Military Committee, that if I would have telegraphed to them the names of the men they would endeavor to pay them. I can not do that. It is their business. A wounded man in a hospital can not be expected to run after the paymaster to get his pay. It is the duty of the military department of the Government to look after him.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I hope they will be brought to realize their duty in the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's telegram says that these men have not been paid for several months, or language to that effect. Are there any reasons why they have not been paid?

Mr. MANN. There is no reason except they have not got the money.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit, it is the general complaint among these soldiers that they can not get their money and do not get their money, and it is an outrage. The money has been appropriated, and there is no excuse for their not paying it. If some of these officers would take and follow these people up they would get their money. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I learned on the other side of some of the conditions of which the gentleman complains, and I undertook to bring about a reformation in the matter. There is nothing that Congress needed to do, because all the money that was needed for pay had been appropriated, and under the law any deficiency for pay is permissible. I suggested two things to the department, and I was in hopes that they had been somewhat carried out. I suggested to the Red Cross that as a matter of taking care of small needs of soldiers who had temporarily lost touch with their command and were moving around in France and frequently found themselves without anything, that the Red Cross be in a position to make them advances of small sums of money. I then suggested to the War Department that there ought to be an arrangement made by which there could be given to every enlisted man a coupon book for a certain amount of money, so that no matter where he was, no matter how he had gotten separated from the pay-department service, he might be able to cash these coupons to take care of immediate needs, and I was told by the finance division of the Quartermaster's Department that they were undertaking to put into effect a system that would deal with the situation. From what the gentleman suggests, evidently they have not succeeded in doing it, but I agree with him there is no possible excuse for any large number of such cases happening. Here and there, of course, they are bound to happen, but the system ought to be such as to make numerous cases impossible. As that division is coming before my committee this afternoon, if I am through on the floor I will again take up the matter with them and see if I can get some information.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana and Mr. MILLER of Minnesota rose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MANN. I yield to either gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I favored this resolution in the committee and I favor it here not because I think it does equally an exact justice or because there are not a great many other cases that ought to be covered. I recognize the unfairness of which my colleague from Massachusetts complains. I recognize that through the country there are a great many Government factories where the employees will suffer great hardships unless some provision is made for them; but this case was presented to us first, and I am inclined to think that the Government departments in Washington are more overcrowded and need diminution more than anywhere else and that the city of Washington needs most to be emptied. [Applause.] I believe it is more congested than any other section, so this resolution simply affects that which seems to us the most pressing emergency, to empty Washington and diminish these departments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the gentleman able to say whether it is true that any department is retaining in its service men or women any longer than needed merely because Congress has not appropriated money to take them home?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know whether that is so or not, but as the gentleman from Illinois suggested, the heads of departments are very much influenced in discharging men by the hardships which they will endure. As to the proposition which my friend makes that instead of doing this we should give them leave with pay, why the danger of that is that instead of going home they will stay right here in Washington and spend their money and at the end of the 10 days will be just as badly off as they are now and Washington will not be relieved of their presence. What we want to do is to get them out of the city of Washington and get them out of the departments. Now, I think it is the duty of the heads of departments not to wait until they resign, but immediately to begin dismissing them, and I hope they are doing it and this will accelerate that. I do not believe the heads of the departments appreciate the necessity for instantly reducing their force. We have had some of them before our committee, and it did not seem to me they appreciated what Congress is endeavoring to impress upon them, that they ought at once to begin to get down to the peace basis. [Applause.] The War Department told us that they were still manufacturing powder in their war emergency factories. It seems to me that is an outrageous waste. It seems to me it would be economy for the Government to stop work, even if you had to pay the laborers to do nothing. It is better to pay the laborers to do nothing than to use up raw material in producing something that we do not want and of which we have too much already. This morning a young officer told me that he has been in Washington here for weeks with not a single thing to do, trying to get out the service, but they would not let him out for some reason, and so he was kept here, could not go home where he would like again to return to business, but that he was kept here week after week doing nothing. The department ought not to stand for that. Another young officer in one of the business bureaus told me the other day that he was here in Washington and he wanted to get out of the service and go back to civil life, but that he had given a receipt for a small amount of property—I will not say how small, because I do not want to identify him—he had given a receipt for a small amount, and the property had disappeared, and his accounts were being corrected, and over a week has passed by, and he is liable to be kept here, as far as he could see, indefinitely until they could fix up that account.

He would be glad to pay it out of his own pocket, and he told them so, and go home, although he was not responsible personally for the loss. But the Government is paying him $200 a month just to try to straighten out this account for a few dollars. Now, of course, some of that is inevitable, but I do not believe the departments are awake to the necessity of getting down to a peace basis. And I hope this bill will impress upon them that Congress wants to get to a peace basis, and that we are adopting this so that they shall shut off their force of clerks and send them out of the city of Washington. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,400."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROBBINS: Page 2, line 7, after the word "employment" insert the words "or their legal residence."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, on the 27th of March this House passed a bill amending the civil-service law permitting those who desired to enter the Government service to take their examination at any other point than their place of residence, and many of those who had come to Washington temporarily were permitted to take such examinations in the city of Washington. Under that bill applicants for Government employment were no longer required to return to their places of residence in order to take the civil-service examination. In order that you may understand just exactly the purpose of this amendment that I offer, I will say that the act of the 27th of March, 1918, has this provision:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to abridge the existing law of apportionment or change the requirements of existing law as to legal residence and domicile of such applicants.

Now, under this bill, if a clerk came here and took temporary service, as a great many of them did, and afterwards took the civil-service examination in Washington and were credited to their home district, say Pittsburgh, Pa., under this bill, when they are discharged from the Government service and they would accept service here in Washington under their new status as a civil-service employee, the place where they accept employment would be Washington. If this bill is to be equitable and give those who shall leave the service transportation home, they would not be entitled to any transportation because they accepted service in Washington. The purpose of my amendment is simply to harmonize this act in accordance with the act of the 27th of March, 1918, and permit the clerks under those circumstances to get transportation back to the place of legal residence, and if they accept service somewhere else to receive transportation to such other place, not to exceed the cost of transportation back to their legal residence. Because, if this bill has any merit at all, it is to provide transportation for these employees home that are here in Washington now at the expiration of their time of service, which is brought upon them by the cessation of hostilities and by the action of the Government, and not of their own choice, perhaps. Therefore, I think they ought to be made whole as to the cost of transportation back to the place of their legal residence.

Mr. DENISON. If your amendment is adopted, who will say to which place the transportation shall go?

Mr. ROBBINS. The applicant can.

Mr. DENISON. The amendment does not say so.

Mr. ROBBINS. This is covered in the next proviso, which provides, "or to such other place not at a greater distance as the employee may elect." I think that is just and equitable. I have from my own district young ladies who took night-school training and have become expert bookkeepers and expert stenographers. Now, those girls will not go back to Westmoreland County, Pa., because they can get higher wages in the cities. I have a particular case in mind which I desire to cover by this amendment, because we offer amendments from information that comes to us. This young lady has graduated at a night school and is an expert stenographer. She will be forced out of the service under this bill, under the existing conditions reducing the number of employees in the service. She is offered a position in Philadelphia. She has got to go back to Westmoreland County or to Philadelphia to obtain employment. She should be allowed railroad fare to Philadelphia. That is perfectly just, providing that the fare to Philadelphia would not be greater than the fare to Westmoreland County, Pa.

Now, I do not think we are going to be able to meet this emergency—to digress a little—by forcing these employees to quit service by any other means than by cutting off appropriations. I was talking the other night to the chief clerk of one of the great bureaus of this Government. He made this statement to me when I asked him why it was that they were continuing the activities of the Government upon a war basis:

Right here under our nose the building goes on in front of the Capitol just the same as if we were in the midst of war. Those dormitories now being built will not be required. But how are we going to stop work on them? Work will never stop until we stop appropriating money. That is the only way. This chief clerk said that when a man enters the Government service he cuts his bridges behind him for private employment, and they build up in every bureau of the Government a system of schemes and plans between themselves to make their services appear necessary. They do not want to get out of the Government service. They want to make their services to the Government appear to be a necessity, and we can not dispose of them until we cut off appropriating money for the payment of their salaries. I think this amendment is eminently fair, if we are going to pass the bill, and I hope the House will adopt it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON, Mr. NORTON, and Mr. GARD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is recognized.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENISON: Page 1, line 7, after the word "less," strike out the words "of the services" and insert the word "now."

Mr. DENISON. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the words "of the services" are surplusage in there and unnecessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think the word "now" is necessary either. I am willing to have the words "in the services" go out.

Mr. DENISON. I insert the word "now" to meet the point that I called to the gentleman's attention awhile ago when he was speaking, that this bill ought to be limited to the employees in the service, so as to exclude those between now and the 31st of March.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble is that it would exclude those in the services yesterday who would want to be taken care of.

Mr. GARD. In line with what the gentleman has suggested in regard to the phrase "of the services," which has given the Members a little trouble in determining just what it means, it seems to me everything could be cured by striking out the word "of" and inserting the word "in," so that it would then read: "to furnish the civilian employees in the services under their respective jurisdictions."

Mr. DENISON. Why have the words in there at all?

Mr. GARD. Because they are in there to mean the service, which means a department or other governmental establishment in the District of Columbia. The words are proper, but the word "of," it seems to me, does not express the meaning as well as the word "in."

Mr. DENISON. If this amendment that I have offered is adopted, "civil employees under the respective jurisdictions," it seems to me, would be better grammar and would convey the meaning more clearly.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to make it so that the employees who come to Washington after the passage of this act will not secure its benefits?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; that is what I want to prevent.

Mr. BLACK. Would not the addition of the following phrase after the word "seventeen," in line 10, correct that: "and prior to the passage of this act"?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. That would meet the point I am trying to get at perhaps better than the words I have used.

Mr. BLACK. I intended to offer that amendment, but the gentleman, if he cares, can just substitute that.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to modify my amendment by omitting the word "now," which I inserted, by striking it out.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman from Kentucky accept that?

Mr. DENISON. No. He accepted the other part. I want to leave it by striking out those words.

Mr. WINGO. Does not section 4 cover the objection the gentleman had in mind in his amendment? Section 4 covers the man who goes out of the service yesterday. I take it that the gentleman's purpose is to prevent their taking this as a revolving proposition and sending one man home to-day and picking up another man to-morrow and discharging him on the 1st of March, and thereby permitting two men to avail of this provision.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 1, line 7, after the word "less," strike out the words "of the services."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer this further amendment.

Mr. BLACK. The amendment I suggested was after the word "seventeen," in line 10, adding the phrase "and prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that instead of interpolating words of which it is hard to catch the whole meaning in this paragraph that you add a section at the end of the bill to the effect that this act shall not apply to those who are brought in after that date. We all agree about what we want to do. It is hard to see on the floor just what the effect is of certain words in a sentence.

Mr. DENISON. I think that is a good suggestion. I will withdraw the further amendment, Mr. Speaker. I may have time to prepare an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his further amendment.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I send an amendment to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NORTON: Page 1, line 7, after the word "rate" insert the words "not more than," and after the word "less" insert the words "than $100 per annum."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is to take care of the suggestion that was made, that the provisions of this act should not be applicable to anyone receiving a dollar a year salary or a nominal salary. The provision provides that the employees shall only be those who receive not more than $1,400 or less than $100 per annum. I take it that anyone who receives a salary of less than $100 per annum is on the dollar-a-year list.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is this to section 1?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "their actual railroad transportation" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "their railroad tickets," and in line 6 strike out the word "fare" and insert the word "ticket," and add at the end of the section the following: "Provided, That said railroad and sleeping-car tickets shall not be transferable."

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, I think he will not urge his amendment. My understanding is that the way transportation is furnished now is for the department to give an order upon the railroad for a ticket to a given place. This order is presented at the railroad office. The ticket is issued, the man signs the voucher, showing that he has received it, and then subsequently the railroad presents that voucher to the department for payment. The purpose of the gentleman's amendment is, I think, amply taken care of by the practice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. Speaker, with that explanation I withdraw the amendment. Of course, the chairman apprehends the situation as we all understand it.

Mr. SHERLEY. We all want to prevent the sale of tickets or the issuing of money to purchase tickets.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With that explanation, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the word "fare," following the word "sleeping-car," might be changed to "accommodations," so as to make it certain that by the word "fare" we do not intend cash for the holder.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out the word "fare," in line 6, page 2, and insert the word "accommodation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 5, after the word "inclusive" insert "an amount equal to."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to do exactly the opposite of what the chairman has said was his intention, and that is, instead of giving these discharged employees their tickets, this amendment would give them an equivalent in money. As I stated when I put the question, the method provided in this bill is nothing less than a system of enforced deportation.

These employees are not incompetent, criminal, or feebleminded. If they were, they should not have been in the service as long as this. I suppose the intention is to get them home. They want to go home, and they ought to be trusted with the equivalent of their fare, which will carry out the purpose of this resolution. It is humiliating and degrading for them to be treated by us in this manner.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, a man who wants to go home would receive the Government's money, go to the ticket office, pay the excess fare, pay the war tax, and all that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He would receive an amount equivalent to the fare.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He would buy a ticket and pay the war tax.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We can provide for that by regulation. I do not see what danger there could be of these people not wanting to go home. Some of us like to stay in Washington, and some of us can not stay here as long as we would like to stay. But there is no employment here for them, and why not let them go home? Why not treat them right in return for the good, loyal service they have rendered? The distinguished chairman of the committee quotes the case of the young women. I resent that, and I believe that these patriotic young women who have come to Washington to work and who have rendered good service are amply able to take care of themselves, and will be glad to get out of here and go home. They should not be escorted by a guard and put on a train. If they do not want to go home, it is their own business, and it is not for us to deport them out of Washington. I urge the acceptance of my amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman know that this plan is now used where the Government furnishes transportation? There is nothing new about this. Any officer of the Government, including any bureau chief, will get an order, go down to the ticket office, and get the transportation, which is settled for by the Government afterwards.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does that apply to an officer who is discharged?

Mr. WINGO. Take the case of a bureau chief in the Forestry Service who has to make a trip to the State of Washington on official business. He is allowed his transportation. He is furnished an order and goes to the railroad station and gets the ticket, and the department settles for his transportation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very true; but he is in the service. He is going out and coming back, and going to remain in the service. He is on duty.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. Now, take a young man in the Navy or in the Army, whenever he is discharged he gets an order for his transportation. I never heard any of them complain that they were insulted because we take ordinary business precautions to see that the thing is done in a businesslike way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We can, but let us consider the feelings of these faithful workers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has already indicated that this is simply the ordinary practice, and anybody who feels that he is being insulted by being furnished this transportation can avoid the insult by not receiving the transportation. It seems to me that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is drawing upon his imagination as to the intention to insult anybody. That is not the purpose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Congress is dealing with a concrete situation, and despite what the gentleman says, it is desirable that we provide that the form of congressional action shall not be changed by the volition of those who receive the benefit of it. I am quite sure that the House is not prepared to change the whole purpose of this bill.

THE SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to section 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILLIARD: Page 1, line 9, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "or gone to other place in the United States in like circumstances"; and page 2, line 6, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "or from other place as contemplated herein."

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my amendment is to insert, in line 9, page 1, after the word "Columbia," the words "or gone to other place in the United States in like circumstances."

That is, to places other than the District of Columbia. Then in line 6, page 2, after the word "Columbia," I propose to insert the words "or from other place as contemplated herein."

Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the purpose of this bill. I think it ought to pass even without my amendment; but I appreciate that in the city of Washington, where we see everybody and where everybody sees us, we are apt to think of the thousands here and we are just as apt to forget the few hundreds who are in other places. I believe that justice would suggest that we provide for those who may have gone to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, or Chicago, or somewhere else, in the same circumstances as the thousands who have come to Washington, that they shall have provision for returning to their homes. I know that the congestion feature of the argument does not apply in those other places. Still as long as we are giving a measure of justice I believe it is only fair that we extend it to those unheard persons who have gone from their homes to render service to the Government elsewhere. It is easy to hear those who speak and it is easy to forget those whose voices are never heard, and I venture this word and urge the amendment on behalf of those clerks who are in other places. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman during my talk to the committee, I simply desire to say that the committee did not feel warranted, in view of its present information, in extending this bill to cover the service all over the United States. Conditions in other places are in no sense similar. The sudden dismissals will not be the same elsewhere as here, and the rule would not work with the same equity that the gentleman seems to think. I believe we would not be warranted in placing this added burden upon the Government at this time, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to section 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 2, line 8, after the word "elect," insert the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to those who enter such service after the passage of this act."

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think the place to put that is at the end of the bill?

Mr. DENISON. I thought it would be better right here, after the end of this section, which makes provision for the transportation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not sure about that, but I would be sure of it in the other place.

Mr. DENISON. If the chairman prefers it to go at the end of the bill, I will not object.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it had better go in at the end of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it for the present and offer it at the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That such transportation must be applied for within 10 days after the termination of service and shall be used within 5 days after issuance unless an extension of time on account of illness be granted by the proper authority: Provided, That as to the employees whose services have been terminated during the period between November 11, 1918, and the date of the passage of this act, inclusive, the foregoing limitation of 10 days shall operate from the date of the passage of this act. Any person who shall sell, exchange, or transfer such transportation for the use of another shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "than," strike out $100 and insert "$500, or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it may be that that penalty is slightly excessive, and if so I should be glad to modify the maximum at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to it in view of the fact that there is no minimum, but that it fixes a maximum.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me the language attempted to be incorporated by the gentleman from Ohio is not proper. I am satisfied that punishment by a fine of not more than $100 would be a deterrent, and that is all that is necessary. It is idle to suppose that you could collect a fine of $500 from anyone who is in such a financial condition as not to be able to pay his or her way back to the place from which he or she came to Washington to accept a governmental position.

I do not join with many persons here in the idea that there is a tremendous number of young men or young women who are absolutely dependent upon this additional gratuity to get back home. I think the young men and young women who came here are of a high mental and moral caliber; that they are taking care of themselves and taking care of their money in most instances, and nearly all able to get back home. Nor do I believe the bait—because that is what it is—the bait to give transportation home as a means of having them individually apply for release from governmental employment will be very effective. My observation is that it takes something more than sleeping car fare and transportation on the railroad to separate them from the governmental pay roll. And as a deterrent the sum of $100 is, I think, a proper sum to be inserted here as a fine, but to say it should be raised to $500 or imprisonment for six months is, it seems to me, idle.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In connection with the remarks of the gentleman as to the nonlikelihood of their leaving the service, the gentleman is aware that some bureaus are giving the employees 30 days, not as a leave but just to help them, so that they can accumulate one month's salary to help them back home.

Mr. GARD. Everybody knows that the only way to separate people from the service is to take away the appropriation for their payment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Many of these clerks, being employed from a lump-sum appropriation for the year, how is it possible to discontinue the appropriation for their employment?

Mr. GARD. I confess that I can not answer the gentleman. He is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and knows better than I do about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very idea; the Committee on Appropriations, recognizing the impossibility of discontinuing the appropriation, brought in the resolution.

Mr. GARD. I favor the resolution; but it seems to me that the cases of actual benefit will be comparatively few, because I think the clerks who came here in response to the call for patriotic service came with the earnest idea of serving during the war emergency; that they came here and are taking care of themselves and their money the best they can in view of the circumstances of extortion in the price of living in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment in order to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin contend that because some of these clerks are employed under a lump-sum appropriation the people whose duty it is to spend the lump sum must continue to expend it whether the employees are needed or not?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is rather a foolish question for the gentleman from Massachusetts to propound to a member of the Committee on Appropriations that has charge of the appropriation of millions of dollars and who at the present moment is engaged in the serious question of curtailing the appropriations of millions of dollars that have been voted for the employment of temporary clerical service.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further to the gentleman unless he answers my question.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is such a ridiculous question——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman interjected his remarks into the speech of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not discussing the amendment which he offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is discussing the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GARD. And that is always in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; he is always privileged to do that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the point of order made by the gentleman from Colorado, I shall not pursue the painful subject any further. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "transfer," insert "or shall attempt to sell, exchange, or transfer, or who purchases or attempts to purchase."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, it will be noted that this proposed amendment makes it an offense to attempt to sell or transfer or exchange this transportation, and also makes it an offense for one to purchase it, so that the purchaser of the transportation could be punished.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why would it not serve the gentleman's purpose to just put in the word "purchase," after the word "transfer," in line 19? We are not writing a formal penal statute here. I submit to the gentleman that an attempt to sell is not going to disturb the foundations of the Government, and if they do not sell and do not buy we will get along.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think if we are going to provide any punishment at all we ought to punish the person who attempts to sell or transfer or exchange, and we ought to punish the person who purchases the transportation as much as the one who sells.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 3, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question in respect to section 2. Have not a great many of these clerks already been dismissed and have they not already left the city?

Mr. SHERLEY. Quite a number have, but I wish there had been more.

Mr. KEARNS. Section 2 undertakes to give them the benefit of this transportation.

Mr. SHERLEY. It does those who are here.

Mr. KEARNS. If they have already gone home it does not take care of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not except as to those who go after December 10.

Mr. KEARNS. It applies to those who leave here after December 10.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then they are taken care of by virtue of section 4.

Mr. KEARNS. Suppose a person goes to an extreme part of the United States from here, say to the State of Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. If a person goes after December 10 he or she gets the compensation refunded on a proper showing.

Mr. KEARNS. They have to make the application within 10 days. A great many of them will not be advised that this has become a law within that time.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not true as to the refund. That is true as to those who are here and who have left the service. Those people ought not to be permitted to stay around here indefinitely and get their transportation.

Mr. KEARNS. What I am trying to get at is this: How long a time under this bill have the ones who go, say, to-day?

Mr. SHERLEY. Those who go after December 10 would have any reasonable time within which to present their claim.

Mr. KEARNS. There is no time fixed in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no limitation fixed now, except the life of the appropriation. Ordinary diligence would be required of them. They ought to present their claims before the 1st of next July.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the expenses authorized by this act shall be paid from the following appropriations for the fiscal year 1919, which hereby are made available therefor:

For the War Department, from "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

For the Navy Department, from "Pay, miscellaneous."

For all other executive departments and independent establishments, from the appropriations for the support of the services in which such persons are employed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments in the form of new sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 7, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That any employee who would be entitled to transportation, including sleeping-car fare, under this act and who has left the District of Columbia prior to the passage of this act, but not before December 10, 1918, upon application and presentation of proper proof shall have refunded the cost of actual railroad transportation, including sleeping-car fare, from the District of Columbia to the place from which employment was accepted or to such other place not a greater distance to which the employee may have gone: Provided, That payment to any employee for leave of absence not earned in proportion to the term of employment shall be deducted from the refund authorized in this section."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer to amend, in line 8, page 3, by striking out the word "fare" and inserting the word "accommodation." Also, in line 13, by striking out the word "fare" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "accommodation."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "fare" and insert the word "accommodation."

Page 3, line 13, strike out the word "fare" and insert the word "accommodation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Also, after the word "accepted," in line 14, insert the words "or to their legal residence," to make it accord with the amendment adopted by the House a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 14, after the word "accepted," insert the words "or to their legal residence."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that in line 11, after the words "upon application and presentation," it would be well to insert the words "within 60 days." There is no time limit when the application and presentation of the claim shall be made.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to a limit of time.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman not think that a reasonable limitation is better than to leave it as it is, entirely without limitation?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman that something ought to be put in there.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, after the word "presentation," in line 11, I move to amend by inserting the words "within 60 days after the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, after the word "presentation," insert the words "within 60 days after the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 20, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 5. That the provision made in this act for the transportation of employees shall not be supplemented in any manner by the various services in which they are employed."

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I find in section 4 the language "who has left the District of Columbia prior to the passage of this act, but not before December 10." Suppose some clerk or stenographer had been laid off or had lost her position, say, a week ago or two weeks ago and was still in the District. Would she get the benefit of this?

Mr. SHERLEY. Anybody in the District who has left the service since November 11 and comes under the other provisions of the act can get free transportation home.

Mr. KEARNS. If they are still in the District, although they had lost their positions, say, two weeks ago?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir; and those who have gone home after December 10. Now, the reason for section 4 was this: This act can not become a law, even if it is passed by the Senate, under presumably 10 days after it has passed the Senate. That being so, it would hold people in the service 10 days in order to get that transportation. We want to let them go out as fast as they can go, and so we made a provision by which anybody who leaves after December 10 and goes home can get a refund for their transportation.

Mr. KEARNS. Would this apply to anybody engaged in war work, no matter when they quit, if they are in the city?

Mr. SHERLEY. They will be caught either under section 2 or section 4.

Mr. KEARNS. Even if they quit a month ago or two months ago?

Mr. SHERLEY. Section 2 covers those who quit and are still here.

Mr. KEARNS. And it makes no difference when they quit?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not anybody who quit prior to the date of the armistice, November 11.

Mr. KEARNS. Is that mentioned in the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; the gentleman will find it in section 1.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Will the gentleman state just what section 5 is intended to cover?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is intended to cover these bonuses and any other device that the ingenuity of some generous department heads may work out at the public expense. It is to prevent the granting of additional bonuses of any kind to these clerks.

Mr. WALSH. Either in the form of leave or vacation?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are entitled under the law to the leave they have earned, which is at the rate of two and one-half days a month. Nobody desires to deny them that, but it prevents giving them any additional leave with pay.

The SPEAKER. Both pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment as a new section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 6. That the provision made in this act for the transportation of employees shall not apply to those who entered such service after the passage of this act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ALEXANDER was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of sickness.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, indefinitely, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13277.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13277, with Mr. ALMON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to beneficiaries named in section 3 of "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906, $6,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia, on itemized vouchers duly audited and approved by the auditor of said District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee the reason for the change of language in this provision.

Mr. SISSON. I did not know the language had been changed; if so, it is by inadvertence. The gentleman is speaking of line 22, page 64, and the one on page 65?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Well, I do not think it has been changed, so it must have been an error in printing. What change is it the gentleman from Massachusetts noticed?

Mr. WALSH. This seems to be payment to beneficiaries, and I think the law heretofore has been payment to destitute women and children, and I was wondering whether this would permit payment to others.

Mr. SISSON. They are the beneficiaries.

Mr. WALSH. Are they the only ones mentioned?

Mr. SISSON. That is all. In other words, to prevent repeating all this language the Clerk has simply carried the language for payment of beneficiaries named in section 3 of the act.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman a question if I may be permitted to refer back to page 63, immediately at the top, line 1. There is a laborer provided for at $600 per annum.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the chairman if that laborer is furnished board and lodging in the institution where he served.

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. JUUL. That means $50 a month?

Mr. SISSON. And he gets $120.

Mr. JUUL. According to this he gets $600 per annum?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Which is $50 a month.

Mr. SISSON. And then he gets $120.

Mr. JUUL. Under the act recently passed. Does that mean his salary is $50 a month and that is all he gets?

Mr. SISSON. That means the salary is $60 a month.

Mr. JUUL. Down below, in lines 17 and 18, same page, you have a watchman at $480, and a blacksmith and woodworker at $500, and a driver for dead wagon at $365.

Mr. SISSON. They get their board and lodging and laundry. Everything is furnished except the clothing.

Mr. JUUL. But the laborer does not, the one referred to on page 63, the top line.

Mr. SISSON. The laborer in the court does not.

Mr. JUUL. Does it not strike the chairman that we ought to fix the condition of these people along lines so that they might live without stealing?

Mr. SISSON. Now, it is not necessary to put that imputation even upon this old employee. In other words, a great many of these people have got to be very old, and they do not have very much to do. They just sit around there and sort of wait on the court.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, a man can not live and board and room anywhere in the city of Washington for the sum of money you allow him for his services here.

Mr. SISSON. This is almost in the nature of a pension. A great many conditions surround a great many of these men that are called laborers around the court. They do not have much to do. I think they might be dispensed with very well. If you want to cut it out, it would be in order for you to eliminate that pension entirely.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to see you treat the man a little different.

Mr. SISSON. You would pay a man for what he did, would you not?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. If he is really getting a pension you would not undertake to increase the pension or gratuity, would you?

Mr. JUUL. No, Mr. Chairman; but if he has no other employment I would want the United States to pay the man so that he might have three meals a day and have a bed to sleep in and live honestly. If it is proper to offer an amendment to strike out the figure "6" and insert "8" instead, on page 63, line 1——

Mr. SISSON. That has been passed, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that we have passed that line. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revert to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revert to the paragraph in order to offer an amendment.

Mr. SISSON. I object, Mr. Chairman. I would make the point of order if the gentleman should offer the amendment anyway.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Training School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,200; clerk, matron, and four teachers, at $600 each; overseer, $720; two parole officers, at $600 each; seven teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $720; assistant engineer, $600; night watchman, $480; two laborers, at $300 each; in all, $12,480.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph just read, in that in line 4, page 67, the word "clerk" has been inserted. The point of order is that the committee have changed the designation of "treasurer" to that of "clerk." There is no legislation authorizing any such change.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that be passed until I can look into that matter and see.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not need to look beyond page 5 of the report, at the bottom of the page, where it says that the designation of treasurer at $600 was changed to that of clerk at the same salary.

Mr. SISSON. It is possible, I will say to the gentleman, that the treasurer is not even authorized by law.

Mr. WALSH. The treasurer is authorized by law. I have the statute here which authorizes it.

Mr. SISSON. Let us just pass that for a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I am willing that the paragraph be passed until later, with the understanding that the point of order is pending.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed temporarily. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Girls, $37,480: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1919, appropriations for the National Training School for Girls shall be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia in the manner now provided by law for expenditures from appropriations for general expenses of the government of said District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph just read. That is entirely new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SISSON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I will ask that that also be passed, because that is coupled with this other provision. Let me look into it and see.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman conceded the point last year. If he desires to have it passed over with the view of discussing it——

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to having it passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asks unanimous consent that this paragraph, lines 20 to 25, page 67, be passed temporarily. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For emergency care and treatment of, and free dispensary service to, indigent patients under a contract or agreement to be made with Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital by the Board of Charities, $26,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. SISSON. What paragraph?

Mr. ROBBINS. We are down to line 24, page 68. In those last three appropriations, one for the care of indigent patients, $19,000, and the other for the care of Garfield Memorial Hospital, $19,000, and this for emergency treatment, $26,000, what becomes of this money if it is not all expended for these purposes? I know the purposes are indefinite, but the appropriation is of a definite sum.

Mr. SISSON. It goes back into the Treasury.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why do not you use the same phrase, then, that you used in line 11, provision for the treatment of indigent patients, "not to exceed $19,000"? Why do you make an absolute appropriation, for an indefinite purpose, of a lump sum?

Mr. SISSON. It has been carried in this language many years.

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not think that justifies it. It is not clear.

Mr. SISSON. It has never been abused. They can not expend the money except for the purposes mentioned in the act It would not amount to anything. They could not expend to exceed $26,000 anyway.

Mr. ROBBINS. I know the maximum is fixed in that item. Why is not the same phraseology followed here as is followed with reference to the treatment of indigent patients in the Children's Hospital—"not to exceed" that lump sum?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will notice, for care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the National Homeopathic Hospital Association, we limit the amount they may contract there to $10,000. That is something which fixes not the number of patients that may be treated in the hospital, but fixes a limit upon the amount which they may contract for. That is to say, they can contract for patients in the hospital not to exceed $10,000. In the case of the amount below there, the $26,000, the Board of Charities themselves handle the $26,000 for emergency cases of treatment.

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; but in each one of these items you have the same provision, "under a contract"; and in line 10, for the Children's Hospital, for the treatment of indigent patients, the same term is used, "under a contract to be made with the Children's Hospital," and there you use the form of legislation, to wit, "not to exceed" the amount. What I criticize is the making of an absolute lump-sum appropriation of a definite amount for an indefinite object.

Mr. SISSON. That is just as definite as the other. The idea is that in the cases mentioned before you make a contract for a specific hospital, not to exceed a certain amount of money.

Mr. ROBBINS. And a specific hospital is named in connection with the other item; but with the assurance of the gentleman that no extravagance can arise under this bill as drawn, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. A certain amount is allowed each day for each patient?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. In an emergency case a man may be injured on the street.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the theory on which you make the appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. We are simply giving the Board of Charities $26,000 to take care of the charity patients. There has been no abuse of it. That has been the practice all the while.

Mr. ROBBINS. If that is the correct explanation, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend from Mississippi ought to be a little more frank and say it happens simply because different persons prepare the different items. The correct method is to make the appropriation not to exceed a certain amount. Sometimes they say "not to exceed," and then say "such an appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; but even when an absolute appropriation is made, you only appropriate in fact as much as is necessary, because under the law whatever money is unexpended for a purpose named in the law is covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. Now, it would be better language to strike out "not to exceed," or not to put it in. But very often in preparing these estimates they put it that way. Whoever prepared the estimate, I suppose, thinking it was a little stronger, put it that way, but it means precisely the same thing.

Mr. SISSON. If you left out the language would it not permit, in the making of these contracts with the various hospitals, the incurrence of a deficiency? We never permit deficiencies to be created in an appropriation of this kind. The Board of Charities are not permitted to expend for this particular hospital more than a certain amount of money.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] called attention to the fact that the language of the four items is the same. They are all under contract, and they mean the same. The effect is the same. Only in one place you use three extra words, which take up that much more paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For emergency care and treatment of, and free dispensary service to, indigent patients under a contract or agreement to be made with Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital by the Board of Charities, $25,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I note that in these medical charities the total appropriation for hospitals made through the Board of Charities amounts to $192,000, and on page 70 there is a provision for the continuation of the erection of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital. What I want to know is, when this Gallinger Municipal Hospital is completed, is it the purpose to take care of indigent persons there or to continue the appropriations for all these other indigent hospitals?

Mr. SISSON. It was the purpose in constructing this hospital to take care of the District's indigent patients to the capacity which that hospital afforded. Of course, that hospital is not yet completed.

Mr. GARD. That is, the Gallinger Hospital?

Mr. SISSON. That is, the Gallinger Hospital.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman tell me how many indigent patients there are in the District of Columbia that receive hospital treatment?

Mr. SISSON. I can not. We ask about each of these items, and the gentleman will find in the hearings a statement as to the money, and how much was expended, and the contract price per patient. It runs along pretty evenly. The contract prices vary somewhat, according to the character of treatment that the indigent patient has to receive. It is regulated largely by the cost of taking care of the patients. None of these institutions make any profit, as they claim, out of the care of the patients.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gallinger Municipal Hospital: For continuing the construction of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital in accordance with the provision for that purpose in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, $100,000; and the limit of cost of said hospital and accessory buildings is increased from $500,000 to $603,590.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I will make it. This increases the limit of cost from $500,000 to $603,000. The limit of cost of this hospital was to be $500,000.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know now why, before this hospital is even begun, the limit of cost is increased $103,000?

Mr. SISSON. You see they prepared plans and specifications before the enormous increase in the cost of materials and labor took place, and in order to do the amount of work that they desire to do it is necessary to increase the limit of cost $103,000. I think, taking into consideration the vast increase in the cost of labor and materials, that is a very modest increase in the expenses necessary to build what they contemplated building out of the original sum.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there such an urgent demand for the building of this hospital that we ought to pay $100,000 more to build it now than we might have to pay later?

Mr. SISSON. I think there is, because the need for hospital facilities for the next few years in the District of Columbia is going to be very great.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not likely to be so great after the war conditions are settled as it is now.

Mr. SISSON. The medical authorities of the Army and Navy do not know, nor can anyone tell until these boys get back, just what demands there will be. Therefore they want to be able to take care of them when the demand comes.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand they are going to take care of these soldiers and sailors in the municipal hospital.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; that is, they will take care of all the patients they can in all the other hospitals, and, I take it, that there is no reason why arrangements could not be made to take them into this hospital. Of course arrangements could be made with the War and Navy Departments. But in addition to that the population of Washington has vastly increased, and the permanent population of the city is perhaps 100,000 more people than it was when it was first proposed to build this hospital.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the gentleman that this does not increase the facilities of the hospital, but is only to take care of the increased cost.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. It is to take care of the increased cost of what they propose to build. If the cost of material and labor is reduced in the near future, we will get the benefit of that.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman does not think the Government will save any money in that case? The $100,000 will be spent just the same.

Mr. SISSON. It may be spent in enlarging somewhat the original plans, if the price of material and the price of labor go down. We went into this rather carefully, and your committee were unanimous in their opinion that this $100,000 ought to be granted. In fact, I think more than that ought to have been given.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think this will be the last increase that will be asked for?

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the gentleman has been in Congress a long time and he knows just as much as I do about that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not be here probably as long as the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to my friend that I do not know what they will ask in the future. I do know, however, that the hospital facilities of the District of Columbia ought to be properly provided for in any event, and I am sure there is not a man in Congress who is more earnest and zealous in looking after proper hospital facilities than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I shall make the point of order on it, though I think it is a bad policy to begin to increase the cost before we know what is going to be done. In the first place, I think that the Government had a very good arrangement for taking care of its indigent poor before we ever authorized the building of a hospital, and I have always questioned whether it was the thing to do to build a municipal hospital in the District of Columbia. Probably there is no city in the country where the indigent poor have been better taken care of than they have here, with all the hospital facilities everywhere in the District.

Mr. GARD. Has the contract been let for this Gallinger municipal hospital?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. I take it that there has been no contract let, but the plans and specifications have been made.

Mr. SISSON. My information is that the plans and specifications have all been made, but no contract has been let. Of course, they could not afford to let the contract until they had the money authorized.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Mississippi has always been very careful about appropriations, and I trust he is right on this proposition. I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this connection that there are a great many hospitals here in Washington—the Freedmen's Hospital, Columbia Hospital, the Children's Hospital, the National Homeopathic Hospital, the Emergency Hospital, Georgetown University Hospital, Garfield Hospital, Providence Hospital, the Tuberculosis Hospital—and now they come in with this Gallinger Hospital, which the gentleman says has not been contracted for. How does it come that a city of three or four hundred thousand people should have such an array of hospitals as this? I am not enumerating any Government hospitals, either, such as Et. Elizabeths, the Naval Hospital, or the Walter Reed Hospital.

Mr. SISSON. The hospitals which the gentleman has enumerated are none of them Government hospitals, except the Tuberculosis Hospital and the Gallinger Hospital.

Mr. ROBBINS. Here is a long list of appropriations for them aggregating an enormous sum of money, and now another hospital is to be added.

Mr. SISSON. That is for the purpose of caring for the indigent poor. There is no hospital in the city adequate to take care of the indigent sick. We have to avail ourselves of the private hospitals in order to take care of the indigent poor. We have to make contracts for these hospitals which has been the arrangement for many years where the Board of Charities make terms with the authorities to take such patients as the board may send there at a fixed price.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is the Gallinger Hospital designed to take care of the indigent poor?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then there will be no more indigent poor sent to these other hospitals?

Mr. SISSON. Not if the Gallinger Hospital is able to take care of all of the indigent poor; they will not be sent to the other hospitals.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, including care of horses, purchase and care of wagon and harness, $25,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In lines 3 and 4 it reads, "for maintenance, including care of horses, purchase and care of wagon and harness." Does that include only the horses, wagon, and harness?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; it includes the maintenance in the institution.

Mr. WATSON. It says "one wagon."

Mr. SISSON. This appropriation is $25.000 for the maintenance of the institution, and that includes the care of the horses and purchase of a wagon and harness.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary home for ex-Union soldiers and sailors, Grand Army of the Republic: Superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; cook, $360; maintenance, $4,000; in all, $5,920 to be expended under the direction of the commissioners; and ex-soldiers, sailors, or marines of the Spanish War, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition who served at any time between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, shall be admitted to the home.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 3, after the word "of," strike out the remainder of line 3 and lines 4, 5, and 6 down to and including the figures "1902," in line 6, and insert "any war in which the United States has been engaged."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of my amendment is to add soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war with Germany to the list of those who may be admitted to this temporary home for soldiers. At the present time the soldiers of the Civil War, the Spanish War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Chinese relief expedition are admitted. This simply opens the door of this temporary home to the soldiers of the present war.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. It is apparent that this wording is so framed as to embrace only what is known as Volunteer forces, and not the Regular Army of the United States. That is evidently the limitation in the form of the language.

Mr. TILSON. It does not say so.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; the clear purpose is to confine it to the Volunteer forces as distinguished from the Regular forces.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman must be mistaken about that; they include the Regular soldiers.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is mistaken. My only objection is that we had no hearing as to what demand might be made on the fund. It is only a short time until the next bill will be ready, and then that matter can be taken up and we can determine whether there will be any funds needed. I take it that there will be nothing very technical about taking care overnight of any strange soldier that may be stranded and wished to be admitted. But I would not want to do it without knowing something about the demand that was to be made on the fund. The accommodations at the home are very limited, very small.

Mr. TILSON. I think we ought to begin just as soon as possible to recognize the parity of all of our soldiers and sailors who have served their country in the time of war. The doors of this home, originally intended for Union soldiers only, have been opened to those who were engaged in the Spanish War, in the Philippine insurrection, and in the China relief expedition. I think that we should indicate that it is our intention to make this a home, such as it is, for all who have served in the military forces of the United States in time of war.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is only a temporary home.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I know it is only a temporary lodging house.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I do not know that I have the language of the gentleman's amendment, but I want to say that I introduced a resolution the other day which is pending before the gentleman's committee which has for its purpose the opening of the National Military Homes throughout the country to all soldiers in the American war, including those in the present war, and including the regular volunteer forces in the selective service force, because I think every soldier in the American war is entitled to these comforts.

Mr. TILSON. I think so myself, but this is a temporary home and the resolution the gentleman refers to applies to the permanent homes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARAWAY). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance: Superintendent of clothing and laundry, $840; storekeeper, $720; steward, $900; stewardess, $600; veterinary and officer, $880; captain of guard, $1,200; captain of night watch, $900; two receiving and discharging officers, at $1,000 each; superintendent of laundry, $720; day guards—2 at $900 each, 22 at $840 each; 12 night guards, at $720 each; day officer, $600; 3 night officers, at $600 each; hospital nurse, $600; captain of steamboat, $1,100; engineer of steamboat, $1,000; superintendents—farm $1,200, dairy $1,000, poultry department $1,000; nurseryman, $1,000; in all, $57,240.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman if this is the workhouse that we heard so much about when the women suffragettes were imprisoned therein, that it was not kept clean and that it was in a miserable condition. What has the gentleman to say about this, in view of this large appropriation?

Mr. SISSON. I would not be at all surprised if this prison was as clean as most prisons. I do not think any complaint was made except that they were put in a larger hall, where they could be more easily guarded. I have not heard any complaints except complaints of that kind. I have not heard of any complaint of that kind except as to the character of buildings they have. They have been wanting to build, and perhaps will have to within the next year or immediately, some new buildings in which to care for the people. The buildings they have now are constructed out of the timber that was on the land. They had a sawmill and sawed up the timber on the land and constructed these buildings. They own a brick plant down there, and they are replacing these buildings as rapidly as they can with bricks. I do not think any complaint can be made about the cleanliness of this place as a prison, because I think investigation will show it is as clean as prisons usually are.

Mr. ROBBINS. Was the gentleman ever out there to visit this workhouse?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I have been out there twice. I never have been out there as an inmate, but simply in the performance of my official duties.

Mr. ROBBINS. Having received the assurance that the gentleman is going to provide better buildings for the suffragettes in the future, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania expect the suffragettes to be in jail out there again?

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not, but I am trying to provide a good place for them in case they do go.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think they ought to be placed there.

Mr. ROBBINS. Nor do I, and I hope they will never be taken out there, or in any prison, for such offenses as they were alleged to have committed.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the motion to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi how many inmates are there in this workhouse?

Mr. SISSON. They have two institutions there connected together under one management. The total number is nearly 400.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the gentleman tell me whether the number of inmates has increased or diminished in the last two years?

Mr. SISSON. There has been a great increase in the population there in the last two years, because they transferred some there from other prisons. They had a total number of commitments during the last fiscal year of 3,739. Of course they have short commitments, and they had a daily average population, males, at one of the institutions of 312.93, and females, 59.89, making nearly 400 on an average. Sometimes it will be crowded, and these short-term people go out and the population goes down.

Mr. ROBBINS. Can the gentleman tell us the number in the year before that?

Mr. SISSON. I will state also that there are about two hundred and odd long-term men who are either at Atlanta, Ga., or at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., who ought to be out here. The judges have declined, however, to send them there because the accommodations are not sufficient to take care of the long-term men and those men who are liable to escape. I hope that in the near future we may be able to make accommodations out there sufficiently great to accommodate all of the District convicts. I believe that plant can be made not perhaps self-supporting, but can be made to reduce the expenses to the District of Columbia very materially in caring for prisoners.

Mr. FOSTER. They have a brick plant out there. Are they doing anything with that?

Mr. SISSON. They made not very many bricks last year, though I understand they did make some. They made all of the bricks that are in the Central High School, and could have made quite a number of bricks which the market would have been glad to absorb, but the gentleman will recall there is a provision in the bill not permitting bricks to be sold in the market. There is an effort being made to permit the Federal Government to buy these bricks for Federal buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Federal Government take over this brick plant?

Mr. SISSON. It did not.

Mr. FOSTER. So that there has been no decrease, but there has been rather an increase, in the number of prisoners in that workhouse this last year?

Mr. SISSON. There has been some decrease, perhaps, but I do not know whether it is due altogether to prohibition or not.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. SISSON. There has been some decrease in the number of commitments in the courts to those two prisons, but I do not know just how that may be accounted for. The number of inmates would be increased considerably if you could get the judges to send all of the criminals convicted to these two institutions, but the long-term prisoners, 8 or 9 or 10 years, they have been sending to Atlanta and to Fort Leavenworth. If we were ready to take care of them out there, I should advocate placing a provision in some of these bills requiring the judges to send them all to Occoquan, but the judges are unwilling to do that, because if the prisoner's reputation is not very good they are afraid of his escape.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the gentleman says there really has been a decrease in the number of prisoners.

Mr. SISSON. The records show that there has been some decrease in the number of inmates.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments, damages to private property incident to encampments, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, horses and mules for mounted organizations, street car fares (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business, and for general incidental expenses of the services, $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Mississippi if the District of Columbia has a militia here now.

Mr. SISSON. The District of Columbia is maintaining a force not equal to the force they had in time of peace, under a special act of Congress which was passed authorizing the reorganization of the District militia, taking those men who were not subject to draft or who had not yet been taken in the draft. Of course, as soon as they are drafted they would be taken out, and as quickly and as rapidly as can be done they will reorganize under the regular militia act.

Mr. FOSTER. So that they have no militia now except what is called the Home Guard?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. The gentleman recollects that we passed a bill here at the request of the War Department organizing a special militia——

Mr. FOSTER. I notice this is called the militia.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Under the present current fiscal year they will perhaps maintain the present organization, but this fund is for the purpose of reorganizing the regular militia and taking care of it when peace arrives. When the soldiers get back, those who want to continue in the State militia may do so.

Mr. FOSTER. It is just this home guard now, and will be until further action is taken?

Mr. SISSON. I do not presume any of this money will be used under this act. They could not use it under this act if the war officially closes between now and the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. The 1st of July?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. They could not use any for this; but are they using this appropriation?

Mr. SISSON. Not this.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not mean this, but under the same head?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. They have the right to do that; that is all.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That all horses, harness, horse-drawn vehicles necessary for use in connection with construction and supervision of sewer, street, street lighting, road work, and street-cleaning work, including maintenance of said horses and harness and maintenance and repair of said vehicles and purchase of all necessary articles and supplies in connection therewith, or on construction and repair of buildings and bridges, or any general or special engineering or construction work authorized by appropriations, may be purchased, hired, and maintained, and motor trucks may be hired exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations when specifically and in writing ordered by the commissioners; and all such expenditures necessary for the proper execution of said work, exclusive of personal services, shall be paid from and equitably charged against the sums appropriated for said work; and the commissioners in the annual estimates shall report the number of horses, vehicles, and harness purchased and horses and vehicles hired and the sums paid for same and out of what appropriation; and all horses owned or maintained by the District shall, so far as may be practicable, be provided for in stables owned or operated by said District: Provided, That such horses, horse-drawn vehicles, and carts as may be temporarily needed for hauling and excavating material in connection with works authorized by appropriations may be temporarily employed for such purposes under the conditions named in section 2 of this act in relation to the employment of laborers, skilled laborers, and mechanics.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 30, line 18. The point of order was made on that paragraph, and the gentleman making the point of order now desires to withdraw it. I will ask the Clerk to read that paragraph if I get unanimous consent to return.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the Chairman that I have looked into the needs——

Mr. WALSH. I will renew the point of order until we find out what the provision is.

Mr. SISSON. The Clerk is going to read the provision. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 30, lines 17 and 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. That is for the attendance officers?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The point of order took those lines out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attendance officers: Attendance officers—one $900, four at $800 each, four at $600 each; in all, $6,500.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment, page 30, after line 18, to make it "four" instead of "two" at $800.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 18, at the beginning of the line, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, that is not the amendment; the entire item went out on the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. No; only to the two new places.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I will ask the Clerk to report the paragraph, so as to be sure it is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attendance officers: Attendance officers—one $900, four at $800 each, four at $600 each; in all, $6,500.

Mr. SISSON. That is correct. Now, we will return to those items which were passed on page 67.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. In line 4 a point of order was reserved. I have looked the statute up, and the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct about it. The statute provides for a treasurer, and the committee has dropped the word "treasurer" and inserted the word "clerk." I therefore concede the point of order and offer the following amendment, on page 67, line 4, after the figures "$1,200," insert "treasurer."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, line 4, after the figures $1,200," insert the word "treasurer."

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the word "clerk" goes out on the point of order.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. So line 4 will read, "superintendent, $1,200, treasurer, matron, etc." Also a point of order was made at the bottom of page 67, beginning with line 20——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want to strike out line 20.

Mr. SISSON. Beginning line 21 with the word "Provided," at the bottom of page 67, the gentleman from Massachusetts reserved the point of order on that language. The point of order is good and may be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair still does not understand the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. SISSON. Strike out all after the word "Provided," in lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the commissioners and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible shall purchase material, supplies, and equipment, when needed and funds are available from the various services of the Government of the United States possessing material, supplies, and equipment no longer required because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the commissioners and other officials, before purchasing any of the articles described herein, to ascertain from the Government of the United States whether it has articles of the character described that are serviceable. And articles purchased from the Government, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government of the United States are authorized to sell such articles to the municipal government under the conditions specified and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman what is the character of material and supplies the committee had in contemplation?

Mr. SISSON. Only such as is authorized to be purchased in the bill. For example——

Mr. WALSH. There is a variety—automobiles, mops, brooms——

Mr. SISSON. Well, whatever the Federal Government has in the shape of war material that may be used in the District of Columbia they may be authorized to purchase it. This simply authorizes them to take from the Federal Government at a reasonable price the things the Government now has and the money covered into the Treasury. We would rather buy it from the Government than to have the dealer go and buy from the Government and buy it back, or go into the market and buy the material originally.

Mr. WALSH. If the Government has a number of trucks or automobiles that they have been using in connection with war activities and some department in the District of Columbia needs an automobile they are obliged to go and buy this second-hand affair?

Mr. SISSON. Provided they can get what will suit them as well or better. In other words, this simply gives the District Commissioners the right to buy the things which the Government will dispose of.

It is in harmony with the general purpose of the Government in endeavoring to get rid of a great deal of material which they purchased during the war. Many of the articles are practically new; many of the typewriters new; many of the trucks are new; and many of the automobiles are new. There are several automobiles to be purchased in this bill. Quite a good deal of material is to be purchased by the water department and by the street department, and a good many vehicles they can use to advantage. If the Government offers them a price that will be better and more favorable than the open market, this simply gives them the opportunity to avail themselves of that opportunity to purchase from the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the idea that they might make a little saving of money?

Mr. SISSON. We hope to save some money both to the Federal Treasury, by buying at a reasonable price, and also to the District treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what has the gentleman to base any such unusual hope as that upon?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know as it is an unusual hope. We have got to arrange in some way to take care of a great lot of material which the Government has purchased for war purposes. Now, the war is over. There will be over a billion dollars' worth of this character of property throughout the country, as estimated by the various departments, to be sold. Now, it would be better, we think, for the Government, in the departments where Congress has authorized the purchase of these identical things, to absorb them by the Government rather than putting them upon the market.

Mr. WALSH. Are there any houses provided for in this bill?

Mr. SISSON. Any houses?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. WALSH. There would not be any opportunity for them to purchase some of these Swiss chalets?

Mr. SISSON. No; nothing of that sort is authorized.

Mr. WALSH. Now, how far does the gentleman contend that this is compulsory upon the officials of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. Only where the District Commissioners find that they can save money; that they can get what they want at the same or less price.

Mr. WALSH. No. It says that the commissioners and other responsible officials in expending appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible, shall purchase materials. How far does the gentleman think that would go?

Mr. SISSON. In other words, the idea is that if they can get them from the Government they ought not to buy them elsewhere if they can make the same terms.

Mr. WALSH. Who is to decide?

Mr. SISSON. The commissioners, who decide where they shall buy things now.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky offers the following amendment: On page 88, at the end of the bill, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of the unpaid balance of the advances to defray District of Columbia expenses of the fiscal year 1878, as provided by section 17 of the act providing for the support of the District of Columbia for said fiscal year, approved March 3, 1877, and said sum shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia immediately upon the approval of this act."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I take it for granted, Mr. Chairman, that we had better dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will reserve it, I will explain the matter. Or does the gentleman desire the point of order argued?

Mr. MANN. I reserved it, for I thought the gentleman said he wanted the point of order disposed of first.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman did.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I reserved the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as the House no doubt knows, several years ago the House Committee on the District of Columbia commenced a big undertaking of going through the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States with the view of having all sums of money due to the United States paid into the Federal Treasury. As I said, that investigation of the books and accounts has been going on several years. Up to the present time, if I remember correctly, about $2,300,000 have been recovered and paid into the Federal Treasury.

Again referring to this item, I will say that back in 1878 the United States Government advanced about $400,000 to the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has paid $325,000, in round figures, of that amount, leaving $75,000 unpaid. The accountant acting for the District of Columbia Committee has gone through every book and account pertaining to the subject and has found that this money, in the first place, was advanced, and, in the next place, that this $75,000 account has not been paid. The Secretary of the Treasury then referred the matter to the expert accountant who keeps the accounts between the District of Columbia and the United States. That man's name is Mr. Thomas A. Hodgson, and I have here with me a written communication from him concurring in the report made by the committee accountant stating that this money has not been refunded to the United States.

In addition to that, I have here with me a communication signed by Mr. Brownlow, the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, statting that the auditor of the District of Columbia finds that the money was received and that this balance is unpaid.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about this matter except what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] now states. I know that he has been at work investigating and has had an accountant for his committee investigating on this subject for a good while—on this subject and other subjects. Why was not this matter brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that the reason why it was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations at this time, as has been done hereofore, is that Mr. Hodgson, the Treasury accountant, has recently been compelled to undergo three major surgical operations, and it was not until after this bill had been introduced that I got the written statement from him as to the correctness of this charge.

Mr. MANN. Well, on the gentleman's statement I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. My only objection to this amendment is the form in which it is drawn. I have investigated this matter, and the auditor of the District of Columbia says that this amount is due, but it appears as an appropriation. Now, we have heretofore carried this in this way, "That the sum of $75,000 shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia." Here this is in the form of an appropriation. The money is already in the Treasury. Formerly it was a transfer of funds from the District money in the Treasury to the United States. In this way it is money appropriated in the total of the bill, which would be misleading. This amendment ought to be amended so that it would read, "The sum of $75,000 shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of advances to defray District of Columbia expenses of the fiscal year," and so on. If it is in this form, it will comply with the form in which these matters heretofore have appeared in this bill. I have no objection to its going into the bill in that form.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in that connection that on a former occasion, when an item similar to this was in the appropriation bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a point of order to the language which the gentleman from Mississippi now proposes to use. In order to avoid the possibility of a point of order being made at this time, in preparing the amendment I wrote it purposely making it an appropriation. Provided the United States is to recover this amount of money, to which it is most clearly entitled, I have no choice as to the language used, my only aim being that the United States Government shall get the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi submit an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report it.

Mr. SISSON. Amend it so that it will read:

That the sum of $75,000 shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia to pay—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send the amendment up to the desk. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out after the figures "$75,000" the words "is hereby appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of," and insert in lieu thereof the following language: "shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it reported now, the whole amendment as it will read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment as amended:
"That the sum of $75,000 shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia, to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on acount of the unpaid balance of the advances to defray District of Columbia expenses of the fiscal year 1878, as provided by section 17 of the act providing for the support of the District of Columbia for said fiscal year, approved March 3, 1877, and the said sum shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia immediately upon the approval of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following as a new paragraph:
"That the sum of $50,865 is hereby appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of advances to defray the expenses of constructing and equipping a school building in Georgetown, D. C., as provided in the act approved March 3, 1875, and said sum shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia immediately upon the approval of this act."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as to this item, I wish to say that the accountant for the House Committee on the District of Columbia has found this indebtedness; that the accountant assigned to the work by the Secretary of the Treasury agrees with that finding; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, through a report from their auditor, agree that this amount is unpaid. I have those statements here in writing with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like that amendment to be carried in the language usually carried and in the language of the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified as to carry the same language.

There was no objection, and the proposed modification was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: At the end of the bill insert the following as a new paragraph:
"That the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to pay the indebtedness of the District of Columbia to the United States on account of advances for the support of the public schools of the District of Columbia, as provided by a clause of the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1877, and the said sum shall be transferred to the credit of the United States from the amount in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia immediately on the approval of this act."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this item of indebtedness has been ascertained by the accountant for the Committee on the District of Columbia, and has been found to be correct by the accountant of the Treasury Department, and also by the auditor of the District of Columbia. In that respect it is exactly like the two which have preceded it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that amendment also be modified to conform to the language of the other two appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky may be modified so as to contain the language in the first amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the several amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SISSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1920, and for other purposes, is taken up for consideration each section of the bill and every item of each section be treated as in order, notwithstanding the general rules in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up the Post Office appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that every section, paragraph, and item of that bill be considered in order, notwithstanding the general rules of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether the Chair thinks, if that request is granted, it will permit amendments to be offered which otherwise would be out of order?

The SPEAKER. They would not be considered if the present occupant of the chair was in the chair. The gentleman's request does not apply to amendments.

Mr. MANN. I know, but here is the point I want to get at: Here is an item in the bill which is subject to a point of order. Under the practice and rules, if no point of order is made against the item when it is reached, it is open for amendment.

Mr. MOON. I should think any amendment that would be germane to the section would be in order.

Mr. MANN. What I want to inquire is whether the gentleman's request would exclude the right of an amendment over a point of order?

Mr. MOON. Not if it is germane. It is not so intended.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further: The gentleman said, "When the bill is taken up for consideration." Is the bill coming up for consideration now?

Mr. MOON. I am going to move to consider it now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this request is granted, as I understood the inquiry and the reply thereto, no point of order can be raised on any matter contained in the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is it exactly.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, who has charge of this very important measure, the reason for this somewhat unusual request?

Mr. MOON. The committee directed the chairman to make this request. It is the unanimous action of the committee, and if it is not granted then I am instructed to ask for a rule.

There is nothing new in this bill except the difference in the amount of the appropriations, and the making permanent of some law that in the last bill was annual or temporary. I believe there is perhaps one little section on the question of the vacation of clerks, and there are one or two other minor matters.

The matter in this bill is identical as it has been passed by the House at the last session, except the amounts of the appropriations and the making permanent of legislation that was only temporary.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think it ought to be stated that there are a few items not covered by the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MOON. I said there might be some other minor matters that I do not recall.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is the motor-truck matter.

Mr. MANN. And the appointment of a commission.

Mr. STEENERSON. The appointment of a commission and the aeroplane provision and the motor-truck provision, which do change existing law.

Mr. MOON. No; I do not understand that.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is new law.

Mr. MOON. It is new law, I concede.

Mr. STEENERSON. It was not covered by the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MOON. Those were covered in the last bill, but the aeroplane proposition in the last bill was carried under the steamboat appropriation. It is now carried under the inland-transportation provision, and a limitation is made on the amount to be appropriated. That is all the difference, as I understand it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I agree with the gentleman that the committee were unanimous in requesting the chairman to make this request, but I did not think the gentleman's statement of the effect of it, that it embraced new legislation only on the salary proposition, was full enough.

Mr. MOON. The new legislation on the salary proposition is simply the legislation that we have passed before, with certain modifications.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is to make permanent the changes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the best way to get rid of this is to object. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I was not looking for that objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that. It is very important. I simply wanted the House to understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I was unable to hear plainly what the unanimous-consent request was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asked unanimous consent that every section, paragraph, and item in this bill brought in here should be considered in order, notwithstanding the general rules of the House. If the gentleman from Illinois knows what is in the bill he knows whether he wants to object or not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Still reserving the right to object, I do not see the necessity of this or the advisability of it, and I object.

Mr. MOON. The necessity is this: Of course, the House will grant a rule to do the very thing I am asking to do by unanimous consent. It will take up an hour or two in the disposition of the rule. There is nothing in the bill except that that has been stated. It is the unanimous request of the committee. The gentleman will just delay us two hours to-morrow in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to six hours, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON, and the other half by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be confined to not more than six hours, and that half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON, and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBBINS. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask whether the general debate is to be limited to the bill.

Mr. MOON. No; it is general debate, and you can talk about anything you choose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. MOON was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee propose to use any of his time?

Mr. MOON. Not just now, if the gentleman will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill proposes to appropriate about $359,000,000. It provides for all of the ordinary activities of the Post Office Department, and it especially provides for the continuation of the increased compensation granted in the current Post Office appropriation bill—for the $200 increased compensation for the men who are in the supervisory positions of the department.

The current law provides that the clerks in the first and second class offices and carriers in the City Delivery Service and railway mail clerks should have their compensation increased $200 for the current fiscal year. It provides also that during the current fiscal year the men in these three branches of the Postal Service shall not be entitled to automatic promotion, as the salary increases were limited to the current fiscal year.

The law provided also that all salaries above $2,200 should be increased 5 per cent; that all salaries between $1,500 and $2,200 should be increased 10 per cent; that all salaries between $1,000 and $1,500 should be increased 15 per cent; that all salaries and wages from $1,000 down should be increased 20 per cent. This was for a single year only.

The bill also provided last year that a new classification should be enacted for clerks and carriers in the first and second class post offices and for carriers in the City Delivery Service, which would increase their compensation from $800, as the law provided before, to $1,200 and make it from $1,000 to $1,500, according to the class. It provided also that the number of classes in the Railway Mail Service should have an increase of $200 per class, whereas before this law was enacted the railway postal clerks should receive $900 as an initial salary and running up to $1,800. The new classification provided that the entire personnel should start at $1,100 and go up to $2,000.

Prior to the enactment of this law the law provided that the man entering the Postal Service should begin with an initial salary as a clerk or carrier at $800, and that after a year's service in a single class he would go up $100. So that the second year of his service he would get $900, and at the end of the second year of the permanent service he would go up to $1,000, and the following year to $1,100, and the next year, if the appropriations were made for an increase in compensation, he might go up to $1,200. But since the Congress never appropriated for the total amount required to promote all the men in the next class to the highest, all the men in the lower classes below the highest were not promoted to the higher class. The difference between this bill and that law is that these men are to be promoted from the class in which they are on the last of July, 1919, automatically after they have served one year in the class in which they find themselves on that date.

So that, for example, if a man serves in class three from the 1st of July, 1918, to the 1st of July, 1919, even though he receives an increase in his compensation of $200 during the fiscal year 1918–19, he would still on the 1st of next July be entitled to an automatic promotion to the next higher grade, which would give him $100 additional to his compensation.

The men in this service have a hard struggle to begin with. They are men of exceptional intelligence. They are required to acquire a knowledge of the Postal Service which, in fact, makes them experts in the line. No man can enter the service under ordinary circumstances without having passed a civil-service examination proving his qualifications. After he has passed the examination, as a rule he is appointed as a substitute, and in the large cities of the United States he is compelled by the conditions which surround the service to work at least four years as a substitute before he is able to obtain a regular appointment.

During the four years of his substitute service it is fair to say that he does not make more than an average of $40 a month. It has been said that he does not make more than $35 a month. So that he is not receiving a very munificent compensation for the work he does. What does he do while he is rendering substitute service? He substitutes for some man who is off duty, but what else does he do? He is required to report for duty every morning, and if he lives in a city like Chicago, which is 25 miles long and 8 miles wide, it can be readily understood that he can not report for duty to the post office without having to pay car fare, because the post office is nearly in the center of the city, north and south, and on the extreme east side of the city. After he pays car fare, as he must do in order to report for duty, he then sits around and waits to ascertain whether or not his services are needed during the day. If they are not needed, he is told so and he goes home, and he has to pay his car fare home, and he makes nothing. He does this every day during his four-year period of probation, so to speak. Then at the end of four years he finds himself or has found himself appointed regularly, and the regular appointment up to within a few years gave him $600 a year. That was finally increased from $600 to $800, and this bill increases it now to $1,000. Will anyone say that $1,000, after a man has served four years probationary service, receiving a compensation during that period of $40 a month, out of which he must pay his car fare, is excessive? Will anyone say that the man who occupies one of the clerical positions in the Postal Service, who receives a permanent appointment at an initial salary of $1,000, who is required to be on duty 10 hours every day, during which he is required to do 8 hours' actual work, and during the period when he ought to be asleep is also required to study schemes for the distribution of mail, is overpaid?

What are schemes? It will be well understood by men in the Postal Service what I mean when I say "schemes," but it may not be well understood by the general public. The study of the distribution schemes means that a man must learn to throw a letter which comes into his hands into the box which will give the letter the quickest dispatch on the first train, and he must learn to throw these letters with an accuracy that will make him 99 per cent perfect in his examination. It takes him about two hours every day during all the period of his service to study these schemes, because he is required to be examined every 30 days as to his efficiency during the period of his service. After he has done all this and has learned every post office in the State in which he resides and knows every train that reaches every town the earliest, he is given another scheme to study, and after he learns that he must forget the first; so he finds himself in a position where during all of his life, if he remains in the Postal Service all of his life, he is in a constant study of learning new schemes and forgetting old ones—taking examinations to see whether or not he is perfect.

What do the carriers do? They go through this same process of probation. They are appointed after a long period of waiting as substitutes, and they are required to learn the scheme of distribution for the district over which they deliver the mail. It frequently happens in the great cities—in fact, always happens—that they schedule a man for the delivery of his district up to the last second of his endurance, and if they find a man is able to make the delivery of all the letters in his territory 30 minutes sooner than the schedule provides, they add another block or two to the territory.

They make him speed up, in other words, and if, perchance, they find that by speeding up he can still have a moment's leisure time they send an inspector to his district with him, and the inspector follows him along and sets the pace. The inspector does not have to make the delivery or the distribution, but he sets the speed the man must walk. The inspector does not carry the load; the letter carrier does that. I think the First Assistant Postmaster General said the other day in response to a question asked by me that the average load of a carrier is 40 pounds.

I have seen carriers with loads of 150 pounds. Of course, the average would not be perhaps more than 40, but it is not the average; it is the maximum load that breaks the man. The lightest load. of course, is play, but the heavy load is truck-horse work. In addition to being a truck horse, the man must have intelligence; he must have knowledge; he must have experience; he must be sober; he must dress well; he must have a constitution that will stand the inclement weather; he must be able to keep the speed set by the department; and the department, through the post offices in the great cities, sets the pace. They know how many letters each man delivers and how long it took him to deliver to a certain apartment building, whether he was in the apartment building longer than he ought to be, whether it took him longer to go through a single block than it should take him. If it did, complaint is filed and demerits are charged up against his record. If they want, by any chance, to discriminate against a man and reduce the compensation which he is earning by right of service, they can charge him up with 500 demerits. Five hundred demerits means next thing to the sliding board, and they grease the sliding board when they want to send him down, but, in any case, demerits reduce the compensation he receives. If he is now receiving $1,200 a year and the superintendent under whom he works is not as generous in his consideration of the man's rights as he ought to be, to put it mildly, he may find a way to charge demerits up against this man.

That results sometimes in the reduction of compensation to $100 less salary, sometimes $200, sometimes as much as $300 reduction in his salary. Then what happens? Why he has got to go over the same gamut again. He must start in to make good again, and if he has been getting $1,200 and he has been reduced to $900, why he starts to serve a year in the $900 grade, through which he has passed long years before, and at the end of a year's satisfactory service in that grade he goes up to $1,000, and then up to $1,100, and then to $1,200 again. Then, if he is continuing to slow up a little as he grows old, a new inspector, a younger man, with greater speed, is put onto his tracks, walks with him, talks with him, sees that he delivers the mail, and not with the ordinary speed of the ordinary man doing an ordinary day's work, but with the speed of a trotting horse, and if the inspector by force or push is able to force this man to make greater speed than his schedule provides the schedule is shortened up and he is compelled to keep the speed, and then if he is not fast enough under the new speed schedule, if he runs behind the schedule time, he is thrown in the scrap heap perhaps, and the scrap heap is a bad place for a man who has served his Government faithfully for 20 or 25 years, and he has learned nothing that is of any use to him anywhere else in the world. He has learned to be an expert in the Government service. The knowledge that he has acquired in the service is of great value to the Government, because it is expert knowledge.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Just a minute. But that knowledge is not salable in the commercial life of America, because it is not in keeping with the needs of commercial houses. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman what redress the carrier has for the superintendent's treatment of him or if the inspector's recommendations are unfair?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, there is no remedy. The inspector's recommendations are always fair. That is to say, they are always adhered to and the other man has no remedy.

Mr. MAPES. He can be demoted, and he has no redress?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Of course, what ought to happen and what I would like to see happen some day is that there shall be a board, a trial board, to which all cases of complaint shall go and that no superintendent of a bureau under which a man works who files the complaint shall sit as a trial judge on the board. But it is said by the administrative officers of the department that that would destroy the discipline. I do not think it does. Now, take for example in my State. We have a civil-service law which every person obtaining employment in the State, the county, or city must pass, but the employing officer, while he can file complaint against the person who goes in this employment, can not try the case. The trial of the case is by the civil-service commission, and the trial of all cases of all men in this service should be by boards appointed by the civil-service commission, in my judgment. Now, I do not say that any great injustice has been done to men recently, but there have been cases within the last few years where great injustice was done to the men. For example, it was decided that a letter carrier and a collector were two different classes of men. Now, the law says that so much compensation shall be made to a letter carrier according to the class in which he serves, but it does not say that there shall be any distinction between a carrier and a collector. Now, of course a collector carries mail as well as the man who delivers mail. They are both carriers. There can be no distinction; but the Post Office Department, through the Postmaster General, decided notwithstanding the law that there is a distinction, and the Congress, I am happy to say, did not agree with the Postmaster General, and it in the next bill declared, and it is the law, that every one of these men should be restored to the position they formerly occupied, and that a carrier and collector were both carriers without distinction. It has been said that a collector does not need as much intelligence as the man who delivers mail, but every one of those men have been compelled to learn how to deliver mail, and it makes no difference whether a man is assigned to the delivery or the collection of mail, he is still a carrier and entitled to all the rights which the law grants to him.

Now, we have for example a condition in the Railway Mail Service. The Railway Mail Service is in a class by itself. There was a time when nearly all the railway mail clerks worked on postal cars, in railway post offices, so to speak. Nearly all mail was distributed as the train moved along. That has been in a large measure changed, and now we make distributions to a large extent in railway terminal post offices. This resulted in taking off the road a great many trains that moved the mail—those through cars—and on the short lines we find that instead of having mail distributed as the train moves along for early dispatch to the person to whom the mail is addressed, that now on this kind of service they have pouch delivery. Now, for example, we will take three points as a triangle, and we will say Washington is one point, Philadelphia is another, and Baltimore is another, and this would be considered short-line service; so if a letter originated in Washington, instead of being dispatched to Philadelphia it might be dispatched to Baltimore for pouching, if that is the point where pouching is done, and then redistributed in pouches, say, to Washington or to Philadelphia, as the case may be, and in that way lose two or three days in the delivery of letters. So we have had two services under the new-fangled notion of handling railway mail. It is true that it costs a little less to handle the mail in the way in which it is now handled by rail than it used to cost. First, of course, we used to send mail direct at so much a ton or pound. Now we send mail according to the space basis, and we pay for the space we use. Personally I am in favor of the space basis. I believe it is the best way to handle the movement of the mail. I believe we would get more for our money without doing any injustice to the carrying company, but if we do not supply the equipment to move all the mail as expeditiously as it ought to be moved we are going to do a great injustice to the business public of the country.

And the result is that we have complaints from all over the United States because the people are not getting their mail as promptly as they formerly did. Now, for example, I had a special delivery letter sent from New York to me on the 6th of this month. The presumption is that the man who put the delivery stamp on that letter put it on because he wanted expeditious delivery. I was rather surprised to find that that letter did not reach my desk until noon on the day of the 9th, three days from New York. Now, they say that we are delivering more special delivery letters than we used to, and that we are doing that because of the efficiency of the Postal Service in contradistinction to the inefficiency of the wire service. Well, if it takes three days to get a special delivery letter from New York to Washington, I do not know how much more efficient that is than the telegraph. But since the Government took control of the telegraph lines, I want to say that it takes about, on an average, three days now to get a telegram from Chicago. I used to get them in three hours. Of course, if we do not give the service to the public we can always be sure to report a surplus in the postal revenues. If you took off all the trains and collected all the postage, of course you would have a still greater surplus. And the surplus, notwithstanding the increased compensation this year, is $19,000,000.

Now, I do not think the Postal Service is organized for profit. The people of the United States think it is organized for the purpose of giving service. Of course, we can save money if we reduce the service. We have, for example, in my town cases where they have reduced the number of deliveries from five to three.

Well, all the mail is delivered in the three deliveries, but first it put an unjustifiable burden on the man who carries the mail by making him carry a load that no man ought to be asked to carry, and then it compels the receiver of the mail to wait for an important letter three or four hours, and sometimes a day or two, longer than he ought to have to wait. But if we reduce the number of deliveries, of course we can increase the surplus revenues.

Now, it was said last year when we increased the compensation of the carriers and the clerks that we were going to bankrupt the Postal Service; that it could not stand up under the load, under the excessive charge. But it stood up. The service has not been any better. That is not the fault of those who are receiving the compensation under the act. It is the fault of those who have failed to give the service and yet charge for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about 15 minutes more.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes more.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman going to touch upon the subject of supervisory mail clerks?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. I did in the beginning.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman alluded to it, but I thought he was going to explain it more fully.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say now in connection with the supervisory officials of the Postal Service that we continue in this bill the $200 annual increase that we authorized last year. That $200 annual increase, consisting of a 5, 10, and 15 per cent increase, depending on the size of the salary, will be continued until July 1, 1920.

This bill provides for the permanent compensation fixed in the bill for the carriers and the clerks and the railway mail clerks. But the law is not permanent as to the supervisory officials. However, I have a bill pending, which has not yet been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the reclassification of the supervisory officials of the service. In addition to that, this bill itself provides for the appointment of a commission of 10 Members of Congress, 5 from the House and 5 from the Senate, who shall thoroughly investigate the Postal Service with a view of reclassifying all the employees in the service and bringing them up to a better standard of efficiency and better standard of compensation, more equitably distributed, the thought being to give the men who are occupying important supervisory places compensation commensurate with the responsibilities which they assume. Take, for example, the superintendent of city delivery in the city from which I come. That is the city with which I am most familiar, but it is typical of the service. Leroy Stewart, the superintendent of city delivery, gets $3,200 a year. If he was employed in any other service in the world with like responsibility he would get $25,000 a year. He is a man of exceptional ability. There is not a record of a letter that passes through that post office that he can not point out to you at any hour of the day. He can tell you every cost of every item and the time of the delivery of every letter, the place where the letter was delayed, if it was delayed, and the cause for its delay. He has 2,900 men under him. No private concern in the United States would require the services of a man of his exceptional ability in command of such a force, calling for the technical knowledge that he must possess, and expect to get him for $3,200 a year.

Then there is Frank Galbraith, the superintendent of mails there, than which there is no man living, and I do not care who he is, knows as much about the Mail Service, and I think that would be agreed to by the First Assistant Postmaster General. He has about 4,000 men under him, and he gets $3,200 a year. He has charge of the dispatch of the mail, the distribution of the mail, and the receipt of the mail. He must have a knowledge of all the details of all the work connected with the handling of the mail. He is on duty every night, on duty every day. And, by the way, 70 per cent of the men in the Postal Service work nights, as you know. Some go on at 12 o'clock in the daytime and they work until 8 o'clock at night. Other men go on at 4 o'clock in the daytime and work until 12 o'clock midnight. Other men go on at 8 o'clock at night and work until 4 o'clock in the morning, and so on. They work while we sleep, in order that we may be able to enjoy the privilege of reading the intelligence which comes from the mail; and while they are doing that, the carrier, in season and out, in sunshine and in storm, going from door to door, is carrying the messages of love and affection and sorrow and hope to every house from all sections of the world.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would not expect that the salary of these two very capable and efficient officials that he has mentioned would be increased to anything like the sums which he has stated they could get in private employment?

Mr. MADDEN. No, indeed; because I think there is an honor connected with the public service that should incite a man to do the work that he can do for the public and make a contribution of some of his genius without pay.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman think that this commission might also have authority to recommend the reduction of salaries—of perhaps that of the head of the department?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes. I think this commission, if it is authorized, will have the authority to recommend whatever it may think proper to recommend, not only the reduction of the salary of the head of the department but the increase of the salary of the lowest man on the rung of the ladder. Personally I will be glad to see the department so reorganized as to make every man in the service eligible to the position of Postmaster General if he had the qualifications.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the commission will make such an investigation if it will have that result.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to make men eligible to the high offices. I would like to see men in the service stimulated by the hope that some day, if endowed with sufficient genius, they could qualify themselves to be Postmaster General of the United States. It is only through such opportunities that men develop the best that is in them; and at any rate, if I shall have anything to say about the thing in the future, I hope to be able to convince others that this department should at least permit every man in the service to rank at least up as high as First Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. It is a fact, is it not, that in the Postmaster General's report he recommends a law placing the Assistant Postmasters General under the civil service?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not read the report.

Mr. BLACK. He does.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no doubt he does, because I have talked with him a good many times about it, and I know he favors it. But I would go still further, and I would take the Postal Department out of politics. I would make it impossible for the Postmaster General, whoever he might be, to be the political go-between of the President in matters of legislation, and I would insist that this department, which is strictly a business department after all, should have no semblance of politics anywhere.

Now, of course I know that lots of men in the House will not agree with me on that. I do not expect them to, but I do not care whether they do or not. I do not care what party is in power; personally, I would eliminate politics from the department from the top to the bottom. [Applause.] I would make efficiency the only standard by which to gauge the right of any man to occupy a position of power in the department. The Post Office Department is a department that affects every home in the land. Every housewife, every child, every man, every woman looks to this department as their department. This is the one department that reaches every home, and the one department to which every home looks for a message connecting that home with the loved ones who are far away. And so I say that it should be run with an eye single to the service of the American people, without respect to any thought of profit. I say that every man in the service, while required to perform his duty and submit to authority uncomplainingly, should be considered as worthy of the best treatment compatible with efficiency and discipline that it is possible for the Government to give.

I do not intend to convey the thought that the Government is the only one upon whom obligation rests, but I want it to be distinctly understood that while I believe the Government ought to be a good employer, every man and woman in the Government employ has an obligation to the Government, and that they, by their action, by their work, by their intelligence, by their patriotism, should command not only the respect of the people of the Nation, but that they should do everything within their power to economize in the department in keeping with efficiency and render the service that the Government has the right to demand and that such discipline for failure to do that as is just and fair and decent should be meted out by the men in control of the department.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to hear the gentleman's views on this particular phase of the subject, and I trust that the condition which he so eloquently depicts may in the near future be realized. But does the gentleman think that that can be accomplished under this commission, which is restricted simply to reclassifying and readjusting salaries? The commission would have no authority under the language of the bill to make recommendations to promote the efficiency or change the methods that are now in vogue.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, if there is anything lacking in the wording of the proposed section creating the commission which does not give it the authority that it ought to have, I will favor such an amendment as will give it the most comprehensive authority.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that the commission that is going to make the study ought to look into it?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought to look into every phase of the service.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to be limited to the readjustment and reclassification of salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course that could not be done without looking into every other phase of the service, it seems to me.

Mr. WALSH. No; but it may not permit a recommendation to change the method of doing those things. It might change the salaries of the men doing them, but it could not change the method or plan under which the people operate.

Mr. MADDEN. I will agree now with the gentleman from Massachusetts that I will favor such modifications of the language as will make it possible for the commission, if it is decided to have a commission, to make a most comprehensive study of every phase of the Postal Service.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yields back five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman use some time on that side?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5058. An act to authorize the counties of Morton and Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bismarck, N. Dak.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Senate concurrent resolution 27.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of Senate Document 310, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "Revenue bill of 1918," and that there be printed separately 10,000 additional copies each of the majority and minority reports and individual views of members of the Committee on Finance on H. R. 12863, the revenue bill of 1918, for the use of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5058. An act to authorize the counties of Morton and Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bismarck, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statements showing exchanges made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices by the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, including the United States Marine Corps (H. Doc. No. 1574); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements showing for the four months ending October 31, 1918, the average number of employees of the Treasury Department proper, and of the field service of the department, receiving increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum, and the average number of grades receiving the same at each lower rate (H. Doc. No. 1575); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, for the maintenance for the Division of Industrial Hygiene (H. Doc. No. 1576); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting estimate of the average number of employees of the Government Printing Office to receive increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum and one employee to receive increased compensation at the rate of $20 per annum (H. Doc. No. 1577); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. COOPER of Ohio, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12995) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a combined bridge and dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 851), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12996) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 852), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12997) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 853), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 13339) to provide for the retention of all uniforms issued to soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States who have been honorably discharged, and providing for the use of same without limitation, and for one month's extra pay upon being discharged; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 13340) intended to equalize status and pay of officers in the National Naval Volunteers and Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 13341) to give every soldier and sailor in the Army and Navy of the United States the uniform he is wearing at the time of his honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 13342) to provide that the United States shall cooperate with the States in promoting the health of the rural population of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 13343) to provide that each honorably discharged private soldier and sailor of the United States Army and Navy may keep his uniform and wearing apparel at the time of his discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 13344) to amend sections 10 and 37 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs

Also, a bill (H. R. 13345) providing that officers who have received temporary promotion in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army be retained in their advanced grades until promoted; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VAN DYKE: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 365) appointing a joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate salaries, condition of employment, etc., of civil employees of the Government; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DILL: A bill (H. R. 13346) granting a pension to Margaret Howell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 13347) granting an increase of pension to George Ware; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13348) granting an increase of pension to James H. Crosser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13349) granting an increase of pension to Bennett R. Campbell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Resolutions of the Kiwanis Club, of Delaware, Ohio, favoring November 11 as Thanksgiving Day; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of postal employees of post office at Baraboo, Sauk County, Wis., to Congressman Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, and Senators Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE and Hon. I. L. LENROOT, to support the McKellar retirement and pension bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the National Association of Credit Men, for speedy enactment of the revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Resolutions of the members of Division No. 72, Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, relating to Irish independence; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolution of Sarsfield Literary Association, of Woonsocket, R. I., asking Congress to insist that American representatives to the peace conference exert the full weight of their influence and office to the end that the people of Ireland shall determine their own form of government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Resolutions of board of directors of Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, relative to reconstruction measures; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: Protest by the McCormick-Saelzer Co., Redding, Cal., against the proposed tax of 10 per cent on arms and ammunition; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Protest of Mrs. Frank Demarest and 22 members of Quincy Grange, Michigan, against post-office zone system; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, protest of O. F. Bissell and officers and members of Richland Grange against postal-zone system; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1918.

Rabbi Gustav N. Hausmann, Litt. D., of New York City, offered the following prayer:

Merciful God and Heavenly Father, Thou who didst grant unto us the privilege of being victorious on the side of right against might; Thou who didst choose America to enlighten the nations of the earth; Thou who didst endow us with the gift and spirit of democracy, we beseech Thee to continue to guide and lead us. Make us worthy of these blessings. May our victories, triumphs, and successes not make us arrogant and haughty. May it not be said of this new-chosen Nation what was said of the ancient-chosen people: "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked * * * then he forsook the God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation."

Bless, O God, this great Republic with abundance and honor, with peace and good will. We especially beseech Thee to bless, shield, and protect the President of the United States, the crusader of modern democracy. Bless the Congress of the United States of America, that it may truly exemplify democracy, equality, and justice. May the deliberations at the peace conference abroad result for the great benefit of humanity and redound to the honor of this Nation. May Thy name thus be glorified in and through us. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. ASHURST and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LANDS IN TEXAS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report as to the necessity and advisability of purchasing lands for the Alabama and Conshatta Indians located in Polk County, Tex., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indians Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13261. An act providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required; and

H. R. 13277. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred Senate resolution 346, directing the Secretary of War to transmit to the Senate the names of all commissioned officers in the Army and other persons who have been, since April 6, 1917, authorized by the War Department to purchase ordnance, quartermaster, or other supplies for the military departments, etc., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each without amendment:

H. R. 12860. An act granting to members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female); Army field clerks; field clerks, Quartermaster Corps; and civil employees of the Army pay and allowances during any period of involuntary captivity by the enemy of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the usual compensation of Representatives in Congress to those Members of the House who have been discharged from their military or naval duties.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 5180) providing for the investigation of certain lands in central Washington with a view to their reclamation; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5181) to permit certain officers and enlisted men to retain parts of their equipment and their uniforms and to wear the uniform upon occasions of ceremony;

A bill (S. 5182) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918; and

A bill (S. 5183) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 5184) granting a pension to Effie E. Milton (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5185) granting a pension to Mary M. Walden; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BECKHAM:

A bill (S. 5186) granting an increase of pension to James M. Gibbons; and

A bill (S. 5187) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Evans; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 5188) granting promotion to Robert M. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read by their titles and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 13261. An act providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required; and

H. R. 13277. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I send to the desk a communication to Congress sent to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee by the Director General of Railroads, and I ask that the same be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I shall not ask the Secretary to read the letter, as I presume most Senators have read it, but I ask unanimous consent to make a few explanatory remarks as to the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 11, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The question of railroad legislation is of such vital importance to the country that I take the liberty of submitting to you my views as to the course that should now be pursued. The war is ended and we are now confronted with the necessity either of legislating intelligently about the railroad problem at this session of the Congress or of promptly returning the railroads to their owners.

Less than three months of the present session of the Congress remain. It will be impossible, I presume, to secure legislation in this short period providing a permanent solution of the railroad problem. This being true, only three courses are open: (1) Government operation of the railroads for one year and nine months following a proclamation of peace, which would mean, in my judgment, Government operation for a period in no event longer than two years and three months; (2) the prompt return of the railroads to private control; or (3) extension of the period of Federal control to five years.

I am convinced that it is wholly impracticable, as well as opposed to the public interest, to attempt to operate the railroads under the provisions of the present law. In the first place, the time is too short, and, secondly, the present legislation is inadequate.

As to the shortness of time, it is clear to me that the railroads can not be successfully operated under Federal control during the next two years in the face of an automatic transfer to private control at the end of that time or of an earlier relinquishment by proclamation of the President. Every month that passes will bring more clearly to the minds of the officers and employees the fundamental change in management that is impending, and the question as to what that change means to the individual. It is against human nature that there can be complete and single-minded attention to duty under such difficult circumstances. This will be especially true on account of the inevitable discussion as to what ought to be done. Already this discussion is in full swing, and its reaction on officers and employees can not be consistent with the complete concentration upon their daily duties. State railroad commissions, railroad security holders, railroad executives, shippers' organizations, and other interests are naturally and properly discussing the subject and proposing various solutions. However desirable the discussion is for the crystallization of public sentiment, it can not result otherwise than to produce a state of uncertainty and ferment among the vast army of railroad officers and employees who will inevitably feel that they face a rapidly approaching change in management.

No business in the United States so imperatively requires disciplined organization and composed conditions of operation, for officials as well as for employees, as the railroad business. Not only does the safety of the lives of millions of passengers depend upon such disciplined and efficient organization, but the commerce of the country as well. To keep this vast army of officers and employees in a state of uncertainty and ferment for a period of two years would be harmful in the highest degree to the public interest. It would be impossible to prevent a serious impairment of the morale of the railroad organizations.

From the standpoint of needed improvements the period of two years is entirely too short a time within which to plan and carry out the comprehensive improvements which ought to be made to meet the country's requirements under peace conditions. Many of the improvements could hardly be completed and put into operation inside of the two-year period, and under such circumstances and facing a change to private management at the end of two years, it would be unwise in the highest degree to make the improvements and impossible to secure the hearty cooperation of the railroad corporations.

Because of the inadequacy of the present legislation, the authority of the States and the Federal Government has been left in doubt by provisions which I opposed when the bill was under discussion. Conflict between State and Federal jurisdictions will grow more acute under this law. The revolving fund appropriated by the Congress will be insufficient to carry the Federal operation for a two-year period. More than that, it is of the utmost importance to the commerce, industry, and life of the American people that a comprehensive program of improvements to railroad properties shall be carried forward over a period of at least five years; such a program will involve expenditures of at least $500,000,000 per annum or $2,500,000,000 for the five-year period. The needed funds are not provided by the present law. Moreover, it is difficult under the present law, without the consent of the corporations to carry forward a comprehensive plan of joint improvements, which, to be of value to the public, must of itself disregard the selfish and irreconcilable competitive interests of the various carriers. Many terminal improvements, to be genuinely serviceable to the public, must be made without regard to the interest of any particular carrier. Therefore, agreements between the Government and the railroads affected will, in many instances, be impossible, and if the Government should proceed with such improvements, using the people's money for the purpose, without securing the carriers' consent, litigation would undoubtedly arise upon the termination of Federal control, with the danger that a large part of the Government's investment in the properties might be lost.

Upon the efficiency of the transportation machine in America depends in great measure the future prosperity of the Nation. Involved in this prosperity is the extension of our foreign trade. We produce so much more than we consume that markets must be found for that surplus. Those markets are the competitive markets of the world. We must be able to enter them upon equal terms with any other nation. Our transportation system, both on land and water, must therefore function at the highest point of efficiency and at the lowest possible cost if we are to get our reasonable and fair share of the world's trade and in turn be able to keep a prosperous, contented, and happy population at home.

To attempt to continue Federal control under the inadequate provisions of the present Federal control act and for the very brief period it authorizes would be to multiply our difficulties and invite failure. On the other hand, I am convinced from the experience of the past year that the return of the railroads to the old competitive conditions will be hurtful alike to the public interest and to the railroads themselves. This course, however, will bring fewer evils in its train than the unsatisfactory, if not impotent, Federal control provided for by the present act. The railroads were taken over as a war measure. They have been operated during the past year for the paramount purpose of winning the war. I think it will be generally admitted that the war service has been successfully rendered, and I am sure that experience of great value and benefit has been gained not only for the public but for the railroads themselves during this brief test.

There is one, and to my mind only one, practicable and wise alternative, and that is to extend the period of Federal control from the one year and nine months provided by the present law to five years, or until the 1st day of January, 1924. This extension would take the railroad question out of politics for a reasonable period. It would give composure to railroad officers and employees. It would admit of the preparation and carrying out of a comprehensive program of improvements of the railroads and their terminal facilities which would immensely increase the efficiency of the transportation machine. It would put back of the railroads the credit of the United States during the five-year period so that the financing of these improvements could be successfully carried out. It would offer the necessary opportunity under proper conditions to test the value of unified control, and the experience thus gained would of itself indicate the permanent solution of the railroad problem.

The American people have a right to this test. They should not be denied it. It is to their interest that it should be done. In my opinion it is the only practicable and reasonable method of determining the right solution of this grave economic problem. I am not now and have not been for the past year interested in proving or disproving the theory of Government ownership or any other kind of theory. The railroads have been operated for the past year with the purpose of serving efficiently the paramount needs of the war and at the same time furnishing the best possible service to the public, whether such operation tended to prove or disprove any theory of railroad control, no matter what it might be. I have formed no opinion myself as to what is the best disposition of the railroad problem, because the test has not been sufficient to prove conclusively the right solution of the problem. I believe that a five-year test will give the American people the right answer. An ounce of experience is worth a ton of theory, and with the start already made under war conditions it would be a comparatively simple matter to complete the test so well begun and thereby gain the invaluable experience which will determine the solution of a problem which has vexed our State and National politics and our economic development for the past generation.

There are those who may say that an extension of five years for such a test will mean Government ownership. Personally I do not believe it. But whether such a test would indicate that the ultimate solution shall be Government ownership or a modified form of private ownership under effective Federal regulation should not cause us to hesitate or refuse to act. It seems to me that in a democracy like ours, where public opinion and the judgment of the majority must finally control, the plain duty is to take those steps which will fully inform public opinion, so that the judgment may be based upon knowledge rather than upon theory. Any test which will illumine the subject so completely that public opinion may operate upon it intelligently would seem to me to be desirable in any circumstances.

In this connection, may I draw your attention to the statement I made before the committee of the Senate on January 21, 1918, in reply to a Senator who asked if I believed "in the Government ownership of railroads." I said:

I do not, or I have not, at least, felt that it was necessary to take the actual ownership of the railroads. I believe that it will be impossible after the return of peace to restore the competitive conditions to the same extent as they existed prior to the outbreak of the war. I favor some form of governmental regulation and control of a far stronger, more intelligent, and effective character than we have had heretofore, because I am satisfied that a stronger Government control will be demanded and will have to be worked out, both in the interest of the public and in the interest of the security holders of these railroads.

Those who may oppose an extension of five years should face the situation squarely and acknowledge that they prefer the immediate return of the railroads to private control under the old conditions without remedial legislation. It is idle to talk of a return to private control under legislation which will cure the defects of the existing laws. There is neither time nor opportunity for such legislation at present. It is impossible and hopeless for the Government to attempt the operation of the railroads for 21 months after peace under the present law. Therefore the country should squarely face the condition that the railroads must promptly go back into private control with all existing legal difficulties unless the only practicable alternative, viz, an extension of time, is promptly granted.

I hope that the Congress in its wisdom will grant a five-year period for a test of unified railroad operation under proper provisions of law which will make that test effective and at the same time take the railroad question out of politics while the test is being made. Unless this is done I do not hesitate to say the railroads should be returned to private ownership at the earliest possible moment. The President has given me permission to say that this conclusion accords with his own view of the matter.

Cordially, yours, (Sgd.) W. G. McADOO.
Director General of Railroads.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, this is a most remarkable document, coming as it does immediately or within a few days after the message of the President, in which the President said:

The question which causes me the greatest concern is the question of the policy to be adopted toward the railroads. I frankly turn to you for counsel upon it. I have no confident judgment of my own.

A few days later comes a deliberate, well-considered plan, which Mr. McAdoo says is made with the approval of the President, not to keep the railroads for 21 months after the close of the war, but for 5 years, to make a test. The President, on the contrary, in his message frankly said he had no judgment of his own on the subject, but suggested three alternatives:

We can simply release the roads and go back to the old conditions of private management, unrestricted competition, and multiform regulation by both State and Federal authorities, or we can go to the opposite extreme and establish complete Government control, accompanied, if necessary, by actual Government ownership, or we can adopt an intermediate course of modified private control under a more unified and affirmative public regulation and under such alterations of the law as will permit wasteful competition to be avoided and a considerable degree of unification of administration to be effected; as, for example, by regional corporations, under which the railways of definable areas would be in effect combined in single systems.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss at length what Congress should do, but it seems to me we ought to do this at least: Congress, through its Committee on Interstate Commerce, ought to take action at once upon a railroad bill. We ought to authorize the railroads to coordinate all their facilities, equipment, terminals, route freight where it can be routed cheapest, and the same with passengers, so as to make most effective the entire transportation system of the United States. But this should be done under strong Government control. We ought to regulate the issuance of securities of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, and we ought to authorize the commission not only to regulate the service of the railroads in a unified condition, but give the commission power to compel them to grant unified and effective service; for instance, that the railroads entering New York shall use the New York terminal of the Pennsylvania Railroad. I am not going into a discussion of that; I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to discuss this further, but I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to this proposition, which ought to be taken up by our committee and by Congress at once. This is what Mr. McAdoo said in his letter:

The war is ended and we are now confronted with the necessity either of legislating intelligently about the railroad problem at this session of the Congress or of promptly returning the railroads to their owners.

Then he proceeds to say in the letter that there is no time to legislate at this session of Congress, and that therefore there should be a five years' extension of the period. He says further, in substance, that unless that five-year period is granted the railroads should be turned back at once.

Mr. President, the railroads were taken over presumably by the Government—that was the statement made—for war purposes. It was denied at that time that they were taken over to make a test of Government ownership. Now Mr. McAdoo says we want five years to make a test. A test for what purpose? Not a test for war purposes, but a test for Government ownership. That is the real bottom of the whole thing.

Mr. President, why legislate at this particular three months' session? He says we must have the legislation at this three months' session or we must have an extension. Why not an extra session of Congress? We have had extra sessions after each session for years, and Congress has been in almost continuous session. Why, with all the important legislation that is coming before the country at the conclusion of peace, including the railroads, should we not have an extra session of Congress after the 4th of March to consider this subject, which Mr. McAdoo says must be considered in the next three months or not at all for five years? I should like to know why.

Mr. President, why not be frank? Many of us, or at least some of us, thought that the railroads were taken over for the purpose of inaugurating Government ownership. It was stated, however, that it was a necessity during the war. I for one have not condemned the administration of the railroads. I have done everything in my power to make it a success. I did believe that it was the first step toward establishing in this country Government ownership, and the taking over of the telegraph and the telephone and the cable for war necessities after the war was over rather confirmed me in my judgment on that subject.

But, Mr. President, we have 21 months after the close of the war, which will be considerably over two years yet, to pass a railroad bill providing for complete Federal control and turning the property back to the owners or else deciding in favor of Government ownership.

Now, why not meet the issue frankly and fairly? I believe the reason why they do not wish to meet it now is that they know the people of this country are not in favor of Government ownership, and it is proposed to put Government ownership over under the guise of an extension to make a test of Government control for the period of five years. Congress deliberately acted upon this subject last winter and fixed 21 months as the period within which legislation might be had for the proper control of the railroads when they are turned back, and I see no reason why we should now change that 21 months.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator whether he cares to express an opinion at this time upon the power of Congress to take over the use of the railroads in time of peace without providing for the payment of the value of the property to the owner?

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, it can not take over the use of the railroads—I say of course; in my opinion it can not—in time of peace without paying for the use, or, if the physical property is taken over, without paying the value of the property. And I have grave doubts of the power of Congress to take them over in time of peace simply for the purpose of experiment.

Mr. President, I know of no reason why we should not proceed at once with this very important question and why we should not frame a bill during this session, and if it can not be passed in the three months I know of no reason why there should not be an extra session or why it should not be passed at the next session of Congress. We have ample time for this legislation before the 21 months expire. But Mr. McAdoo says the present legislation is entirely inadequate for the operation from now to the end of the 21 months. He does not suggest in what it is inadequate. He has not been to Congress to ask for legislation to cure the defects in the act. He says that there is a dispute about the authority of the States and the Federal Government. I say absolutely that the Federal Government has not recognized any State authority whatever, but it controlled the railroads absolutely as the Director General saw fit, without regard to State commissions. I am not complaining of it; I am merely stating it as a fact.

Mr. President, as I said before, I am not here to criticize the Railroad Administration. The railroads were earning about $4,000,000,000 per annum when the Government took them over. The rates have been increased about 25 per cent, adding at least a billion dollars to the charges the public has to pay, and I am told that this practically has all been used up, if not more, in increased operating expenses. I am not criticizing it. I have not the figures before me. I simply say I have been told that our Government will be behind this year $200,000,000 in the operation of the railroads, in spite of the enormous increase of rates. We should inquire into that and see what the result of this operation has been.

I do not believe that the American people to-day are very much in favor of Government operation, judged by the experience that they have had during the last year. I am willing to admit that it was an experiment during war, and I am not on my feet to criticize it, but what we should do now is to take up this important problem, pass some legislation which will make the railroads of the country most effective in carrying the freight and handling the great commerce of this country, and then turn them back to their owners, or else decide for Government ownership at once and end this period of uncertainty. Mr. McAdoo says that the 21 months will be a period of uncertainty. Therefore the result he wishes is to increase the uncertainty to five years and have the whole subject in the air at the end of five years.

Mr. President, I predict that at the end of five years it will be made absolutely impossible for private ownership again to assume control of the railroads if they desire to do so. If the administration is not in favor of Government ownership, say so now and let us turn our attention to procuring legislation that will be effective.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator, in view of the fact that many of us are in sympathy with the views he expresses, it might not be inappropriate to introduce a resolution asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to prepare at the earliest possible moment a plan dealing with this question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will introduce such a resolution, but I do not care to take the time now to make any remarks upon it. I thank the Senators for their attention.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that, so far as I understand the situation, the President in his message to Congress touched on the questions involved in the railroad problem, and frankly stated that he had no solution of it to propose, but that he left it entirely with Congress. No other official utterances were given to the committee until last night, when I received a communication from Mr. McAdoo, suggesting that the present status, with certain modifications, be continued for five years.

I have not up to the present time called the Committee on Interstate Commerce together, for the reason that the preliminary business of getting things in shape and getting into harness here in the different committees would have to be gotten out of the way before we could seriously get down to facing the railroad problem.

I do not understand that a recommendation on the part of Mr. McAdoo, or of anyone else, now that the war is over, is anything more than merely his opinion. His opinion may have more weight by virtue of the fact that he has been the Director

General of Railroads, but those of us who are charged with responsibility facing what, in my opinion, is the greatest problem which confronts the American people, one upon which everything is based—our commercial, social, and political life—the proper means of transportation, I take it will face that problem as American citizens and will solve it in the light of the best judgment we can exercise, without taking anyone's preconceived notions about it. To that end I have called the Committee on Interstate Commerce to meet next Thursday morning, giving a week's time in advance for the purpose, that they may so arrange their business as to be present, in order to discuss the status of affairs and to inquire from all those from whom knowledge can be obtained the conditions which now exist, looking toward what action we shall take in meeting the conditions which now confront us.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I welcome the interruption by the Senator from South Carolina, and I was going to state that the Committee on Interstate Commerce had been called together. I would, however, suggest that the chairman give notice to those who wish to be heard before the committee that they appear and be present at the time of the meeting.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Minnesota will allow me, I desire to say that the reason I have not given such notice and have not so indicated is because I believe it is important for the committee to get together, discuss all phases of the question, then decide what line of action they are going to take, and then summon witnesses to develop the line of action which they think it advisable shall be taken.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is true that the letter of the Director General of Railroads is a personal letter, but if the Senator from South Carolina will read the letter at the end of it he will see this:

> The President has given me permission to say that this conclusion accords with his own view of the matter.

The President made no such recommendation in his message delivered only 10 days ago. When did the President give that suggestion to Mr. McAdoo?

AMERICAN COMMITTEE FOR RELIEF IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I scarcely ever ask to have a matter of legislation taken up out of order, but I am impelled to do so this morning. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4785) to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East. I desire to say that great sums of money have been subscribed to take care of the poor Armenians and the Syrians, and it is now desired to form a corporation to hold such funds. The Committee on the Judiciary has passed upon the matter and has reported the bill favorably and without amendment. Its consideration, I think, will take but a moment. I therefore hope that the Senate will permit me to have the bill passed now, as its passage is very necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committe of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4785) to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons, namely, James L. Barton, Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, Charles R. Crane, William Howard Taft, Charles Evans Hughes, Elihu Root, Harry Pratt Judson, Charles E. Beury, Arthur J. Brown, John B. Calvert, William I. Chamberlain, William T. Ellis, James Cardinal Gibbons, Jerome D. Greene, David H. Greer, Harold A. Hatch, William I. Haven, Myron T. Herrick, Hamilton Holt, Frank W. Jackson, Arthur Curtiss James, Frederick Lynch, Vance C. McCormick, Charles S. Macfarland, Henry B. F. Macfarland, William B. Millar, John R. Mott, Frank Mason North, George A. Plimpton, Philip Rhinelander, William Jay Schieffelin, George T. Scott, Albert Shaw, William Sloane, Edward Lincoln Smith, Robert Eliot Speer, James M. Speers, Oscar S. Straus, Charles V. Vickrey, Harry A. Wheeler, Stanley White, Ray Lyman Wilbur, Talcott Williams, and Stephen S. Wise, their associates and successors duly chosen, are hereby incorporated and declared to be a body corporate of the District of Columbia by the name of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East and by that name shall be known and have perpetual succession, with the powers, limitations, and restrictions herein contained.

SEC. 2. That the object for which said corporation is incorporated shall be to provide relief and to assist in the repatriation, rehabilitation, and reestablishment of suffering and dependent people of the Near East and adjacent areas; to provide for the care of orphans and widows, and to conduct any industrial enterprises or operations of a philanthropic character which may, in the judgment of the corporation, be necessary to promote the social, economic, and industrial welfare of those who have been rendered destitute or dependent, directly or indirectly, by the vicissitudes of war, the cruelties of men, or other causes beyond their control.

SEC. 3. That the direction and management of the affairs of the corporation, and the control of its property and funds, shall be vested in a board of trustees, to be composed of the following individuals: James L. Barton, Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, Charles R. Crane, William Howard Taft, Charles Evans Hughes, Elihu Root, Harry Pratt Judson, Charles E. Beury, Arthur J. Brown, John B. Calvert, William I. Chamberlain, William T. Ellis, James Cardinal Gibbons, Jerome D. Greene, David H. Greer, Harold A. Hatch, William I. Haven, Myron T. Herrick, Hamilton Holt, Frank W. Jackson, Arthur Curtiss James, Frederick Lynch, Vance C. McCormick, Charles S. Macfarland, Henry B. F. Macfarland, William B. Millar, John R. Mott, Frank Mason North, George A. Plimpton, Philip Rhinelander, William Jay Schieffelin, George T. Scott, Albert Shaw, William Sloane, Edward Lincoln Smith, Robert Eliot Speer, James M. Speers, Oscar S. Straus, Charles V. Vickrey, Harry A. Wheeler, Stanley White, Ray Lyman Wilbur, Talcott Williams, and Stephen S. Wise, who shall constitute the first board of trustees and constitute the members of the corporation. Vacancies occurring by death, resignation, or otherwise shall be filled by the remaining trustees in such manner as the by-laws shall prescribe, and the persons so elected shall thereupon become trustees and also members of the corporation.

SEC. 4. That the principal office of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but offices may be maintained and meetings of the corporation or of the trustees and committees may be held in other places, such as the by-laws may from time to time fix.

SEC. 5. That the said trustees shall be entitled to take, hold, and administer any securities, funds, or property which may be transferred to them for the purposes and objects hereinbefore enumerated by the existing and unincorporated American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, and such other funds or property as may at any time be given, devised, or bequeathed to them, or to such corporation, for the purposes of the trust, with full power from time to time to adopt a common seal, to appoint officers, whether members of the board of trustees or otherwise, and such employees as may be deemed necessary for carrying on the business of the corporation, and at such salaries or with such remuneration as they may think proper, and full power to adopt by-laws and such rules or regulations as may be necessary to secure the safe and convenient transaction of the business of the corporation.

SEC. 6. That as soon as may be possible after the passage of this act a meeting of the trustees hereinbefore named shall be called by Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, William B. Millar, George T. Scott, James L. Barton, and Charles V. Vickrey, or any six of them, at the Borough of Manhattan, in the city of New York, by notice served in person or by mail, addressed to each trustee at his place of residence; and the said trustees named herein, or a majority thereof, being assembled, shall organize and proceed to adopt by-laws, to elect officers, and generally to organize the said corporation.

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the bill now under consideration is an emergency piece of legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is suffering among the people over there, and it is desired to form this corporation for the purpose of holding and administering the money which has been subscribed for their relief. It is proposed to be only a temporary organization and one which is purely charitable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina inform the Senate, if we pass this bill, how soon we may expect that it will reach the President in order to receive his signature?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea as to that; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the Senator tell me how bills which we pass are to be presented to the President for signature?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not know what arrangements have been made; but I hope we shall pass this bill. Let us make a test case of this, and see what will be the result after we pass this bill. Then probably the Senator from Michigan will get the information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then it is urgent for us to pass it, but not necessarily urgent that it shall be signed?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think probably there will be some way out of it, though I am not now able to inform the Senator. I am ignorant on the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if those who are proposed to be members of this corporation are American citizens?

Mr. OVERMAN. The trustees are to be American citizens.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Has unanimous consent been given for consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may we not ask a few questions about the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I did not understand that the matter had been submitted to the Senate for unanimous consent but that the bill was being first read, and the question to proceed to its consideration has not been submitted since the bill was read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the question was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, the Senate did not so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair distinctly made the inquiry as to whether there was objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate did not understand that, I will say to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate did not hear, that is all; but the inquiry was made by the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to the bill. I did not report the bill, and I am not a member of the committee from which it was reported, but I am sure that if the Senate understood the bill there would be no possible objection to it.

Mr. KENYON. We should merely like to have an opportunity to understand the bill.

Mr. LODGE. This bill proposes to incorporate a committee for the relief of the Armenians, Syrians, and other populations in Asia Minor which have been subjected to massacre and to every sort of persecution, many of them having been deprived of their homes. There is great suffering and distress among them. This is a committee which has been formed in this country, headed by some of the very best men in the country. The President has issued a proclamation, which I suppose has been seen by all—I have a copy of it here—in which, in the strongest terms, he urges the support of this committee. It is proposed to raise some $30,000,000 for the relief of these people.

It has been indorsed in the strongest way by the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, by ex-President Roosevelt, by ex-President Taft, by Mr. Morgenthau, the former ambassador of the United States to Turkey, and by Mr. Hughes. I have known about it myself, because I have subscribed to it in a small way; and I know of no organization that is doing a greater work for the relief of suffering than this committee for Armenian relief. It is in the best of hands; it is purely philanthropic; it is entirely temporary, and I do not think anything could be done that would be more beneficial to great bodies of suffering people than to permit this committee, which is now in existence, to take the form of a corporation for the better administration of this great trust.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague the question which has been asked of the Senator who proposed the bill. What can be gained by passing this bill at this time in this emergency way? Is there, in his opinion, any way of the bill becoming a law before the return of the President of the United States?

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, that opens a large question which affects all our legislation. I am unable myself to see how any legislation can possibly become law until the return of the President. Under the Constitution, as everyone knows, if a bill is presented to the President and he neither signs nor vetoes it within 10 days, it becomes a law; but that can not operate in this case, because there is no opportunity of presentation that I can see. It does not seem to me, however, that on that account we ought to arrest the passage of the pending bill, which has got to pass both Houses, I presume—it is a Senate bill, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is.

Mr. WEEKS. My particular reason for asking that question is that there has recently been presented to the Military Affairs Committee by the War Department a bill which will remove the objection made by the comptroller relative to the payment of those manufacturers who have received orders and have proceeded to carry them out, the orders being verbal, the manufacturers having never had a written contract with the Government. There are hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of such cases, and it is urgent that that legislation be passed, and that it be passed without delay, or many of those people may find themselves in serious financial straits. I did not know but that my colleague, with his long experience, could suggest some way in which that legislation could become a law, even though the President happens to be out of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think that is a reason for stopping the passage of the bill now under consideration. I think it will have to pass the House, which will take probably some little time; but the people who are interested in it are extremely anxious to get this action as soon as possible. I will read a few of the names of the national committee. They include Hon. William Howard Taft, Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Abram I. Elkins, Hon. Elihu Root, Frederick H. Allen, James L. Barton—they are all well-known men—Cleveland H. Dodge, Charles W. Eliot, Cardinal Gibbons, and so on. It is a long list of men known throughout the country, of the very highest standing and character.

I think the bill was proposed by Mr. Root; at any rate, it is stated in the letter I have here that ex-Senator Root is one of those who prepared the bill. I had hoped when the Senator from North Carolina called the measure up that there would be no objection to it. We have in this country large numbers of Armenians, Syrians, and Greeks, who are profoundly interested in this matter, who will give largely to the funds and who are extremely desirious that this machinery be established to give relief to these large bodies of suffering people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, the gentlemen whose names have been read by him are members of the committee, but not the incorporators. Is that correct?

Mr. LODGE. The incorporators, I think, are mentioned in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but they are not the gentlemen referred to by the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I have not the bill before me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are named in the bill, and the list can be read, if desired, for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; that is not necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I think they must be the same men.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit, I think there is an idea prevailing in the minds of some Senators that the bill carries some form of appropriation. The bill carries no appropriation from Congress whatever, does it?

Mr. LODGE. None whatever.

Mr. LEWIS. That is my understanding.

Mr. LODGE. It merely authorizes the creation of a corporation under the laws of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEWIS. And carries no liability to the Federal Government?

Mr. OVERMAN. None whatever.

Mr. LODGE. The names of the incorporators are the same as the names I read of the members of the national committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want the Senator to understand by anything that I may have said that I am opposed to the consideration of the bill. What I do not like to see is unanimous consent considered as being given by the Senate for the consideration of a bill before it has been read. I am in favor of the bill, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan and Mr. OVERMAN. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL RECREATION ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to bring the attention of the Senate to Senate bill 3219, which is a kindred bill to the one just passed. The two were before the Judiciary Committee together, were considered very carefully, and finally both passed the committee almost unanimously. The bill to which I refer proposes to incorporate the National Recreation Association. That association is simply made a corporation of the District of Columbia. The bill follows the report of the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

ALBERT BUSHNELL HART.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, one of the names which has been referred to publicly in connection with the investigation which was made by the chief of the Secret Service is that of Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University. Nobody in Massachusetts would believe that Prof. Hart is now or ever has been disloyal. I think he has appeared within two or three days before the Judiciary Committee to make some explanation of his past record. I have here a statement made by another citizen of Massachusetts relating an incident which took place before we were engaged in war in which Prof. Hart took part, and which is so conclusive as to his views at that time that I ask, in justice to him, that it be included in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROF. HART AND DR. ALBERT.

NEWTON, December 7.

To the EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

I can not resist the temptation to write in protest of the gross injustice done Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart by publishing his name among those who were pro-German. Had the name of HENRY CABOT LODGE, JOHN W. WEEKS, or Mayor Peters been in that list, I should not have been more surprised.

For the benefit of the readers of the Herald who were not present at a meeting of the Economic Club, of Boston, held in January, 1915, I will describe it. The speakers were David Starr Jordan; Prof. Kuno Francke, of Harvard, a German; Prof. Wiener, of Harvard, a Russian; Dr. Albert, connected with the German embassy; and Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart. The meeting was held at the American House.

William H. Lincoln, president of the club, made two requests. First, that, owing to the crowded condition of the room, all refrain from smoking, and second, that, owing to the fact that the speakers represented three different nations, we refrain from applause. But before David Starr Jordan had spoken five minutes the crowd burst into laughter, which was followed by applause, and Mr. Lincoln might as well have tried to stop a cyclone. Dr. Jordan had stated that in one respect this war was most peculiar. No one was willing to father it. The Austrians and Germans denied the responsibility of starting it, Russia and France the same, and England could plead an alibi, as the war had started before she went in. So he said "we shall have to regard this war as a foundling left on the doorstep of civilization."

Prof. Francke followed Dr. Jordan. His address was in substance only a eulogy on Germany. Prof. Weiner caused a great deal of merriment in his spicy criticisms of Germany. Then came Dr. Albert. He read from manuscript a plea justifying Germany in her violation of the neutrality of Belgium. He claimed that Belgium was not a neutral country, but a neutralized country. That she had not declared her own neutrality, but had been made neutral by the other powers, and Germany, being one of the signers of that agreement, had a right to withdraw at any time. At this point Prof. Hart interrupted the speaker, and addressing the president said: "May I ask the speaker a question?" Before the president had time to reply, Dr. Albert turned to Prof. Hart and said, "Certainly; any question you please." Prof. Hart then asked this question: "Do we understand the speaker to say that had Germany not agreed to the neutrality of Belgium she would not have a right to violate it, but as she had agreed to it she did have a right to violate it?" The laughter and applause that followed was entirely beyond control. I never saw so many emotions expressed in a man's face in so short a time as was expressed in the face of Dr. Albert. His discomfiture was extreme and the remainder of his paper might just as well have been read to a flock of birds, for no one gave him any attention.

When Prof. Hart rose to speak he turned to Dr. Albert and in language that was plain to understand said: "Let me tell Dr. Albert that before this war is over Germany will have to atone for every drop of blood she sheds and for every crime she commits in Belgium, for the world is not bad enough to allow such a cowardly outrage to go unpunished."

Prof Hart then went on some 30 minutes with a masterly historical arraignment of Germany. And although he was the last speaker he held the attention of the audience to the end.

F. O. STANLEY.

AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I introduce the resolution which I send to the desk; and then, in accordance with the request that I made yesterday, may I have permission of the Senate to address a few remarks to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 384) was read, as follows:

Whereas in August, 1918, United States soldiers were sent to Vladivostok and Murmansk and Archangel, and in public announcement by the State Department armed intervention in Russia was distinctly disavowed; and

Whereas the State Department for the United States then declared, "In taking this action the Government of the United States wishes to announce to the people of Russia in the most public and solemn manner that it contemplates no interference with the political sovereignty of Russia, no intervention in her internal affairs—not even in the local affairs of the limited areas which her military force may be obliged to occupy—and no impairment of her territorial integrity, either now or hereafter, but what we are about to do has as its single and only object the rendering of such aid as shall be acceptable to the Russian people themselves in their endeavors to regain control of their own affairs, their own territory, and their destiny"; and

Whereas since the arrival of United States troops in Russia press dispatches have recounted skirmishes and battles between them and Russian soldiers, the taking and retaking of Russian towns, and various incidents indicating a state of war; and

Whereas Congress has not declared war upon Russia and is without information as to the conditions existing between our soldiers and Russian soldiers: Therefore be it

Resolved, First, that the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, all data, documents, and information showing or bearing upon our present relations with Russia as to peace or war, so that the Senate and the Nation may know why and for what purpose our soldiers are in Russia and what is the policy of the Government in reference to Russia.

Second. That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise the Senate of the number of United States soldiers in Russia and their location and of their operations, together with any lists of casualties which they may have suffered.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, recently a certain Senator delivered quite a remarkable speech on current events, and subsequently received a letter from a constituent about as follows:

Senator BLANK:

I have just read your remarks of yesterday in the United States Senate, and I beg to inform you that you're an ass.

The Senator immediately replied:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter, and I thank you for the information you have given me.

Fraternally, yours.

[Laughter.]

In this day, when intolerant newspapers imperatively demand immediate and complete indorsement of prevailing opinion, it is a dangerous and a delicate thing to speak of Russia, or to inquire concerning our activities there; and the epithet applied to my distinguished colleague will doubtless be the least obnoxious of those which will greet the seeker for truth in respect to the Russian situation.

Some of us for many months desired to inquire into existing relations between the United States and Russia. We have recognized that in the Russian situation most tremendous and vital issues are involved. Free discussion of the question has been hitherto impossible, because of its complex relationship to a greater problem, the world war. While the war was on and Germany yet a menace to civilization, we thought it inappropriate to demand information or to discuss what might have been deemed mistakes or indiscretions. But now Germany has been beaten, and German militarism has been crushed. The President in repeating to Congress the armistice terms declared: "Thus the war has ended"; and on December 2 again stated this fact, and further said that the armistice was in effect a complete submission of the enemy, that the central empires knew themselves beaten and their very empires were in liquidation. The demands of the military situation, therefore, no longer require silence. The war is over. We have won. The enemy empires are in liquidation. With the authoritative utterances of the President no reason exists why we should not know the position of the United States in respect to Russia, the activities of our Army in that country, and the purposes of our Government. Not to endeavor to inform ourselves is timidity and cowardice. And it is because no Senator with whom I have talked, no public official of whom I have inquired, knows, because, indeed, we do not know, and our people do not know, what we do or what we seek in Russia or what our ultimate purpose is, that I present my resolution and these remarks.

I am quite aware that the most respectful, modest, and hesitating inquiry upon the subject of Russia will be met with accusations of bolshevism; that a mere purpose of seeking information will be denounced as sympathy with anarchy; that a demand that American boys shall not be sacrificed to the rigors of a Russian winter and conflict with a desperate people will be termed a defense of international agitators and of the "red flag." I understand full well that the peculiar intolerance which has been fostered in the past few months, the state of mind deliberately cultivated which has sought to bully and to terrorize either mild objector or seeker for information will look askance at one so lost as to ask the facts concerning Russia and our participation in its affairs. But those of us who are neither bolsheviki nor in sympathy with bolshevism of course would be unfit to sit here if we feared to pursue a legitimate inquiry within the sphere of our duties.

I have no sympathy with bolshevism. The opinions which I have formed from the press, more or less nebulous, I confess, have made Lenine and Trotsky wholly abhorrent to me. The tenets which they profess are to me worse than ridiculous, and with the hard and fast formulæ which they seem to have adopted from Marxian socialism I have no patience. The excesses in Moscow and Petrograd, which have of late appeared in the press, shock and horrify me. I do not hesitate to use the strongest language which I have seen employed in the press concerning these leaders for a moment of the Russian revolution and in denunciation of their deeds; but I do wish to know my country's attitude at this time to the Russian people and what our sons are fighting for on Russian soil. I have made diligent private inquiry without success. And because I do not know, and we do not know, the situation in Russia to-day, what we are fighting for there, and what ultimately we seek to obtain, I publicly now repeat the inquiries unsuccessfully made privately.

As a nation we have not hesitated to express ourselves concerning Russia, but the words we have spoken are at variance with our acts, and I ask that you follow me in the national promise which we made concerning Russia, and then observe the fulfillment of that promise.

December 4, 1917, the President said:

The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and unsophiscated standards of right and wrong is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. * * *

All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I can not help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset, the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the allies, suspicion and distrust swept away, and a real and lasting union of purpose effected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution, and had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs toward an ordered and stable government of free men might have been avoided. The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It can not be uttered too plainly or too often.

Wonderful words! Words with which to conjure; and to-day, after the months of our intervention and our fighting in Russia, I can reecho those words of the President of the United States:

The only possible antidote is the truth. It can not be uttered too plainly or too often.

January 8, 1918, the President said:

There is, moreover, a voice calling for these definitions of principle and of purpose which is, it seems to me, more thrilling and more compelling than any of the many moving voices with which the troubled air of the world is filled. It is the voice of the Russian people. They are prostrate and all but helpless, it would seem, before the grim power of Germany, which has hitherto known no relenting and no pity. Their power, apparently, is shattered. And yet their soul is not subservient. They will not yield either in principle or in action. Their conception of what is right, and what it is humane and honorable for them to accept has been stated with a frankness, a largeness of view, a generosity of spirit, and a universal human sympathy which must challenge the admiration of every friend of mankind; and they have refused to compound their ideals or desert others that they themselves may be safe. They call to us to say what it is we desire, in what, if in anything, our purpose and our spirit differ from theirs; and I believe that the people of the United States would wish me to respond with utter simplicity and frankness. Whether their present leaders believe it or not, it is our heartfelt desire and hope that some way may be opened whereby we may be privileged to assist the people of Russia to attain their utmost hope of liberty and ordered peace.

And the sixth of the fourteen terms of peace enunciated by the President is as follows:

VI. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

The acid test, Mr. President! And how has the great democracy of the world stood that acid test?

February 11, 1918, the President again said:

The United States has no desire to interfere in European affairs or to act as arbiter in European territorial disputes. She would disdain to take advantage of any internal weakness or disorder to impose her own will upon another people.

September 27, 1918, in stating the issues of the war, the President exclaimed:

Shall the military power of any nation or group of nations be suffered to determine the fortunes of peoples over whom they have no right to rule except the right of force?

I quote these various excerpts from the remarks of the President of the United States because these remarks constitute the promise of the United States of America to Russia; and, constituting the promise of democracy of a Nation with its ideals untarnished, it is our duty to see that that promise is carried out in letter and in spirit.

During the early months of this year the clamor for armed hostile intervention in Russia was loud and insistent. It was resisted by our Government for a long time. Then, suddenly, in August, after having refused to accede for many months, intervention came. We denied that we were indulging either in hostile invasion or intervention, and our Government issued a disingenuous announcement, which has stood, so far as the American people know, as the determination, the position, and the attitude of the United States toward Russia. The statement issued by the administration, under which our people were told our boys were sent to Siberia, is as follows. Without reading it all, I ask permission to insert it here as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In the judgment of the Government of the United States—a judgment arrived at after repeated and very searching consideration of the whole situation—military intervention in Russia would be more likely to add to the present sad confusion there than to cure it, and would injure Russia rather than help her out of her distresses. Such military intervention as has been most frequently proposed, even supposing it to be efficacious in its immediate object of delivering an attack upon Germany from the east, would, in its judgment, be more likely to turn out to be merely a method of making use of Russia than to be a method of serving her. Her people, if they profited by it at all, could not profit by it in time to deliver them from all their present desperate difficulties, and their substance would meantime be used to maintain foreign armies, not to reconstitute their own or to feed their own men, women, and children.

We are bending all our energies now to the purpose, the resolute and confident purpose, of winning on the western front, and it would in the judgment of the Government of the United States be most unwise to divide or dissipate our forces.

As the Government of the United States sees the present circumstances, therefore, military action is admissible in Russia now only to render such protection and help as is possible to the Czecho-Slovaks against the armed Austrian and German prisoners who are attacking them and to steady any efforts at self-government or self-defense in which the Russians themselves may be willing to accept assistance.

Whether from Vladivostok or from Murmansk and Archangel, the only present object for which American troops will be employed will be to guard military stores which may subsequently be needed by Russian forces and to render such aid as may be acceptable to the Russians in the organization of their own self-defense.

With such objects in view the Government of the United States is now cooperating with the Governments of France and Great Britain in the neighborhood of Murmansk and Archangel. The United States and Japan are the only powers which are just now in a position to act in Siberia in sufficient force to accomplish even such modest objects as those that have been outlined. The Government of the United States has, therefore, proposed to the Government of Japan that each of the two Governments send a force of a few thousand men to Vladivostok, with the purpose of cooperating as a single force in the occupation of Vladivostok and in safeguarding, so far as it may, the country to the rear of the westward-moving Czecho-Slovaks, and the Japanese Government has consented.

In taking this action the Government of the United States wishes to announce to the people of Russia in the most public and solemn manner that it contemplates no interference with the political sovereignty of Russia, no intervention in her internal affairs—not even in the local affairs of the limited areas which her military force may be obliged to occupy—and no impairment of her territorial integrity, either now or hereafter, but that what we are about to do has as its single and only object the rendering of such aid as shall be acceptable to the Russian people themselves in their endeavors to regain control of their own affairs, their own territory, and their own destiny. The Japanese Government, it is understood, will issue a similar assurance.

These plans and purposes of the Government of the United States have been communicated to the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and these Governments have advised the Department of State that they assent to them in principle. No conclusion that the Government of the United States has arrived at in this important matter is intended, however, as an effort to restrict the actions or interfere with the independent judgment of the Governments with which we are now associated in the war.

It is also the hope and purpose of the Government of the United States to take advantage of the earliest opportunity to send to Siberia a commission of merchants, agricultural experts, labor advisers, Red Cross representatives, and agents of the Young Men's Christian Association accustomed to organizing the best methods of spreading useful information and rendering educational help of a modest kind, in order in some systematic way to relieve the immediate economic necessities of the people there in every way for which an opportunity may open.

The execution of this plan will follow and will not be permitted to embarrass the military assistance rendered to the Czecho-Slovaks.

It is the hope and expectation of the Government of the United States that the Governments with which it is associated will, wherever necessary or possible, lend their active aid in the execution of these military and economic plans.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Observe from this statement that military intervention is expressly disclaimed; that we tell Russia and the world that such intervention would endanger Russia rather than help her out of her distresses; that we are devoting ourselves entirely to the western front, and that we believe it would be unwise to divide or dissipate our forces, and that military action is admissible in Russia only to render protection and help to the Czecho-Slovaks against the armed Austrian and German prisoners; that whether at Vladivostok or from Murmansk and Archangel the only present object for which American troops would be employed would be to guard military stores and to render such aid as may be acceptable to the Russians in the organization of their own self-defense; and just follow these words in the promise that we then made to Russia and to the world:

In taking this action the Government of the United States wishes to announce to the people of Russia in the most public and solemn manner that it contemplates no interference with the political sovereignty of Russia, no intervention in her internal affairs, not even in the local affairs of the limited areas which her military force may be obliged to occupy, and no impairment of her territorial integrity, either now or hereafter, but that what we are about to do has as its single and only object the rendering of such aid as shall be acceptable to the Russian people themselves in their endeavors to regain control of their own affairs, their own territory, and their own destiny.

Eloquent words in an eloquent statement of the Government of the United States, words to which we all subscribe, words which constituted the solemn declaration of the United States to Russia and to our people when troops were sent abroad to Siberia and to Archangel. And in the months since the press reports tell us of skirmishes and battles; of American soldiers fighting Russian soldiers; and of all the attendant circumstances of war between hostile peoples. November 27 the press dispatches carried from Archangel stated that American troops were holding the line against the Bolsheviki on the middle sector of the northern front in the region of Hadish, after 10 weeks of fighting in swamps and thick undergrowth. These press reports tell us:

Under British command and with British forces aiding them the American infantrymen on this sector probably have had more fighting and more hardships than other American units in Russia. The campaign began early in August when a British and French force entered Seletskoe, a large village about midway the River Emtso. They were forced to move to another sector and the Bolsheviki occupied the town, only to be driven out a few weeks later when American reinforcements arrived. Since early in September the opposing forces have battled back and forth along the road leading toward Petrograd through tiny five-house villages. The Bolsheviki at times tried the force of their "oratorical artillery" on the Americans.

To some I assume this sort of a report will seem wholly humorous. To me there is a pathos in it.

On two nights during the last week English-speaking Bolsheviki appeared in no man's land and made speeches urging the Americans not to fight. Great red banners also were strung along the enemy bank of the river.

Contrast these accounts of the military operations with our declarations when we sent our soldiers across the water.

December 2, this press dispatch:

ARCHANGEL, Monday, December 2.

A detailed report of the capture by Americans and Russians of Bolshevik positions on the Pinega River November 29 says: "Our troops, with only machine guns and rifles, advanced against shrapnel, strangely without any, or with very few minor casualties. Before retreating the Bolsheviki are reported to have killed 30 peasants.

"An international battalion, composed mostly of Magyars, has recently been the Bolsheviki's most reliable force on the Dvina front. In the fighting of November 11 to 14 it left great piles of dead before our positions, having fought stubbornly. All sectors in the past two days have been quiet."

December 6, in press dispatches from Paris, we are thus enlightened:

The allies are busily casting a net around the outskirts of Russia, obviously with a view to intervention on a serious scale. In the north, in addition to the allied detachments in the Archangel region and the British detachments in Finland, the British have landed at Libau.

A New York paper recently asked:

What is the American policy with respect to Russia? No one seems to know. Our Government seems unable to make up its mind. There is the most painful evidence of lack of stability of view.

The policy with respect to Russia was stated in the August pronunciamento, but alas, these were mere words. The policy to-day no one knows, but what actually exists is war, and yet I know of no declaration of war by the Congress. After a year of revolution in Russia, after some months of actual warfare by our forces, the administration has taken neither Congress nor the people into its confidence. What an anomalous situation for the great democracy of the world demanding open diplomacy and justice for all peoples!

In the Inter-Allied Labor Conference, held in London in September last, of which the American Federation of Labor was a part, the following in respect to Russia was adopted:

(1) This conference sends an expression of deepest sympathy to the labor and socialist organizations of Russia, which, after having destroyed their own imperialism, continue an unremitting struggle against German imperialism.

(2) It declares that if the treaty of Brest-Litovsk stands it would confirm the collapse of the Russian revolution, and would most gravely compromise the future of the democracy of the world. It invites the workers of the allied countries to refuse to recognize any peace settlement which does not secure the complete freedom of the Russian people.

(3) The conference is of opinion that, in conformity with article 6 of the 14 points of President Wilson, the present efforts of the allied governments to assist the Russian people must be influenced only by a genuine desire to preserve liberty and democracy in an ordered and durable world peace, in which the beneficent fruit of the revolution shall be made permanently secure.

I quote these resolutions of that conference in order that you may observe that England dares discuss the Russian situation, English labor dares discuss the Russian situation, France dares discuss the Russian situation, and French labor dares discuss the Russian situation. The only place in all this world where there has been poverty of discussion or fear of discussion is in the United States of America; and if I have accomplished nothing to-day but discussion by which we may learn exactly what we are undertaking to do in that land, no matter what the views may be of those who discuss it, I will not have labored here in vain.

Bear in mind that the news which comes to us from Russia now is all colored. I have no doubt that terror exists, that many worthy people have been cruelly and outrageously murdered. I have no doubt that starvation stalks among the people, but, as I read of the net of steel cast around Russia by the allies and ourselves, by which no food can enter that unhappy country, I ask the question, "Can it be that we in any degree are responsible for the bloody terror there existing? Can it be that we in any measure are responsible for starving poor and misguided peasants?"

That you may have something of an adequate understanding of the nature of the publications in this country concerning Russia I quote to you, because of its succinctness, an article appearing in the New York Nation of November 23, 1918:

For several weeks the American public was kept in a state of agitation by reports of a "general massacre of all the upper classes" of Russia on the night of November 10. "It will be another Saint Bartholomew's night," said the dispatches; and the innocent bourgeois population of unhappy Russia was reported to be "in a panic of indescribable proportions." The hideous affair was predescribed, commented upon editorially, and, save for the practical details of execution, carried through by the press before the fateful day arrived. On November 7, it was announced that the "Russian ambassador" at Washington had communicated with the State Department "proposing that Bolsheviki and German agents be held personally responsible for the massacre before an international court." On November 11, the day after the "massacre," an obscure note appeared in one New York paper, the World, announcing in its headline that the "threat of massacre seems to have been a fake." Saint Bartholomew's night apparently passed without incident, and the only action of the Bolsheviki which might mark the occasion was a general order "giving amnesty to all arrested hostages and persons alleged to be involved in plots against the Soviets except those whose detention is deemed necessary as a guaranty for the security of the Bolsheviki who have fallen into enemy hands." Not one newspaper copied this report. Having accomplished the massacre it might have seemed inconsistent to bring the dead to life, as well as weakening to the lavishly documented case against the Bolsheviki.

After our intervention, denied though it was in August last, we heard much about "reconstructing the eastern front." Of course there is no longer an enemy against whom the eastern front should be protected. The position of those who desired to "reconstruct the eastern front" now shifts, and we hear it asserted that it is our sacred duty to rescue the Russian people from the menace of bloody revolution and civil strife; indeed, that our solemn obligation is to save the world from anarchy. We are confronted, therefore, with a concealed danger, war against revolution in all countries, whether enemy or ally, to prevent the agitation of revolution from spreading. If a "League of Nations" is formed upon any such motives, it will degenerate into a "Holy Alliance."

Again, it is repeatedly printed in our press that if we but help certain Russian factions they will overcome the Bolsheviki and will "stabilize" a new government in Russia. A policy, however, by military intervention, supporting one government here and another there, one faction in one part and a new faction in another, will but encourage every revolutionary group, which aspires to make something out of the disorder, to try its hand. The sorry and unsuccessful attempts that have been made by various groups, all of which called for "stabilization" by armed intervention, is recent history.

The extraordinary amount of misinformation given to the American people concerning Russia almost justifies the belief that there has been a regular and consistent propaganda of misrepresentation. The Creel Bureau of Public Information has, apparently, been engaged, not in developing facts to our people, but in justifying a course subsequently pursued at variance with our words. Solemnly we promised that we would not, by hostile invasion, intervene. We did, after our solemn promise, just that thing, and then in the sequence of events, apparently, the duty devolved upon the Creel bureau to justify the broken promise. As calmly we weigh what has been transpiring in Austria and Germany, as we observe the insidious propaganda and the poison of Bolshevism emanating from Russia, which have gone to the very core of the autocracy of the central empires, can we be satisfied with the Creel committee's labored efforts to demonstrate that the Bolsheviki are German agents? The facts and the current events would indicate that the problem is much more complex, and that this rabid Russian political growth is a menace to European social order, German and the allied alike. What has been transpiring between this Government and the soviet in Russia has never been told. Now and then a vagrant fact has come to us, but, apparently, it never finds publicity. Statements have come to us, apparently wholly credible and entitled to verity, but officially we can learn nothing. It is because of representations made to myself and others that I would propound to our officials for our information, and what is much more important, the information of the American people, various queries:

Is it true that the soviet government offered to the American Government a basis of cooperation, economic and military, and sought the help of the American Government to prevent the ratification of the shameful treaty of Brest, and that the American Government never replied to this offer?

Is it true that the Assistant Secretary of State, speaking for the President, definitely refused intervention in March last when, if intervention was ever desirable or possible, then was the time to intervene, before the rigors of starvation, the Red terror, or the unity of the peasants and workers against the allies had been established? Is it true that in this statement there is the language that to intervene in Siberia "would be doing in the east exactly what the Germans were doing in the west," and would subject America and the allies to the same suspicion on the part of the Russian people?

Is it true that the Russian soviet government offered, through its highest economic council, a program for making America the most favored foreign nation in trade and commerce and involving the control by the allies of all those supplies most desired by the central empires?

Is it true that representatives of the American Red Cross remained in soviet Russia until October, in perfect safety and reasonable comfort even after we had intervened and American troops were fighting the soldiers of the soviet government, and that the last member of the original American Red Cross mission to Russia left Moscow on the 5th of October and Petrograd on the 16th of October, in the safe conduct and security of the protection of the soviet government?

Is it true that the Department of State has refused to allow the American Red Cross to ship supplies to Moscow and Petrograd for the relief of the returning Russian war prisoners from Germany, 60 per cent of whom are suffering from some form of tuberculosis—these the soldiers that held the Hun in check for two years and saved civilization? Was this refusal based on Creel information and the fear that these supplies would be turned over by a starving people to Germany?

Is it true that the American ambassador and the British high commissioner in Russia recommended cooperation with the soviet government through the American railroad mission, that the soviet government invited this cooperation and promised control of the Siberian railway to be placed in the hands of this mission, and that these recommendations were refused by the American Government largely because of misinformation received through the Creel committee, supported by leaders and representatives of the old régime in Russia?

Is it true that refusal of these recommendations prevented the evacuation of large amounts of munitions and war supplies from the western front that subsequently were captured by the Germans in their advance after the Brest negotiations had failed?

Is it true that the British high commissioner, sent to Russia after the Bolsheviki revolution because of his knowledge and experience in the Russian situation, an official who had been seven years in Russia, four years consul general of his majesty's government in Moscow, who spoke Russian fluently, after four months in Russia stated over his signature that the soviet government had cooperated in aiding the allies and that he believed that intervention in cooperation with the soviet government was feasible, as late as the 5th of May, 1918?

Is it true that the American Government so delayed cooperation with the Kerensky government's plan to support the morale of the army and maintain that provisional government in power as to contribute largely to the overthrow of Kerensky and the success of the Bolsheviki revolution?

Of course, the facts in relation to such matters as are suggested ought to be in the possession of the Foreign Relations Committee. Before I came to this body I assumed that information of grave international affairs, which might culminate in war or in treaties, would ever be with that formerly important and honored committee. By rigid inquiry of the committee I have been unable to ascertain anything in relation to Russia. They are as much in the dark as the humblest American whose son's blood now reddens Russian soil.

I read, as doubtless you did, with some mystification, the strange modification of the armistice terms. When the military authorities concluded their armistice it was provided:

> All German troops at present in any territory which before the war belonged to Russia, Roumania, or Turkey shall withdraw within the frontiers of Germany as they existed on August 1, 1914.

This was the provision read by the President to Congress, but subsequently this provision was modified to read:

> All German troops at present in the territories which before belonged to Austria-Hungary, Roumania, and Turkey shall withdraw immediately within the frontiers of Germany as they existed on August 1, 1914. All German troops at present in the territories which before the war belonged to Russia shall likewise withdraw within the frontiers of Germany, defined as above, as soon as the allies, taking into account the internal situation of these territories, shall decide that the time for this has come.

Do you recognize the modification? First, it is stipulated that all German troops shall withdraw from Russia and go back to Germany; then, the modification that they shall not withdraw, but shall remain in Russia until it shall be determined by the allies that the time is ripe for their withdrawal.

The explanation, as stated by the New York Times, was as follows:

> This notable modification, which permits German troops to remain in Russian territory, apparently means that the allies are fearful that if German troops are taken away from Russia excesses will occur which may lead to anarchy.

This interpretation was published, apparently, as the expression of our Secretary of State. What a field for speculation this modification of the armistice terms presents! Can it be that the German-bribed Bolsheviki, acting in conjunction with Germany and doing Germany's will, must be kept in order by German troops?

I realize—and I repeat what I said at the outset—the danger that there is in talking thus upon this floor; but, my friends, for a year and a half past I have sat in this Chamber with lips closed, because I wanted no word of mine, however humble that word might be, to be at variance with those who were conducting the war. The war is now done; and if I can not speak my sentiments in this Chamber upon any subject that is before the American people, I prefer to retire and go back to my very humble past existence. That expression of any sentiment upon this subject will arouse, of course, criticism and denunciation goes without saying; that that denunciation will extend to calling one who asks merely for facts Bolshevik, anarchist, and the like is, of course, well known; but I want to impress upon you again that I am neither I. W. W., nor Bolshevik, nor Socialist. In the record that I had before I came to this body I think my dealing with one of these classes when it was required that action should be had speaks for itself.

The situation which now confronts us in Russia is no longer a mere isolated flame in a disordered land; it is something far greater and something far more important. Let in the light on the Russian situation and let our people know the facts. We have been told each day for a year past that the soviet government is about to fall, that the wretched and corrupt leaders of the Bolsheviki are in flight. I read this again only yesterday. My desire is, and it is our right as well, whether the soviet government exists or is overthrown, whether bolshevism is yet in power or another order has taken its place, to know the activities of our own and our Nation's policy.

We have waged a successful war. Now in a brief period there will come to us the difficult problems of reconstruction. In less than two years we have revolutionized industry; we have wholly transmuted governmental activity; we have discarded century-old traditions and habits, and perhaps we have changed even our national thought. In the days to come our course must be steered safely between the Scylla of bolshevism on the one hand and the Charybdis of reaction on the other. And I reecho the recent bold expression of Lloyd George: "I do not fear revolution. I fear reaction." In this Nation, if we preserve at all our ideals, if we do not wholly destroy our democracy, there can be no room for bolshevism. The genesis of bolshevism is twofold. It is the spawn of oppression, and poverty, and hunger, and it is the logical end of repressive and all-embracing militarism. So long as we cherish liberty and preserve democracy, we need fear in our Nation no such noxious growth. The sporadic rantings of an occasional international agitator will find no response in a free America. Wrong, injustice, cruelty, and tyranny made Russia the natural breeding place of bolshevism. During the recent years of the world's greatest advance, Russia remained the Russia of old. Every cry for progress, for education, for freedom, for political reform was there called revolution and was met by the knout, the prison, Siberia, and execution. Ninety-three per cent of the population of that great unknown country were composed of peasants and workmen. A scant 7 per cent, constituting the privileged class, were the only ones who could receive official favor, hold positions of power, or commissions in the army.

Ninety-three per cent were ever cold and hungry and under the lash. Seven per cent were God's anointed and alone were permitted to share in God's sunlight. These 93 per cent, fighting and dying in the armies of the Empire, conceived the idea of fighting and, if need be, dying for themselves, and they broke through the centuries of darkness and stool, by revolution, for a moment in the glare of the sunlight of freedom. Is it any wonder that it blinded them? And just as a swiftly running stream tosses upon its top a discolored froth, so this new revolution flung to the surface, after its first months of travail, a few blatant leaders, who, with their grotesque formulæ and selfish and corrupt administration, have almost obscured the great, living, vital, fundamental issue which is yet in Russia. For these leaders I have naught but contempt, disgust, and detestation; but for the great mass of the struggling, striving, seething, simple peasants of Russia, groping and longing and praying for the light, eagerly and pathetically grasping for democracy such as ours, I have a deep and an abiding sympathy.

What is the policy of our Nation toward Russia? Are we now engaged in destroying bolshevism? If we are, what have we decided shall take its place? Are we again to put the Romanoffs upon the throne? Do we seek a dictator for this starved land? Is there a single faction, is there a single individual, we intend to put in power after we have waded through blood to Moscow and Petrograd? When we have buried our dead of cold, of privation, and of fatigue, and those who were slain in battle, are we, with the American flag flying in the streets of the Russian capital, to set up one kind of government as against another kind, one set of men as against another, or one man who comes out of the old régime? I ask these questions in the utmost good faith. I do not know our policy, and I know no other man who knows our policy. I do know that we are killing Russians, and they, when they can, are killing ours, and that this we are doing upon Russian soil. Is it presumptuous upon the part of one in this Chamber to ask why we are slaughtering Russians and why do we sacrifice our own blood? I warn you of the policy, which God forbid this Nation ever should enter upon, of endeavoring to impose by military force upon the various peoples of the earth the kind of government we desire for them and that they do not desire for themselves. We have broken one nation which started to impress its will upon others by ruthless militarism. Its fate is the warning to every nation of the world that military force shall not impose one nation's will upon another.

We will hear very much in the days to come about "stabilizing" governments. And the "stabilization" will always be by hostile invasion and overpowering military forces. I want none of this for America. I want these boys who now wear our uniform in Europe, just as soon as our obligations to the peace treaty will permit, to return to their homes. I want them given the opportunity to make their own careers, to live their lives in their own way, to have their firesides, and their families, and their loved ones, and to be simple American citizens. I want no policy in our Republic of subjugating or subduing nations or peoples who do not think as we do. I want no American militarism to impose by force our will upon weaker nations.

Are we indifferent to Russia's fate that we sit here supine and in ignorance? I recall how this Chamber rung with apostrophes to freedom, with eloquent tributes to the Russian revolution, but a few short months ago. I remember how we strutted and boasted that the light of American democracy had penetrated even darkest Russia, and had emancipated a people from centuries of oppression and tyranny. Is democracy so frail a thing, is its germ so weak and fragile that excesses and wrongs of leaders forever destroy it? There is the germ of democracy yet in that stricken country, not perhaps in selfish and corrupt officials, but imperishably implanted in a hundred million humble hearts. Will you, the only people on earth to whom these stricken millions pray, by a circle of steel starve them and their women and their children? I doubt neither the righteousness nor the justice of the ultimate decision; but this decision can only be just and righteous with full knowledge of all the facts. With this full knowledge, the great democracy of the world, in the hour of the victory of its ideals, with a Christian civilization saved and preserved by its arms, will deal with a suffering and an abandoned people with justice and mercy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What disposition does the Senator desire made of the resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. REED and Mr. BRANDEGEE addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. REED. I ask now that the Senate resume the consideration of Senate joint resolution 194, being the housing resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Missouri if he will allow me to ask the Senator from California a question about the matter which he has just brought before the Senate?

Mr. REED. I should like, first, to get the joint resolution before the Senate, and then I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object to the Senator getting it before the Senate, if he will yield to me for a moment then.

Mr. REED. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed, and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator from Missouri has yielded to me for an inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Yes. I intended to yield the floor. I merely wished to have the joint resolution laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes the Senator would take the floor and dispose of it as he pleases.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desired to get the joint resolution before the Senate. It is now before the Senate, and, of course, Senators can speak in their own right. The Senator from Connecticut had asked me to yield to him while I was on the floor in order to make an interrogatory, and I think that courtesy ought to be extended to him at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from California has had his resolution of inquiry referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which I am a member. I wish to ask him in relation to the series of questions contained in his resolution, which embraces certain statements, terminating with the inquiry as to whether those alleged facts are true or not. Does the Senator mean to have the Senate infer that, upon his information and belief, he thinks they are true, or has he any knowledge about them? He merely asks the question. I do not understand whether he meant to make the assertion.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I purposely refrained from indulging in any dogmatic assertions or statements in respect to the Russian situation. The questions are based upon information that has come to me. As to the absolute verity of the information, I will not say at this particular moment; but there is no question which I asked idly or about which there is no information. They are all based, as I have said, upon the vagrant facts that have come to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has given me the information I desire.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry, with the permission of the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from California leaves the Chamber, as I assume it is his intention to do, I should like to address myself to one or two views expressed by the able Senator.

Mr. President, the resolution tendered by the Senator is very pertinent. The information which he seeks I fancy at this time will be interesting. Certainly it is very appropriate. But, Mr. President, I hardly feel that the deductions drawn by the able Senator from reports gathered from public papers would justify us in reaching at this time a judgment convicting the United States of America of any omission of duty or imposing upon it as a single Nation the particular obligation that the Senator from California feels should be discharged by some one; that is, the release of troops that are now in Russia.

Mr. President, when the suggestion was first made on this floor respecting the United States sending troops into Siberia, I think I assumed to say that the United States would not enter upon that mission of its own will for any purposes of its own as to governing any part of Siberia or taking jurisdiction of the affairs which were wholly Russian. I said then, sir, that our only course must be that in conjunction with those who are called allies in the necessary prosecution of the war.

Mr. President, we must view this matter as it really appeals to us all from the history and the circumstances. We were at war with Germany. It was known that there in Russia Germany had obtained influence and had turned that influence against the cause of the allies. There arose necessity for those called the allies—particularly Britain and Japan and ourselves—to take some steps to protect against the German influence and the German power that part of the Russian country which lay nearer to the East and which threatened us by the way of the Pacific. The able Senator from California will recall that it was in conjunction with what was regarded the wise thing to do on the part of those governing the armies of the allies in Europe that the troops of the United States were called upon to operate with the troops of the allied countries, particularly of Britain, of Japan, some of Italy, and many of the Slovaks, known as the Czecho-Slovaks.

Mr. President, it developed, as we gather from current history, that those who were Austrian and German prisoners had been released by Russia, and, instead of appreciating their release for freedom, banded themselves as soldiers of the central powers and turned their arms against the Americans, killing the American soldiers. The reports came to us from reliable sources that property was destroyed, lives taken, and that a general condition existed partaking of anarchy and general destruction. Under the general orders that arose from the unity of command which had been suggested and directed by this Government with France and Britain, the American troops were sent into Siberia in conjunction with the troops of the allies.

Now, Mr. President, the war has only come to an end in so far that the fighting between the contending forces has ceased under an armistice. The call is for a convention at Versailles, in France, where the terms of peace are first to be reached and the withdrawal of troops directed. And here I would have the able Senator reflect: Is not this joint gathering the only place where we can appropriately hope for immediate reply to his questions? Is there any other government or body that can assume to discharge this duty? Are there any other people, is there any other agency, I ask the able Senator, who could assume at this time to enter upon it other than those who are about to assemble around the peace table within a week? Would not we embarrass the whole proceeding by assuming to act singly? With full knowledge of all the circumstances as they will possess it, with a consciousness that they will discharge their duty as becomes them, must we not wait until they assemble, and with the information at their hands as to all the matters referred to by the Senator reach a conclusion as to Russia, what is best to be done by America as well as by Britain and by France, as well as by Japan and the Slovaks, in the light of all the information? Then we will have a conclusion from which, let us believe, the right thing will follow and the just thing likewise to the Russian people as to America.

Mr. President, I hope this resolution will go to the proper committee, will be duly reported, and will bring forth the response of such information as can be afforded; but in the meantime I pray the eminent Senator from California and all others not to indulge in the presumption that the United States of America upon its own initiative is going to violate the solemn obligations for which it entered into this war, but that time will be given, in an orderly and proper manner, with due consideration to those with whom it is cooperating, to discharge its duties to Russia as to every other nation. Let us repeat that far from oppressing liberty this Nation will be faithful to the ideals for which it entered this war and for which its children have shed their blood—democracy and justice—and that as on this rock we have builded our house we repose the belief in the words of the great Peter "that not even the gates of hell shall prevail against it."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from California. It will occupy but a moment. May I inquire whether it would not be proper to add to the very timely address of the Senator that as early as January 8, 1915, the President made the statement in a public address, referring to Mexico, that they had a right to shed as much blood as they pleased domestically in establishing any form of government they saw proper to establish, and it was not for us to intervene?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I recall that.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to have the privilege of asking the Senator from California a question, if he will do me the honor to give me his attention and reply. I did not have the fortune to hear all of his able address. I entered the Chamber while he was in the course of delivering it and heard the remainder of it with much interest. I heard him make the statement that 93 per cent of the people of Russia are struggling for liberty and freedom and democracy such as we enjoy in this country. Now, 93 per cent being a very large majority of 100 per cent, I would ask the distinguished Senator from California why the 93 per cent of the people of Russia who want liberty, freedom, and democracy do not get it and set it up, instead of indulging in a carnival of murder, assassination, robbery, and nearly every other crime known to the catalogue of criminality?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, of course the inquiry is not made for the purpose of eliciting information, but I will answer it in Yankee fashion.

Mr. MYERS. I want the Senator's opinion; that is what I want.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will answer the question in a Yankee fashion. Perhaps the Senator believes that the American people always get all that they want, even in this well-ordered democracy; but there are times when our leaders do as they see fit, and not at all as the American people wish. When I say that 93 per cent of the population of Russia are made up of peasants and workmen—nearly 90 per cent of this number being peasants, as I recall—of course it is not always the fact that the men who are in control will give to the majority of their fellows exactly what they ought to get. Why, the leadership of the world demonstrates that, and the query, indeed, is sufficient answer of itself. It is its own refutation.

Mr. MYERS. I will just say, Mr. President, that it seems to me that if the leaders of the 93 per cent are not giving the 93 per cent what they want, the 93 per cent, if they wished, could easily overthrow their leaders, as they did the Czar and his dynasty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Probably they will; perhaps they may not. That is not the point of the address at all. The Senator was listening to me, unfortunately, with little understanding of what I have endeavored to convey if he believes that to be the point of what I was saying to-day.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	Nelson	Simmons
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Md.
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Thompson
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Townsend
Dillingham	La Follette	Pollock	Trammell
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Reed	Warren
Gay	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
Gerry	McCumber	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gronna	McKellar	Shafroth	Wolcott
Hale	McLean	Sheppard
Harding	Myers	Sherman

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the temporary absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce the necessary absence on important business of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

HOUSING OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the joint resolution now under consideration by the Senate is of very great importance. I have no purpose to delay unduly the vote on the joint resolution; but, as indicated yesterday in some inquiries I made of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I desired to make an investigation as to some of the facts and circumstances surrounding the housing program, with a view to submitting some remarks to-day, if justified in doing so by the information which I obtained. It is this information—incomplete but, I believe, upon the whole quite authentic and valuable—that I have taken the floor for the purpose of presenting to the Senate.

Mr. President, in emergencies like that through which the United States has just passed and is passing, it is inevitable that mistakes should be made. I do not desire, nor am I willing, to contribute anything either here or elsewhere calculated to prevent disclosures which may show mismanagement or corruption upon the part of any public officer or anyone else charged with a duty to this Government.

I am anxious that investigations may proceed wherever the circumstances justify them, but I am also anxious that neither this body nor that at the other end of the Capitol shall take action which may result in detriment or loss to the Government. I have about reached the conclusion from the best information which I have been able to obtain—which, as I have already stated, is only partial—that it would be improvident to discontinue the construction of the buildings on what is known as the Plaza, although I still believe, as I stated yesterday, that it was unwise to locate temporary buildings upon that public park.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay this bill aside in the hope of getting speedy action on the joint resolution to which the Senator from Arkansas is now addressing himself. I hope that we may be able to finish the discussion and take action upon the joint resolution within a reasonable time, say, something like an hour. I shall not undertake in any way to interfere with it that far at least, but I want to make this announcement: It is thought wise by Senators with whom I have consulted that the joint resolution should not be interfered with unnecessarily this morning. We are, nevertheless, losing time on the revenue bill, and I think every consideration requires that there should be speedy action on that bill. In view of the fact that we shall lose probably an hour at least this morning, I give notice that I am going to move for a recess when we finish the business of the day instead of an adjournment, so that there will be no morning hour to-morrow, and we may devote the whole time to-morrow to the revenue bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in all that has been stated by the chairman of the Finance Committee as to the importance of proceeding with the consideration of the revenue bill and of reaching a speedy conclusion in this body concerning its provisions I am in hearty accord. I have already stated that it is not my purpose to consume very much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of the joint resolution, but I feel it my duty to present some matters which I think are of interest, and which reflect some light upon the measure.

Recurring now to the statement made before the interruption a moment ago, that I had about reached the conclusion that it would be improvident to suspend the completion of the buildings on the Plaza, I want to submit to the Senate some of the information which has led me to that conclusion.

In the first place, the completion of these buildings is necessary and advisable in order to provide the required housing accommodations for employees of the Government, present and prospective. The statement was made yesterday by the very able chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that since the armistice was signed approximately 5,000 temporary employees have been discharged and have left Washington, and it is expected that during the next few months—probably by the 1st of July—a total of 27,000 temporary employees or others would be discharged, thus alleviating the conditions in Washington which have made necessary the execution of the housing program.

In the Evening Star of day before yesterday there was published a statement which has been called to my attention, and which I in turn call to the attention of the Senator from Missouri. I am going to ask that that statement be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. I have had no opportunity of verifying its correctness. All that I know about that feature of the subject is contained in the statement which I am inserting in the RECORD. The statement is headed:

Increase of 770 shown in classified service. Total of 5,525 employees added by commission—

Meaning the Civil Service Commission—in November, as against 4,755 separations.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star, Tuesday, Dec. 10, 1918.]

INCREASE OF 770 SHOWN IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE—TOTAL OF 5,525 EMPLOYEES ADDED BY COMMISSION IN NOVEMBER AS AGAINST 4,755 SEPARATIONS.

There was an addition of 770 employees in the United States Government service through the Civil Service Commission during the month of November. The gross admissions to the service were 5,525, with a gross separation of 4,755. It was stated by the commission to-day that it is expected there will be a considerable decrease during this month. The increases last month were the smallest since the outbreak of the war.

The departments showing decreases were: Food Administration, 81; Fuel Administration, 83; Government Printing Office, 56; Interstate Commerce Commission, 12; Department of Agriculture, 29; Smithsonian Institution, 13; Navy Department, 39; Director General of Railroads, 34; War Industries Board, 34; War Department, 36.

The increases were: Interior Department, 36; Department of Justice, 2; Department of Commerce, 13; Department of State, 23; Shipping Board, 49; Civil Service Commission, 18; Department of Labor, 105; Treasury Department, 1,118; War Trade Board, 50; Council of National Defense, 6; Federal Reserve Board, 8; Federal Trade Commission, 16.

The Panama Canal Zone office had no change in its force. The large increase attributed to the Treasury Department was due to the War-Risk Insurance and Internal-Revenue Bureaus.

Mr. ROBINSON. This statement shows, Mr. President, that during the last month, while it is true there were about 5,000 persons in the civil service discharged there were 5,770 more than the number discharged taken into the service of the Government, and instead of there being a net decrease in the number of persons coming to Washington as a result of Government employment it would appear that up to the present, or at least up to the 1st of December, there has been a net increase of 770.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator is in error in regard to the figures that I gave. The figures I gave are the net reductions. I mean to say that we asked each department how many employees did you have at the date the armistice was declared and how many employees have you now? Then the difference between those two figures gives the actual reductions.

The Senator's figures are of a different character. They take the number who came in and the number who went out in the classified civil service. It may be possible that in the classified civil service there was an increase, because many people are now getting into the classified civil service who heretofore have been received without any civil-service examination. The Senator will find that my figures showing a net reduction of over 5,000 are accurate, except that they are not complete, because there are other departments yet to be heard from.

Let me call attention to this: I have a letter here of December 9 from the Civil Service Commission. It is a memorandum furnished to Commissioner Galloway by the certification clerk. It reads as follows:

Memorandum for Commissioner Galloway: The following is a list of total number eligible, certified by various departments, during the following weeks:

Week of Nov. 2, 1918	3,024
Week of Nov. 9, 1918	2,831
Week of Nov. 16, 1918	2,107

There you will observe we pass the point of the armistice.

Week of Nov. 23, 1918	1,732
Week of Nov. 30, 1918	982
Week of Dec. 7, 1918	1,082

So since the armistice the number of certifications has been greatly decreased. I know the Senator wants to get the facts just as they are.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is right. I do not wish to present any figures that would lead to a wrong conclusion.

The Senator states that there has been a diminution since the armistice was signed in the number of Government employees of 5,000——

Mr. REED. Over that number.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of over 5,000; and that there is an anticipated diminution before the 1st of July of 27,000. The figures that I have used do relate to those in the classified service rather than those in all the services. In addition to this increase in the number of persons who are coming to Washington, as indicated in various departments mentioned in that article, there will be a much greater increase in the early future occasioned by the work of the decennial census and work in the Internal-Revenue Bureau. I have not had time nor the opportunity to reach a conclusion as to how great will be the diminution in the number of persons who were in Washington at the time of the signing of the armistice and the number who will be here when conditions have been readjusted. I do not think the figures of the Senator from Missouri are calculated to lead to an accurate conclusion upon that subject. I merely used these figures for the purpose of showing that while many are going a great many are also coming in.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator explain to us, because many of us would like to know, why it is that while we were discharging some 5,000 employees we were also drawing from every section of the United States another 5,000? Why could we not have used the 5,000 who were going for the ordinary purposes for which the 5,000 were drawn in?

Mr. ROBINSON. Making answer generally, the latter class of 5,000 came in through eligible lists established by the Civil Service Commission, and I anticipate that the large number who have gone out were temporary employees, many of whom had merely accepted employment for the period of the war, and no doubt many of them desiring to return to their former employment at the conclusion of hostilities.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean to say that the 5,000 increase in the eligible list have been people who have come from outside Washington? The fact is that a very large percentage of those are people who were already here who have been transferred to the eligible list.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not making any assertions on that subject. That is largely irrelevant to the purpose which I have in mind and which I am attempting to discuss, and I do not care to pursue it into details. I want to pursue the subject immediately under consideration, and that is the necessity of continuing the construction of these buildings for housing purposes.

Mr. President, whatever may be the net result with respect to people leaving the Government employment and others taking employment, it seems probable that these buildings will be required for the comfort and convenience of persons in the employ of the Government.

I wish to call to the attention of the Senator and of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a statement that has been submitted to me by the Assistant Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. It contains the formal application of 470 persons, most of them young ladies, who are seeking to secure housing accommodations, persons who are employed in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. These persons in their applications have stated the reasons for making their respective applications. In dozens, perhaps hundreds, of instances, they are based upon the fact that under their present accommodations they have no heat, or inadequate heat is provided. Hundreds of others are based on the theory that they are living in overcrowded conditions. This statement is illustrative of the conditions that now exist in the Capital of this Nation. There are dirty, small, unventilated rooms in the city of Washington, where as many as eight white girls are living, employees of the United States Government. I propose to give to the committee the names of those girls and the place of their residence. I do not intend to insert it in the RECORD, and the reason I do not intend to do so is that it contains statements of fact which in all probability should be investigated before being given publicity. There are dozens of instances where these young ladies have stated in their applications that they are living in immoral surroundings and they want to move from where they now reside in order that they may be protected from conditions which make their lives intolerable. There are a number of cases, the names of the parties given and their present place of residence, where they say on account of the insects which swarm in the beds where they sleep they are forced to seek some new and comfortable place to live. That statement which I am submitting to the Senate relates only to one department of the Government—the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

As I stated yesterday, I do not want to delay the consideration of the joint resolution. I know that it is the purpose of the members of this committee to save money to the Government, to make an investigation that ought to be made, and I do not wish, and I would not delay any investigation that would be calculated to expose any crook who has violated his duty to his Government in a time of national calamity. But at the same time I do not want my indignation over alleged misconduct and mismanagement of public affairs to do injustice, to bring about avoidable abuses, or to occasion unnecessary expense to the Government. There are many instances where young ladies, employees of the United States Government, are living three, four, and five in a single room poorly ventilated and unheated. There are a number of other instances where the conditions under which they are living are so unsanitary that they want to move.

If we were just beginning the consideration of a housing program it might, Mr. President and Senators, be well enough not to undertake it, but the situation is this: This program has already proceeded, and the question for us to determine now is whether we shall abruptly suspend it or exercise some caution in proceeding with those projects which from some consideration of public interest ought to be completed and suspend only those which investigation may show should be suspended.

I am aware of the fact that the committee in recommending the suspension of the construction of buildings on the Plaza has made an investigation. I am aware of the fact that the committee has reached the conclusion that this work ought to be suspended. But I am compelled from a conviction of duty to take issue with the committee as to the conclusion which it has reached, because, as I have already stated, these buildings are needed for the immediate use of young lady employees of the United States Government.

Now, I want to talk for just a few minutes about this building program from a statement which has been furnished me by a gentleman connected with the Housing Commission. All the information I have concerning the accuracy or correctness of this statement is in the statement itself. I want to be entirely frank with the Senate. I have had no opportunity to make a personal investigation of the accuracy of the statements that are contained here.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator give the name of the author of the statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Watson, who I understand is connected with the Housing Commission, gave me the statement at my request. He is an employee of the Department of Labor.

The housing program may consistently be divided into two classes: That which relates to the city of Washington and that which concerns other portions of the country. The appropriation for housing under the act of Congress for the city of Washington was $10,000,000. I think that statement was made by the Senator from Missouri yesterday. Five navy-yard housing projects were projected.

First. Temporary dormitories for 500 to cost about $250,000.

Second. Apartments for employees for which contract was made for $1,324,553, on the signing of the armistice reduced to $550,000.

Third. Contract for 300 houses for $1,126,073. This contract was let and was well started so far as excavations and receipt of material were concerned, but was stopped.

Fourth. Excavation contract in connection with these projects was let and is practically completed, at a cost of $70,000.

Fifth. A development on South Capitol Street, near the navy yard, suitable for the housing of navy-yard employees during the war emergency, but intended ultimately to serve for the housing of a portion of the present alley population. Project abandoned.

Department housing group, Twenty-third and B Streets, contract awarded for $2,212,300. This contract was well started but has been canceled, and it may cost $150,000 to secure release.

Dormitories on the Plaza site, at a cost of about $1,834,500, without furniture.

The development for the employees of the Washington Steel & Ordnance Co. Project abandoned.

Plans for a temporary hospital were completed and bids received, but the project has been abandoned.

Plans were in progress for apartments and dormitories for employees of the Bureau of Standards. This development also has been abandoned.

From this it will be seen that the actual buildings in the city of Washington now proceeding are: Navy apartments, $550,000; Navy temporary dormitories, $250,000; excavation for Navy development, $70,000; dormitories on Plaza site, without furniture, $1,834,500.

The furniture for the temporary Navy project and for the Plaza project amounts to approximately $330,000, all of which has been purchased and substantially all delivered.

Therefore, for the actual cost of construction for work now proceeding, and furniture, it is estimated that approximately $3,000,000 will be spent out of $10,000,000 appropriated. To complete the Plaza site will cost about $100,000 in labor. All the materials have been purchased for this project, and the bulk of them are on the site, and any change made in connection with this project will have to be done on the salvage basis.

The Senator from Missouri stated yesterday that a saving of $400,000 would be effected by discontinuing this improvement. The statement here is that all material and furniture has already been purchased and delivered and that the saving will amount to $100,000 in the matter of labor, the remainder of the saving depending upon the effectiveness with which the salvage is handled.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I am surprised that the gentleman has made that statement in view of the fact that he was in the room of the committee and heard the testimony of Mr. Eidlitz, for Eidlitz said, as I stated yesterday, that the furniture had been purchased, and I think I said it was largely on hand, but Mr. Eidlitz said it could be turned back, in all probability, with but a very slight loss. The gentleman who wrote this letter does not state that, and he ought to have stated it. That, of course, makes the chief difference. There is the other difference, that of the laundry, which I do not think he has yet referred to in the statement.

I am informed now since I made my statement yesterday that there is a very large amount of material on hand that has not gone into these buildings that can be salvaged. I only state that as a matter of information. It has been stated to me that a very large part of the plumbing and—again I can only state it as a matter of information—that probably 25 per cent of the buildings remain to be completed—that is, instead of being 90 per cent completed, it is only 75 per cent—and the material is here and can be salvaged. I do not think this gentleman ought to have made the statement that only $100,000 can be saved when he sat there and heard his chief clearly state that all the furniture could be turned back with very slight loss.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman referred to, Mr. Watson, did not make the statement which the Senator has attributed to him. That is the conclusion or construction the Senator makes upon it. The Senator's conclusion concerning it or the construction he places upon it is wrong. Here is what he said. I read it:

To complete the Plaza site will cost about $100,000 in labor. All the materials have been purchased for this project, and the bulk of them are on the site, and any change made in connection with this project will have to be done on the salvage basis.

There is no difference in the statement made by the Senator from Missouri and the statement made by the gentleman whom I am quoting. The only difference is a matter of conclusion. The gentleman, Mr. Watson, who gave me the statement which I am using, says that the saving in labor will be $100,000, and the saving in materials he does not undertake to estimate.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think he would have been a little more frank if he had said: "The estimate of my chief is that it can be salvaged, so that there will be very slight loss"?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know. The Senator has stated that his chief, Mr. Eidlitz, made the statement before the committee that the furniture could be returned without great loss. I take it the Senator correctly remembers the testimony and that the statement is true, but I am not reflecting upon the frankness of anyone under the circumstances of this case. I know, as others know, that when furniture has once been bought the condition must be exceptional to enable the purchaser in large quantities to return it without considerable loss. As to what the loss will be I have no more means of knowing than has the Senator from Missouri, and the opinion of Mr. Eidlitz may not be any better than the opinion of Mr. Watson or some one else. I can not say about that. I care very little about it.

Now, then, this is the showing which it seems to me justifies the continuance of this particular project. I can not say, nor can the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator say, just what might be saved by suspending this construction. I know the Senator desires to save all that he can. I know it is desirable at this time, more than at any other time in the history of the Nation, to practice economy; but in view of the conditions which I have already described in part, conditions which have been very ineffectively described in the language that I used, conditions which disclose exorbitant charges now being made upon many of these Government employees for inadequate and unsanitary housing, I reach the conclusion that it would be better for the United States Government to keep the furniture that it bought, to use the materials that it now has on the ground, and to buy the additional $100,000 worth of labor, complete these buildings, and give these Government employees the advantage of housing facilities. That is my conclusion. The Senate can reach any conclusion that it thinks is justified under the facts and circumstances.

I wish to discuss now for just a few minutes another feature of the joint resolution—that feature which suspends construction throughout the country. I have very little detailed information concerning this subject. I have engagements which I am compelled to fill, and shall hasten to a conclusion, making some further reference to the statement from which I read a while ago, and submit the matter to the Senate for such consideration as it may think the public good justifies.

The appropriation for housing, etc., in other parts of the country was $90,000,000. The bureau had taken up 89 such projects in approximately 80 different cities. Construction contracts had been let on 55. Plans were completed and ready for contract on 22. Plans were in preparation on 7. On the signing of the armistice 55 projects were abandoned, 14 projects were curtailed, and 20 are proceeding as planned.

The contracts which are proceeding (including Washington) amount to $23,076,961.11.

Curtailed projects reduced from $17,330,957.29 to $11,297,471.

Projects canceled, $17,627,952, at a cost of about $4,053,482.

Projects canceled without loss, $5,458,275.

In addition, approximately $20,000,000 worth of housing was ready to submit to contractors but was abandoned.

It is estimated that with 15 per cent allowed for contingencies this portion of the bureau's work can be completed for a total cost of about $45,000,000. Of this amount approximately one-third has already been disbursed and a second third is obligated for the necessary materials. In canceling 23 contracts adjustments will have to be made for materials ordered and for the expenditures incurred by the contractor and for sums due the contractor for his services, which will, of course, show a certain loss on account of the canceled contract.

All those that are proceeding in whole or in part have received consideration from the salvage point of view.

This bureau believes that it would be a financial mistake to stop the jobs that are now proceeding. Most of them are in various stages of completion. It is difficult to estimate their value, and the chances are good that they would be sacrificed when the time came to dispose of them and a larger loss would be realized than would result if these operations were completed. We would further call attention to the fact that the market for incomplete houses is restricted, and that it would naturally appeal only to speculators, whereas a completed structure would have a definite value for a great many different purchasers.

Furthermore, the contract work on each of these projects being done as a unit, it costs very much less than for individual purchasers to put up these houses, which means providing their own capital, their own materials, and assembling the necessary plant.

Three alternatives are now possible:

First. The Government can continue at a wholesale rate, comparatively inexpensive because of the size of the undertaking. When the houses are finished they should find a ready market.

Second. A single contractor or speculator (if such a person can be found under present conditions) can take over the entire project as it stands and complete it on a basis of wholesale cost. If the single contractor buys in order to complete and sell, he is virtually a speculator and will figure on a large profit between the price he pays the Government and the price at which he will sell the houses when completed to the public, a profit without which he will not enter upon so large an undertaking. It seems inadvisable for the Government to offer this profit to speculators.

Third. Individual purchasers of single houses or small groups of houses will have to figure a comparatively high rate of expense for completing individual houses or groups which they purchase.

If it be conceivable, as it scarcely is, that individual buyers will take single houses or small groups in their various stages of incompleteness, then, in figuring the price they will pay, they will have to count on a high pro rata expense of completion; they will deduct that expense of completion from the market price of the houses when finished and will pay the Government only the difference. On this basis, therefore, there is again a substantial loss to the Government.

Comparing all three methods, it seems reasonably clear that the plan of governmental completion is that which will bring the largest salvage value. No plan can be mathematically proven to be the best. We must take that which appears the best on the probabilities and which would be the one selected by a business man in his own affairs. Of the three it seems clear that the business man, if he had the capital, would naturally decide to complete the project himself and sell on completion.

In all cases the utilities are still incomplete, and unless completed by the bureau or by the municipality under arrangements made by the bureau as a war measure, they would remain incomplete until completed by the municipality. Left to itself the municipality would not act for a contractor, except by passing the necessary ordinances, levying a special assessment, and collecting the assessment, a procedure which ordinarily occupies a considerable time.

Therefore unless the Bureau of Housing proceeds to complete these utilities, the houses will be more or less valueless for some time to come. The obstacles which would present themselves in respect to these needed public utilities to any buyer of the tract—still more to buyers of separate parts of the tract—would be considerations militating against the price which the purchasers would pay to the Government. Every item of incompleteness in the matter of a public utility would cause a buyer to reduce his bid substantially; he would not know how much it would cost him to get water, sewers, streets, pavements, light to the project, and he would not know when, if ever, he would get them all there. Without these utilities the houses are substantially valueless.

It is also to be remembered that these houses, as above mentioned, are in various stages of completion, that if the work is stopped they will be exposed to the elements during the worst period of the year, and considerable depreciation may be looked for from physical causes alone before work could be recommenced and the houses finished.

The staff of the United States Housing Corporation is composed of experts in the problems involved in building construction and property development. It has given this subject mature consideration, and it is its deliberate judgment that the best interests of the Government, in the salvage of its housing projects, demands the completion without further curtailment of the developments now proceeding.

Mr. President, I have taken the trouble to put into the RECORD this statement, which seems to me a clear and forcible one from the standpoint of the Housing Committee. It is, of course, desirable that the Congress, in passing upon this important matter, exercise its very soundest judgment. If the completion of the projects that are proceeding would result in great loss to the Government or would result in impairment of the service, it would be the duty of Congress to suspend them. In all probability unlimited claims against the Government will be asserted by reason of our action if we arbitrarily undertake to rescind these contracts. I do not know whether the contracts themselves contain provisions for cancellation; I assume that they do; at least, they ought to; and it may be that through such provisions the loss to the Government arising out of claims hereafter to be asserted may be reduced to a minimum.

I am entirely content, Senators, that, upon consideration of this case as a whole, the Senate determines, first, whether it wants to deny the Government employees of the District of Columbia who are now suffering such gross inconvenience and mistreatment, if you please, some of them paying half their entire salary for inadequate and disgraceful accommodations, according to the statement contained in the documents I have referred to, necessary accommodations. It is for Congress to determine, in the first instance, whether, with this project so nearly completed, almost available for use, we shall now suspend it entirely and leave these uncompleted buildings to be sold or salvaged in any way that is possible.

We all know that an incomplete building has little salvage value compared to one that is complete and ready for use. We all know that the loss, if this construction be stopped, will be very great. Nobody can tell what it will be. It is a question for Congress to determine, and I am submitting it, so far as I am concerned, being compelled to leave the Chamber to attend another engagement in a committee. The buildings on the Plaza can not be sold. They must be wrecked, and unless some use of them is made it will result in total loss, for probably the removal of the buildings will consume their entire value in the present incomplete state.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Before the Senator from Arkansas takes his seat, I merely want to ask him a question or two.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have not studied this joint resolution and do not know much about it. I had concluded to vote for it, but the statement which the Senator from Arkansas has just made with regard to the conditions existing as to the housing of these young women, which he says he does not expect to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. ROBINSON. I expect the statement which I have made to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I shall not put the applications of the young ladies for housing accommodations into the RECORD for reasons that will suggest themselves to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Well, that matter will change my mind on voting on the joint resolution, so far as I am personally concerned, if the vote is taken to-day. There are a great many things which ought to have more consideration than dollars and cents in connection with our Government, and this is one of them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, so far as the Plaza project is concerned, it resolves itself into a very simple proposition, which I may state in this way: If there were no legislation whatever upon the subject, in view of the fact that employees of the Government are leaving Washington at the rate of hundreds daily, there having been a decrease of 5,000 in a little more than 30 days, and it being estimated that there will be a decrease of 27,000 within six months, would the Senate to-day vote to appropriate $400,000 to provide housing accommodations for 1,800 clerks in the city of Washington for a period of less than 12 months, requiring those clerks to pay $45 a month for room and two meals daily?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question in connection with what he has just said: First, does the Senator not believe that the question involves more than 1,800 clerks? Does he think that there could be only 1,800 clerks provided for in the Plaza dormitories?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is the estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be one for each room. Is it not true that, as a rule, with some exceptions, it is contemplated that there shall be two employees in each room?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not know that that was the fact.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, would not that be a reasonable supposition?

Mr. LENROOT. I think it would. I will put it in this way, and be extremely liberal. Let us say we can take care of 3,600 clerks.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin another question in regard to the time. Why does the Senator say it is to be for 12 months?

Mr. LENROOT. Because I do not think there is any Senator who would contend that this housing upon the Plaza should continue for any longer period than 12 months. The Housing Corporation themselves say that they expect at the end of 12 months all need of this housing will be gone; that the buildings will be abandoned and torn down.

Mr. NORRIS. They may be right about that. However, I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me to interject this much into what he is saying, that I have no idea that statement will be borne out by the facts. Certainly it will be several years before we get back, if we ever get back—probably we shall never get back—to where we were, so far as the number of clerks who were employed by the Government before the war is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So that the housing proposition is going to be a serious thing for several years.

Mr. LENROOT. The housing proposition, Mr. President, may be a more or less serious thing, but the Senate will bear in mind that I think it is less than two years ago we completed the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to remove the buildings upon this very Plaza for the purpose of creating a park, and I presume that Congress is still of the opinion that that should be a park. It is fair to assume that at the end of 12 months Congress itself will order the removal of these buildings, unless we have a use for them very different from that of housing clerks.

I wish to call attention to the fact that there is to be no saving in money except in the way of accommodation to the people who will occupy these buildings upon the Plaza. I have had occasion, as other Senators have had, I have no doubt, during the past winter to make inquiry as to the average price paid for room and board by the average clerk here in the city of Washington, and it has been my observation that the $1,200 clerk, even at the very high prices that have prevailed, has not paid above an average of $45 per month for his rooming accommodations and two meals daily.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I again interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. My observation has been that about $45 for a $1,200 clerk, with two in a room and two meals a day, without any provision for laundry or anything of that kind, the accommodations being out quite a distance, would probably be the average, but farther in, for more desirable rooms, I think the price would average considerably above that. It does not follow, however, that the Government should even charge that much. Personally it seems to me that the idea of charging $45 a month for each roomer is exorbitant, and that the Government ought not to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has been asking me some questions. I wish to ask him one. I wish to ask the Senator, if this were an original proposition, whether he would be willing to-day to vote $400,000 of the people's money to provide for accommodations for 1,800 clerks on the Plaza for a period of 12 months?

Mr. NORRIS. Most emphatically no; of course I would not.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I can not see how the Senator can justify the expenditure of the money to continue this project.

Mr. NORRIS. Since the Senator has asked me the question, let me tell him my viewpoint.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. We have the buildings; they are there now, practically finished and furnished, some of them with the furniture in now, and the girls ready to go in——

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator misses my question.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think not.

Mr. LENROOT. There is involved $400,000 additional expense before these buildings can be utilized.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. But if we do not appropriate that $400,000, if we do not finish the buildings—what little finishing is needed now—we will have an elephant on our hands which we can not use.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I beg to differ with the Senator upon that point, because I think there is a use for these buildings, not that they should be completed, as contemplated, for hotel purposes, but there is a use for these buildings for hospital purposes; that is very much more important than the use to which some gentlemen would put them.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, may I ask the Senator about that?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It would cost a great deal of money to remodel them, would it not, for hospital purposes?

Mr. LENROOT. It would cost some money.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think the center of the city of Washington is a suitable place in which to construct a hospital, when we are already overcrowded? Would not that only add to the congestion that we are trying to get away from and bring in not only the sick but all of their necessary attendants, and thus increase the population to a great extent?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin will reply, as the Senator from Nebraska no doubt is aware, that we are now being asked to appropriate $26,000,000 for hospital purposes. Those hospitals are not going to be of a permanent nature, nor will they be permanently necessary. They will be necessary for some months to come—perhaps for 12 months—but we can not wait, or ought not to wait, to build hospitals for our returning soldiers to facilitate their rehabilitation. We ought, and we must, utilize existing buildings. Here are buildings that can be utilized, and utilized very soon, but they can not be turned into hospitals after we have expended $275,000 for furniture that will not be suitable for hospital purposes and after we have completed the plumbing for hotel purposes. We ought to work upon them now with the idea of devoting them to hospital purposes rather than to rooming purposes. I do not think there will be a loss there in the sense the Senator speaks of, because, if the buildings are not completed for rooming purposes, we can put them to a higher purpose and a more necessary purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state how many patients they would accommodate and how many additional persons besides the patients would necessarily be brought into Washington if these buildings were used as a hospital?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that I am informed as to conditions at the Walter Reed Hospital; and while they are doing the very best they can at the Walter Reed Hospital—and I am not criticizing it—the facilities and accommodations that would be afforded the soldiers in the rooms in the buildings upon the Plaza would be infinitely superior to the accommodations many hundreds of soldiers are receiving at the Walter Reed Hospital. So, Mr. President, it does resolve itself exactly to the proposition of whether the Senate now is willing to vote $400,000, none of which it will get back, for the purpose of providing rooming accommodations for 1,800 clerks when they are being discharged at the rate of hundreds daily.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] read from a letter. I am not going to comment upon the propriety of a member of the Housing Corporation sending to a Senator such a letter without at least first presenting it to the committee investigating the subject; but the gentleman who wrote the letter certainly intended to leave the impression with the Senator from Arkansas and with the Senate, as the Senator from Arkansas drew his conclusion, that there would only be a saving of $100,000 in labor if this work were stopped now. That was the conclusion that the Senator from Arkansas drew from the letter, and that was the conclusion undoubtedly intended by the author of the letter that should be drawn by every Senator who heard it. Now, let me take just a moment, Mr. President, to read from the testimony——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, may I interrupt him?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There was a resolution introduced into the Senate a year or two ago, which elicited an answer showing that the governmental departments were paying at least $500,000 a year for the rent of office buildings, and so forth, and I am wondering whether the Senator has given any consideration to the proposition as to whether or not these completed structures or those that are in process of construction can be utilized for that purpose?

Mr. LENROOT. Not exactly that, I will reply to the Senator; but I have given some consideration to the fact that we have erected a great many temporary office buildings—I think a sufficient number—so that it will not be necessary to rent buildings for some time to come. Those office buildings already erected and fitted out for office purposes can be used in a very short time. For instance, the group of buildings at Seventeenth and B Streets.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, aside from that, if the buildings on the Plaza can not be utilized for office buildings, or if that would not be necessary under the Senator's view, I am in sympathy with the idea of the Senator that in the process of housing the soldiers who come back there might be a segregation of those who might occupy these places really without having attendants.

Mr. LENROOT. I think so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think that we ought to destroy these properties now, when they may be utilized for that purpose, if only for a year or more.

Mr. LENROOT. That is my view of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. This thought has occurred to me, too, in connection with this matter: I confess I have been a great deal out of patience with the way in which some of this money has been expended, if I am rightly informed; but as these buildings have been put up here at the public expense, I am free to admit that there is just malice enough in my heart to wish that they might be rented out to employees of the Government at reasonable rates and thereby even scores with some of the landlords who have been filching the pockets of the public.

Mr. LENROOT. I am quite in sympathy with that view, although I do not think, having in view the financial condition of the Treasury, that we should refuse to adopt business principles to accomplish any such purpose as the Senator now suggests.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the committee have before it anyone connected with any of the hospitals to get their judgment in respect to the use of these buildings for hospital purposes?

Mr. LENROOT. No. I wish to say that this is only a preliminary report of the committee. The committee is pursuing its investigations further. This preliminary report was made because the committee was ready to form the conclusion as to the Plaza project that thousands upon thousands of dollars would be lost to the Government each day that this project goes on.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear the Senator's answer. Did he say that there was somebody who appeared before the committee in that connection?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I say that we have not yet reached that point in the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a subject, then, so far as the committee is concerned, upon which there has been taken no testimony and no investigation made?

Mr. LENROOT. There has been no testimony whatever on that branch of the subject.

Now, Mr. President, from the letter of Mr. Watson, the Housing Corporation evidently would intend to have the Senate and the country believe that these housing projects have been carried on in an economical manner, and in the letter they speak of constructing these houses at wholesale rates. I wish to take a moment, Mr. President, to give to the Senate some information that came to the committee at its session this morning.

Let me say, first, that, in my opinion, there was an absolute violation of law upon the part of the Housing Corporation in the letting of all of these contracts. The law provides that these contracts should be "let to the lowest responsible bidder, the Government reserving the right to reject any and all bids."

Mr. President, I state deliberately that in a legal sense, in the sense contemplated by Congress, there was no bidding whatever upon these projects. I shall not take the time——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, how were they let?

Mr. LENROOT. They were let by the Housing Corporation selecting a certain number of contractors. In the case of the Plaza project they selected seven, and they invited these seven contractors to make proposals to the Housing Corporation for the construction of the buildings. The contractors were required to state what fee they would do the work for—that is, furnish the know-how—the Housing Corporation fixing a maximum fee of $60,000. The contractors were required to state how much they would require for the rental of their equipment; they were required to state how much they would agree to furnish trucks and teams at an hourly or a per diem rate; they were required to state what, in their opinion, the work would cost; but there was no requirement upon them to agree to complete the work for the cost estimated by them. They were required to state within what time they believed the project could be completed, but there was no requirement that they should agree to complete the project within that time, or any penalty if they failed to do so. The only semblance of bidding, Mr. President, was upon the fee received, upon the rental of equipment, and upon the charge they would make for the use of automobiles, trucks, and teams; but, Mr. President, the Housing Corporation in letting these contracts did not put it upon the basis of what the contractors did compete upon.

That, as a matter of fact, only counted about 20 points out of a possible 100 in determining who should be the contractor. They gave so many points to the estimate of the contractor as to how much the project would cost, although, as I have said, there was no agreement to build the project for the estimated cost. They gave so many points to the contractor as to the time in which he could complete the building, so that, for instance, if a contractor stated that it would cost a million and a half dollars, although he would not agree to build it for that, he would get that advantage in being looked upon as the lowest bidder. If he said it could be built in three and one-half months as against another contractor who would say five months, the three and one-half months fellow, although there was no requirement or obligation upon him to build within three and one-half months, would have that advantage in being looked upon as the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a curiosity to know who the lawyer was who advised that course.

Mr. LENROOT. The committee has been endeavoring to ascertain that fact. The committee was informed that legal counsel was taken and that the Housing Corporation were advised by written opinion that this was a compliance with the law. Mr. Eidlitz was asked to furnish that written opinion. That opinion was furnished yesterday and was put into the RECORD this morning, so I have it not with me, although I did have it in my pocket yesterday. I wish to say that that written opinion does not in any sense justify or warrant the course that was pursued by the corporation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to call it a legal opinion?

Mr. LENROOT. The opinion is a good one upon the point that it covers, but it did not attempt or purport to cover the point as to whether the letting of a contract in such a way was in compliance with the law. I will state, further, that Mr. Eidlitz was asked this morning by me whether this legal opinion which he had produced was what he relied upon in taking the course that was pursued. Mr. Eidlitz stated that that was not the sole thing, of course; that members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House had been consulted; and that it was the wish of members of that committee that the work be done in this way.

I may say in passing that, as the Senate will remember better than I—because I was not a Member of this body at that time—the House, as it passed the housing bill, did not require the letting of these contracts to the lowest responsible bidder. That amendment was put upon the bill by the Senate, and it remained on when the bill finally became a law, so that any expression of opinion that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives might have given to the Housing Corporation had no materiality whatever, because at the time they were discussing it there was nothing in the bill that required the contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. President, this contract, so called, was let to the Fuller Construction Co. with a fixed fee of $58,000, and a rental of equipment of $22,000. I will say that the committee has not yet gone into the question of what the value of the equipment was to be, and as to whether or not that was a reasonable rental; but the committee naturally supposed that that was the extent of the profit of the Fuller Construction Co.—$80,000. It developed this morning, however, that while the Fuller Construction Co. was getting three dollars and a half an hour for trucks—three and five ton trucks—and we were told that as many as 40 were used at a time on the work, the man that actually furnished the trucks was getting $3 an hour for them; that while they were getting $1.12½ and $1.25 an hour for teams, the man who actually furnished the teams was getting 75 cents an hour for those same teams. Now, I do not say that the Fuller Co. did not have a right to charge that amount, because they stated $3.50 an hour in their bid, and they stated $9 a day for teams without scrapers and $10 a day for teams with scrapers. I will state in passing that it appeared from the testimony this morning that, while the Fuller Construction Co. were getting a dollar a day additional for the furnishing of a scraper, it also appeared that the value of that scraper was $12, so that the Fuller Construction Co. were getting a rental of $1 per day for scrapers worth $12 apiece. I want to repeat that there is nothing illegal in that. The Housing Corporation accepted that proposition of the Fuller Construction Co., and so, from a legal standpoint, they were justified in doing it; but it is merely an illustration of the way the Government is getting these houses at "wholesale prices." As far as the committee has gotten into this proposition it has not been convinced, I may say, of the economical production of this housing proposition.

I want to get back for just a moment. The statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has been questioned, that $410,000 would be saved by abandoning the Plaza project. I want to read from the testimony of Mr. Eidlitz:

> The CHAIRMAN. Now, then, we get down to this, that by not furnishing this project we would save $310,000.
> Mr. EIDLITZ. How do you figure that; on what basis?
> The CHAIRMAN. $275,000 on the furniture, which you say can be turned back with a slight loss, and $35,000 on the laundry, makes $310,000; and if you stopped work on these buildings at once you would save another $100,000, which would be $410,000. That is the situation, is it not?
> Mr. EIDLITZ. That is about it.

So, Mr. President, there can be no question concerning the saving to the Government by stopping this work now. In my judgment it will be at least $400,000. In my judgment it will be more than that.

Now, just a word, Mr. President, with reference to the contracts outside of the city of Washington, and then I shall conclude.

The committee has not had the opportunity as yet to go into such an investigation of the other projects as has been made of the Plaza project, but the committee finds this: A committee of citizens from Bridgeport, Conn., came before us the other day pleading for a continuation of all of the buildings which had been commenced in the city of Bridgeport by the Housing Corporation. It appeared that in the case of one group of buildings under contract at Bridgeport only the foundations had been put in at this time, and yet the Housing Corporation proposes to go ahead and complete those buildings, while the authority of the Housing Corporation, delegated to them by the President of the United States, and the power of the President of the United States, and the only power that he has with reference to this housing matter, is as follows:

> The President, for the purposes of providing housing, local transportation, and other general community utilities for such industrial workers as are engaged in arsenals and navy yards of the United States and in industries connected with and essential to the national defense, and their families, and also employees of the United States whose duties require them to reside in the District of Columbia * * * is hereby authorized and empowered—

And so forth.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, what are those houses at Bridgeport to cost?

Mr. LENROOT. The total cost of the Bridgeport project is $3,440,000. I would not be able to segregate now——

Mr. REED. The houses? I can answer the question. It was stated that the houses would cost from $3,500 to $5,500 apiece.

Mr. KENYON. The cost of the whole project at Bridgeport is the amount the Senator stated?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; $3,440,000.

Mr. KENYON. How much of that has been expended on the foundations?

Mr. LENROOT. We have been promised those exact figures, but they have not yet been furnished to the committee.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator can not say how much of a saving there will be there in stopping that work?

Mr. LENROOT. No; but while I have not had any extensive experience in building, I do not think there is any man living who, as a business proposition, would say that either the Government or a private citizen, where only the foundations of a building have been put in and some of the material ordered, would save money by going on to complete that building. All business experience is otherwise.

I understand and appreciate the necessity for the passage of this joint resolution at the earliest possible moment, and I shall not occupy the time of the Senate further, except to say that in the case of this Plaza project I think Senators should clearly understand that in voting against the joint resolution they are voting to take $400,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of providing houses for 1,800 employees under the conditions that are now existing, when they are so rapidly leaving Washington.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming that this joint resolution is passed, what plan has been adopted—or, if none has been adopted, what plan will be recommended—for the disposition of these buildings?

Mr. LENROOT. Speaking only for myself, I would expect that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—the whole committee, because it is only a subcommittee that is conducting this investigation—would take up that matter and make a recommendation. My own view is that these Plaza buildings should be utilized for hospital purposes, and I shall be ready to join in such a recommendation.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I have not followed closely the discussion of the joint resolution, and the effect its passage will have upon the projects at different places; but it seems to me that it is better to determine the matter as two propositions and decide whether we should stop the construction work here or whether it should be stopped at the other different places where it is now in progress.

If this were an original proceeding, nobody would now vote to appropriate money to construct buildings to house Government employees. There is no question about that; and at the time this bill was proposed, and before that time, I thought that these different agencies that were being created by the Government, and that would necessarily require the collection of employees in large numbers, ought not to be brought to Washington. I said there was no reason why the Food Administration should not be located in St. Louis or Chicago or the Fuel Administration at one or the other of these places. We do not produce fuel and we do not produce food in Washington in the sense that these things were intended to be regulated by these agencies. Those cities could have easily taken care of and absorbed the employees that necessarily had to be collected without constructing more buildings. I suggested that procedure then, and it was not done. No attention was paid to it. In this bill providing for the housing there is a provision—and I offered one as an amendment to some other bill, if not this one—that they should first consider whether these agencies might not be as well administered in some other city before expending the appropriation for buildings here.

We would not, as I say, as an initial proposition, proceed now along this line; and it may be true, and probably is, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, that the Government has been robbed in the construction of these buildings on the Plaza. I should think so, as an offhand expression of opinion, when they tell me that the construction of these buildings out here will cost $1,800,000. Just from common knowledge and my general information, I should think so. The conditions under which they were constructed, however, may excuse the excessive cost to some extent.

Now, the buildings have been virtually completed. What shall be done with them? Has the purpose that moved the Congress to authorize their construction been accomplished? Has the reason for it ceased? No. They say that Washington is not so much congested as it has been heretofore. Have you heard of prices being more reasonable to these people who were compelled to come here to work during the emergency? No. Have you heard of their accommodations being better or are the living conditions improved? No. The money has been expended. The buildings are down there. Has anybody given the information, or does anybody have information, as to how many persons have applied for rooms in these dormitories? Is there any lack of applications for rooms that would indicate that the buildings, after they have been finished, will not be used by these Government employees? If there is, it has not been disclosed here.

That is the condition. I think the buildings ought to be completed. I do not understand yet why anybody, in official or private life, would ever have had these buildings constructed on the public Plaza, where it was known that they could not be permanent, but must necessarily be razed, and soon. There is no salvage to be realized from these buildings, or not much. They can not be sold as buildings that can be used, since the ground can not be conveyed; and if they are not to be utilized for the purpose for which they were constructed, then it seems to me they ought to be immediately torn down and removed. You would not leave them here in a half-completed condition. They would be valueless to the Government under those circumstances. So far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of converting them into hospitals at all. Some one suggested here that they should be used as a tuberculosis hospital. What would you want with a tuberculosis hospital here in the middle of this city, right by the Capitol of the Nation? It should not be thought of. We must have tuberculosis hospitals, of course, but they should not be erected at the very door of the National Capitol.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not know that anybody had even suggested that.

Mr. KIRBY. Somebody discussed it here yesterday.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think anyone would think that this was a proper place for a tuberculosis hospital.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not think it is a proper place for any sort of a hospital, so far as I am concerned. They might use these other buildings down here on Nineteenth and B Streets, that are supposed to be temporary in character, for hospital purposes. That might very well be done and the Government might be saved expense thereby.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. NEW. I was just about to remark that I think the propriety of using those buildings for hospital purposes would depend almost entirely upon the character of the cases that were to be assigned to the buildings. Certainly they should not be used as tuberculosis hospitals. If you were to assign to them cases of a certain character, that would not be a fit place for them at all; but out at Walter Reed Hospital, for instance, there are a good many soldiers who are convalescent and who are able to get around Washington with comparative ease, but they are remote from the city where they are. It is inconvenient for them to come in on the cars. They have no means of transportation other than the public means. If those convalescent soldiers were permitted to occupy these places down here on the Plaza, where they are within a very few minutes' walk of many places of public interest and within a few minutes' ride of the center of the city, and so on, I think it would be a good place for them; and I think the buildings are adapted to the care of patients of that character.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, while it does not seem to me that they are well located or suitable for hospital purposes, if it should be found that such is the case they might be utilized along that line for the kind of people that the Senator thinks could be taken care of there. So far as my information and knowledge extend, however, the man who is in a hospital needs better accommodations than the man whose physical condition is such that he is not required to go to a hospital; and these buildings ought to be finished in as good style for hospital purposes or better style than for people who are well and do not need physicians. I do not see, therefore, that that furnishes any excuse for not completing the project.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator please, I should like to set him right upon that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. REED. If the buildings are completed for hospital purposes, they will be completed in a different way than they would for rooms; and if we completed them for rooms, then we would have to tear out and replace. If we stop now, in so far as they are incomplete, the proper kind of finishing could be done for a hospital; and, besides that, the furniture that is to go in—and that constitutes $275,000 of this $400,000—would be utterly unfit for hospitals.

Mr. KIRBY. Conceding that the condition is as stated by the Senator from Missouri, we ought to determine whether we are going to finish them at all or not, and then whether we are going to use them for this purpose for which they were intended in the beginning or whether we are going to change them so as to be adapted to the other purpose. I think we ought not to stop construction at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If we intend to convert those uncompleted buildings into hospitals, it is necessary that there shall be a pause at some time and somewhere in the process of construction and an alteration in the plans. We could adopt this joint resolution, which would stop the work of construction, and then when the committee has concluded its investigation, if it determined that it would be wise to utilize them for hospitals, then a plan could be provided under which they could be converted into hospitals, and the saving to which the Senator from Missouri has just referred would then be effectuated.

Mr. KIRBY. It seems to me—and experience, I think, demonstrates it—that when you stop construction on any particular great project, and resume after a time, you lose a great deal in actual value; you have been damaged greatly. It strikes me that the committee might well have come in here and said: "We ought to have these buildings changed to hospital purposes, or we ought to have the whole project abandoned and the buildings razed."

So far as I am concerned, I do not think the project should be abandoned now. I believe it ought to be completed and the buildings ought to be used for the purpose for which they were constructed and let these people who come here to do war work have an opportunity to get a fairly good place to stay, at a reasonable price, in the city of Washington—a thing that has not been possible within the last year and a half. I am in favor of that being done.

It has not been said that these rooms are not all applied for. It has not been said that even at the rental that they propose to charge down there the project will not produce $960,000 a year. Practically a million dollars a year is what they expect to charge for the use of these buildings when they are completed. That will furnish some little return on the investment and the expenditure, probably. But I never have been much in sympathy with this idea of the Housing Corporation calling in real-estate agents of the city of Washington and having them fix the price which should be charged to the war workers and putting it so nearly equal to the price charged by all the rest of the people in Washington that no great benefit can result if that sort of policy is followed. But I am in favor of completing these buildings, and in favor of their being used for the purpose for which they were constructed, in the hope that, as I say, these war workers in Washington will be given a fair opportunity to secure reasonable accommodations in the city without being subjected to any further extortionate charges.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I do not agree with the committee in a portion of the joint resolution that they have proposed, I believe——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a second?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Did I understand the Senator from Arkansas to say that this project would bring in $960,000 a year?

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that it is proposed to charge $40 apiece for the accommodations furnished, and that there are 2,000 rooms, and that all of them will be occupied.

Mr. REED. I am making this answer now to save time. The Senator's information is like the information of most men who know only part of the facts. It is proposed to furnish the rooms, to furnish the heat, to furnish the washing, and to furnish food. Of course, the Senator would hardly expect all of that to be profit. Now, the fact is that the man who is to run it—one of these dollar-a-year men—stated to the committee that there would not be one cent of return even on the rooms; that it would cost the entire $40 or $45 a month to pay the expenses incident to running the affair, without charging off anything whatsoever for the use of the buildings, so that the $960,000 will disappear.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. At the time I consented to laying aside the unfinished business I had no idea that the consideration of this joint resolution would occupy more than an hour. The Senator from Nebraska tells me that he will not occupy the floor more than 10 or 15 minutes, and I will yield that much longer; but if the debate is going to continue I shall feel compelled to ask the Senate to take up the unfinished business immediately after the Senator from Nebraska has finished.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I have started to say several times, I do not agree with a portion of the joint resolution that the committee have proposed, and yet it seems to me that the committee are entitled to a great deal of commendation for the work they have done and that they propose to do. Their investigation has disclosed a condition of affairs that ought to be given the widest publicity, and with most of their conclusions I am in hearty accord.

It seems to me, from what the committee have shown us, that a great many of these contracts have been made absolutely contrary to and in defiance of the laws that Congress enacted, and that no regard whatever has been paid to the congressional action and to the law under which they ought to have proceeded. I want to beg Senators, however, not to permit that fact to control their votes on a proposition like we have in the case of the Plaza here, where the buildings are practically completed.

I do not know whether this violation of law by those who are responsible for it can be met in any other way; but certainly it will do no good to practically destroy buildings that have been completed, even though the buildings have been constructed illegally, and all the steps with relation to them have been extravagant and out of all reason. Nor will it do any good to consider the legal question that has been presented here, as to whether, under the law, the committee had the right to build any of these buildings on the Plaza—a piece of ground intended for a park—because they have been built. They are there now, and Congress is as much to blame for that as anybody. They have been constructed within plain sight of the Capitol, just across the street from the Senate Office Building, where we have seen the work progress from the beginning. So if there were no legal authority existing for the construction of those buildings where they now are, Congress is at least estopped, it seems to me, from making complaint now.

Some of the things that have been disclosed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to-day, and by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday, as to what was done with regard to the construction of these buildings and other buildings in other parts of the country, have been simply dumfounding and astonishing. I am in entire accord with the proposition of stopping the building of any of these structures wherever the work has not progressed so far as to mean that stopping the finishing of the buildings would result in greater damage than to complete them. In the case of the Plaza, however, there is another consideration in addition to that, and it is, to my mind, a very serious one. I refer to the necessity of having additional rooms for Government workers in the city of Washington.

It has been assumed by those who favor the joint resolution that the buildings on the Plaza will be torn down in a year. It seems to me that that is an assumption which is not warranted by the facts. As far as I am concerned, I would oppose tearing them down unless conditions were changed entirely, and there should be no further use for them. I do not believe anybody can give serious consideration to the conditions that confront us without reaching the conclusion that it is going to be several years before the congestion in Washington will be relieved.

Now we are confronted with this proposition: The buildings on the Plaza are mostly completed. I understand that the furniture is already in some of them. I have been told also that there have been more than 6,000 applications for rooms. I understand also that the War-Risk Insurance Bureau alone expects to retain 9,000 employees of their present force as a permanent addition to their force.

We have been confronted since the war has been on with a congestion in Washington that we have tried to remedy in the way of providing by law for those who are compelled to rent property and rent rooms in this city. We know it was a serious proposition and that it interfered seriously with the Government in doing its work. That act was intended to relieve the situation. It is true the congestion may not be as bad now as it was, and it is also true that the force is gradually being reduced, but in the next four or five years there is going to be the same congestion that we have now unless we do something in the way of providing additional rooms.

Mr. President, this congestion is something that we do not, in my judgment, fully appreciate. A member of my family happens to be connected with an organization for the purpose of finding rooms for girls who came from my State and who have been employed in the various departments. This organization came under my observation during the last year. I know something about the question, and I know that its seriousness is simply startling. If we should have cold weather—and we are liable to have it at any time—I am fearful of an epidemic in this city. We have no idea of the overcrowding not only in the houses, but in the street cars. It is something absolutely unendurable. Girls come here and are housed in rooms four or five of them sometimes in one room, with one window, where there ought to be but one person perhaps in the room. In many cases there are three or four occupying only a single hallroom with a small window for ventilation. They are compelled to ride back and forth in street cars that are crowded almost disgracefully. We can know that from observation. I talked with one of the Government clerks last night, and she said when she came from the place where she was working she had to let seven or eight cars go by before she was able to get on a car. We have had good weather until this time, but when bad, cold weather comes there is great danger of the city being in the throes of an epidemic that will mean death to thousands of people.

Somebody may ask how this will help the street car situation. If we could put 3,600 people over here in these buildings and select them from the nearest Government buildings we would take that many people out of the street cars and put them in walking distance of the places where they work. It would not do away entirely with the overcrowding, I concede that, but in most cases it would help very materially.

It seems to me we owe it as a duty not only to the girls who are employed by the Government, but we owe it to everybody in this city to see that this overcrowding ceases. As a matter of public health it seems to me to be an imperative duty. Here we are now confronted with the fact that we have about ready for occupancy 1,800 rooms and people are ready to go into them. The buildings are almost finished and we are now to take a step that will prevent their occupancy.

It is said that we later on can decide perhaps to use these buildings for a hospital. The committee have taken no testimony on that subject. I am not an expert on it. I have my serious doubts as to whether it is a practical proposition at least. Many of the conveniences of ordinary hospitals could not be had without expending a large additional sum of money. If these rooms are rented, there will be some economy to the Government as compensation.

Mr. REED. Not a penny.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. I have tried to correct that twice. The testimony is that not one penny will be returned to the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean to say that the rooms are going to be donated?

Mr. REED. I mean to say that the scheme and plan they have is to charge $45 a month to each occupant, for which they furnish light, heat, water, laundry service, and food, and that the gentleman who is picked out to run it states there will not one single dollar come to the Government for and on account of the use of the buildings.

Mr. NORRIS. That reminds me of another proposition on the Plaza with which I agree with the committee. I do not believe the hospital ought to be completed; I do not believe the theater ought to be completed; but that space ought to be divided up into rooms and used as the balance. If it were a housing proposition outside of the city, where it was a little community of its own and was intended to be a permanent affair, then building a theater and a laundry and entertaining facilities by the housing commission would be proper, but it seems to me entirely improper here in the middle of the city, where all of those things can be obtained as the people who room there want to enjoy them. When you tell me that you are going to rent these rooms for $45 a month, with two in a room, and make no profit, then you are simply making the best argument that has ever been made for all the rent profiteers in Washington that everybody has been condemning since the war began.

Mr. REED. In the opinion of the committee the statement made is simply true, that there is not a real benefit to come to anybody from these rooms managed as it is proposed to have them managed. The benefit will be absorbed in extra cost.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator of course is taking into consideration the operation of the theater and the laundry?

Mr. REED. Yes. The laundry building has been going on since the armistice was declared. The laundry has been built from the ground up.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator to say yesterday that only the foundation of the laundry building had been laid.

Mr. REED. No; the side walls are going up. You can see it down here.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not in operation?

Mr. REED. Not yet. The hospital building is not finished yet, but it has the walls up and there has been a marked activity since peace has come. I understand that since the strike ended they have the strikers there rushing the interior work. Now, let me say to the Senator that we may differ about a great many things as to what ought to be done as a general proposition. Let us deal with this question——

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. REED. These gentlemen propose to run a hotel. They have their man picked out to run it. He states that it will cost $45 a month to each occupant, and for that they get two meals a day, except on Sunday, when they get three, and that there will be no money coming to the Government. You will have nothing coming to the Government on account of rent. So it would appear that the people who are to occupy the rooms are not to get any cheaper rents than they probably would get if they went out into the town.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought to have a cheaper rent than they can get in the town. The rents are too high for these people now. We have all been complaining about it. But I am not contending here that we ought to run the hotel. I do not want to have the Government run it. I do not want to have the Government run the laundry. I do not want to have the Government run the hospital. I do not want to have the Government run the picture show. I think I would turn this space into rooms, if I could, unless the building has not been 75 per cent completed. I would tear out what has been done for these other purposes, and then there would be some money coming in from the rooms. It is perfectly preposterous to say, even if you would run the hotel and furnish these rooms and two meals a day and $45 from each occupant, which would be $90 a month, that there would not be any profit in it. Either there is profit in it or we ought to apologize to everybody we have called a profiteer in the city of Washington since the war began. I think the price ought to be lower than $45 for room and board.

But, Mr. President, outside of that, if we do not make anything, and I do not want to make a profit as far as I am concerned out of these people, if the rooms were occupied by these workers, it would reduce the congestion just to that extent, and that is the principal thing. I think that means much more than the convenience that goes to the people themselves. It is a subject that every inhabitant who has lived in this city is interested in. It is something that the public health of this city demands, and unless we do something I very much fear that before this winter is over we will be brought face to face with a condition that will be simply beyond description.

Mr. President, there is talk about making a hospital of these buildings. I started to talk about the hospital some time ago. The committee have taken no evidence on that subject; we have just the individual opinion of Members that it might be so used. I can see how some people who are under the control of a hospital might be housed in the building without very much modification. If you put in those who are just recovering from various diseases, as one Senator suggested, who would not be attendants or assistants in the buildings, then you will want the very furniture that the joint resolution provides you shall turn back at a loss which we have already bought and paid for. You will go back and buy it over again, and they will get another profit. But if it is used for a general hospital it will bring into the city of Washington a whole lot more people whom we are anxious to keep out and only add to the overcrowding which already exists. Unless people are put in the rooms who do not need attendants and assistants it will mean many more than those who actually occupy the rooms. I do not know how many more, but everybody knows a great many more, and we will only add that many more people to the congestion which already exists to the point of danger at this minute.

If I thought these buildings were going to be torn down in a year, as the committee have assumed, I would not be so anxious about it. These buildings, with the exception of the roofs, are rather permanent constructions. They have cement foundations; they are built out of hollow tile, as far as I am able to see; they are well built in every respect, unless it be the roofs, and I do not know enough about the material they use for a roof to condemn that. That part may be as good as the balance of the building, but certainly until this overcrowded condition brought on by the war is relieved Congress will not order the buildings to be torn down, at least I hope it will not. The economy of it, it seems to me, would demonstrate that we ought to keep them, and keep them for the purpose for which they were constructed until the present condition passes away, which may be in five or six years. I think, therefore, the joint resolution ought to be amended by striking out the first section:

That all work upon said group of buildings upon the Plaza between the Capitol and the Union Station in the District of Columbia be suspended and all contracts made in reference thereto canceled, and the United States Housing Corporation representing the Government of the United States in said construction be instructed to cancel all said contracts.

If that were taken out and section 2 left it would then provide:

That the United States Housing Corporation representing the Government of the United States be, and the same hereby is, directed to suspend work upon all projects in which it is now engaged in all cases where the construction is not more than 75 per cent completed—

There is also in addition to that a clause which provides—and to cancel all contracts for furniture and to return whenever possible all unused furniture on hand or in transit.

I move to strike out section 1, and also on page 3, commencing with the word "and," where it appears the second time in line 2, to strike out the balance of the section. The words I would have stricken out read:

And to return whenever possible all unused furniture on hand or in transit.

I do not know even whether that will be necessary. If we complete the Plaza project of course everybody will concede that the furniture that is already bought and a great deal of it installed ought to be kept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out after the resolving clause all down to and including line 8, and the words "Sec. 2," in line 9; and on page 3——

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Secretary reads it, I am rather of the opinion, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has just suggested, that I will accomplish all I desire to do by striking out section 1. I am rather of that opinion, too. I will make that motion first.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 1 and the designation on line 9, "Sec. 2," so that it will start with "That."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the word "than," strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

In all cases where the construction is not more than 50 per cent completed.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will make that "60 per cent" I will accept it.

Mr. CALDER. All right; I will modify the amendment in that way.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty" before "per cent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret very much the Senator from Missouri has accepted that amendment. Personally I would prefer to have it 90 per cent. I do not want to legalize by any vote of mine or by the action of the Senate any of the illegal proceedings of this commission. As far as I am concerned, I should like to see the commission discharged now from the performance of any duties whatever under the provision of the act. I should like to cut the commission off entirely. I should like to terminate any work that is being done by the commission.

Mr. REED. And you would like to have a receiver to wind it up?

Mr. KING. I would.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] as modified.

The amendment as modified was rejected.

Mr. CALDER. I renew my amendment to make it 50 per cent.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "75" and insert "50" before "per cent."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to save for the country what I believe will be a very considerable sum of money. The building operations of the Housing Corporation are all of a permanent character save alone the one here on the Plaza. These operations are in over 30 different places in the country and are in the main two-story frame or two-story brick houses, built in groups from 50 to 500 in one development. A building 50 per cent completed would have all the side walls up, the roof on, and the floors laid. A building 70 per cent completed might include the plastering, the floors laid, and a part of the plumbing.

I am unwilling without a protest to permit this joint resolution to pass in such shape that we will require these housing propositions in course of construction all over the country to stop where doing so will mean great financial loss. Many of these buildings completed under proper supervision would net nearly what they cost. I would not dream of completing a building where the foundation had only begun, but in the case of a structure inclosed, with the floors laid and the plastering done, not to finish it would be very bad business indeed. There is no market at all for an unfinished building except perhaps through another builder, and he would not take over a project of this character except at great loss to the Government; while in the case of a completed building there are always many prospective purchasers. I trust Senators understand fully that voting down this amendment will simply mean a loss of millions of dollars to the country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, all that is meant by the joint resolution is that this work has to stop. It does not mean that it can not be renewed again under proper auspices.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has put his finger on the real question. Should this organization be permitted to go on and continue this work? The contract has been illegally let. I think I can say it has boldly and deliberately violated the law or sought to avoid it. The prices and the method of doing the work do not commend themselves to the committee. They paid $58,000 to a concern to complete this work. While the fee seems large, if that would be their whole compensation we might not object, but when we pay them in addition to that $22,000 for their plans, the price may seem to be large, but we might not object to that. That would be apparently all that ought to be exacted, because we are paying them for their intelligence and for their knowledge and for their supervision. The committee having only started its investigation, finds out that they are getting automobiles from a man who paid $2.75 an hour for them, and they pay him $3 an hour, and they charge the Government $3.50 an hour. The same thing obtains with reference to certain labor. How far this goes we do not know.

And we find another thing. Whereas the Government started into this proposition with the idea that it would erect buildings containing rooms for people to live in, because there is a clause in the act which states "and other community utilities" that has been distorted and twisted into the right to build moving-picture establishments and hospitals, although all the other people in the town go to the general hospitals; laundries, in which washing is to be done for people; and to furnish meals and establish hotels. So the phrase "community utilities" is being distorted into doing anything and everything you want to do. When you find that sort of an organization and that kind of business going on, I think it is time to stop it. Having stopped it, we do not need to throw everything to the dogs and let it go. Some plan can be devised to salvage all these enterprises and to save money, but I do not want this institution to administer upon it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I agree in the main with what the Senator from Missouri says. I merely wish to add a word. Just as sure as we are here, if this amendment fails, the committee will come again to the Senate and ask to have the joint resolution modified, for it would never do for us to abandon the completion of buildings that are 70 per cent completed and where the material for the entire completion of the work is contracted for and perhaps on the ground. To do this, it seems to me, would be very bad business management, and I do not want Senators to agree to it without fully understanding what they are doing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I notice that section 2 directs the Housing Corporation to suspend work upon the projects specified. It does not direct them to cancel the contracts, and I think that would leave the situation rather confused.

I wish I were better informed of the testimony the committee has taken. I can not discuss it critically because I have not seen it in print. But I have a feeling that sufficient attention has not been given to this subject, and that in the short time which has elapsed since the committee started to investigate the question I doubt if they have had an opportunity to become familiar with the different projects that are now in course of completion in the different sections of the country.

I feel that this is a most heroic remedy that is proposed. I do not attempt to justify any exceeding of their authority by the Housing Corporation, if there has been such, and I am not inclined to doubt the judgment of the committee that there has been such, because there are lawyers on the committee and they have compared the law with the testimony. But I do not see myself the necessity for terrific haste in deciding this matter.

I notice that all furniture contracts are to be canceled and the furniture returned. I hardly see the reason for that, unless that provision is limited to the clause which provides for the suspending of the work on buildings only a certain percentage completed, but it is not so limited according to the literal reading of the joint resolution.

I agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] that it might be wise in certain localities, irrespective of the exact percentage of completion of a building to continue the existing contract. It may be that a contract made de novo for that same work could have been made cheaper, but the men who are engaged on a particular piece of work and are now working upon it are familiar with that job. They may have their materials on hand, as the Senator from New York has said, and to provide arbitrarily that all over the country all contracts shall be canceled and all work stopped upon all buildings that have not been more than a certain percentage completed it seems to me involves our acting with deficient knowledge.

I want to save all the money that it is possible to save for the Government, but in order to vote intelligently I think we ought to be informed that such a proposition would save money. I think the committee before recommending this proposition ought to be able to demonstrate that if it were necessary to complete the contract which is to be suspended under the provisions of the joint resolution it could be completed cheaper or at least to as good advantage to the Government as it can be completed under the present arrangement.

In anything that I say I do not want to impugn the diligence of the committee in investigating in the short time they have had to devote to this question, nor do I asperse their motives in any respect. I have no doubt they are doing what they think is for the best interests of the Government; but I feel that they have acted too quickly and have proposed too comprehensive a scheme and too arbitrary a standard by which to judge the merits of these different proposals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 3, line 1, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "seventy-five" and to insert "fifty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. [Putting the question.] The amendment is rejected.

Mr. CALDER. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put on a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "all," to strike out the word "projects" and to insert the word "buildings."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, let me ask the Senator from Missouri if it is the intention to cancel all contracts for furniture?

Mr. REED. Yes; all of them where the furniture has not been installed.

Mr. KING. All that are executory, I think.

Mr. REED. The joint resolution reads:

Whenever possible all unused furniture on hand or in transit.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should think it would only be desired to return furniture or to cancel contracts where the furniture was to be used in the buildings that were prohibited from being completed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what proportion of the buildings on the Plaza, to which the joint resolution refers, is completed?

Mr. REED. I think none of them is absolutely completed, but where they are over 75 per cent completed they can go on to completion under this proposed law.

Mr. MYERS. Will all those have to be abandoned?

Mr. REED. No; those which are 75 per cent completed will go on. This only proposes to stop those that are not 75 per cent completed.

Mr. MYERS. How many are not 75 per cent completed?

Mr. REED. Our information is to the effect that it would be only the laundry which they are putting up and this little cottage over here, which cost several thousand dollars and which they propose to use for a hospital.

Mr. MYERS. Are all the other buildings completed and ready to be occupied?

Mr. REED. There are not any of them completed, but they are more than 75 per cent completed.

Mr. MYERS. And this joint resolution would not affect any building on the Plaza except the laundry and the theater?

Mr. REED. That is our understanding.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO VERSAILLES.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that after to-day he would move that the Senate recess and devote all the time of the sessions of the Senate to the consideration of the revenue bill. That is a very important measure, the passage of which the public demands as soon as possible, so that the business interests of the country may know what they will have to face for the next few years. No doubt, Mr. President, its prompt passage will be helpful to the Nation in other ways. It may affect the great peace conference that will soon be gathered at Versailles, the greatest meeting the world will ever see and one in which we are all equally interested. It marks the dawn of a new creation of things. A new earth, as it were, may be the result of that meeting. The power of kings and monarchies will cease to exist. A democracy of the world will be established and the old order will be no more. The past year has given us more history than the past 25 years gave us. We have lived in an age of deeds. Let us hope that the deliberations of the peace conference will add so much of joy and comfort as to greatly ameliorate the terrible sufferings of the past.

The whole world will be at that gathering—the accredited representatives of all the nations, and a great host of others of all classes. The eyes of the world will be turned to Versailles. The fathers and mothers of our Nation will look there for safety in future years; the soldier boys who carried knapsacks and arms on the battle fields of Europe, and those who remained at their posts here waiting willingly for the command to go, will all look there. Demonstrations, no duobt, of all kinds will be held to influence the meeting. Militarism will be there, bolshevikism will be there, socialism will be there, anarchism and all the other "isms" will be there, selfishness and ambition will be there.

The great work that conference has to perform is beyond our conception. It frightens us with its possibilities of failure. We approach the great task which duty demands with hesitancy and uncertainty as to whether we may accomplish what is expected of us, but as a people we must place our trust in our commission and give them all possible encouragement and help. That is our duty as citizens of this Republic. Let us try to do that duty well and with real pleasure and devotion.

I have heard much criticism of late about the President attending the peace conference, and I deeply deplore that criticism. It seems to me utterly uncalled-for and unfair. Of his constitutional rights I shall not argue, and precedents past should not be considered, for none should be compared to the necessity which now arises. The plain facts of existing duty to our Nation, it seems to me, demand his presence there, and no doubt he realized and understood that duty to the Nation and to the world.

A resolution has been introduced to declare his office vacant and letters have been presented strongly criticizing him, all of which should have no place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time. Nothing can do more to limit our prestige at that conference than the act of the Senate in permitting this stuff to appear. We hear this criticism on the streets, in the trains, in the hotels, and in Congress—uncalled-for, unjust, and unfair. In large part it is born of politics, pure politics, and is spoken by men who do not understand the meaning of the word, and again by men who understand it too well. The reason some give of their fear that he will not be able to attend to matters here is not going to fool anybody, because those who express it do not believe it themselves. What hurts the average politician is that the great majority of our people are glad he has gone. They want the best brains of the country at that conference, because the best brains of the Old World will be there, and President Wilson must be especially fitted to render unusual assistance to our country. His past life, his efficient management of the affairs of our Nation during the great war just closed, his abundant knowledge of conditions in all the countries of the world especially qualify him for this mission. We must match the skill and genius of the world there at that meeting. Will you tell me that we have men better qualified? Let us be honest and then let us take hold and boost and not act as though we want to make a failure there. Surely we do not want our country to lose this war at the peace table.

They tell us that he did not take Congress into his confidence. Tell me, will you, what he could have done? You do not know, he does not know, no one knows what questions will have to be contended with when the commission gets there. Let us wait and see what they are going to ask the Senate to ratify. Our very acts here are hurting our cause there. You know that, I know that, everyone knows that.

No one should be so foolish as to think we can get everything we want at the Versailles conference. No doubt the claims of a score of the nations of the earth will be at that table to be satisfied, and we must not hope to have it all as we would like. Think of what England has suffered, think of what France has endured, study the destruction of brave Belgium, dwell upon the sacrifices of Italy, the annihilation of the smaller nations of the earth, and then think of our own beloved land. These are the things your thoughts should dwell upon. When you think of that coming event and of the great sacrifices our Nation has made, of the mothers whose sons will never come back and of the fathers and brothers who sleep in that distant land, let us, my friends, stop this quarreling. Let us put an end to this boy's play in Congress long enough to study all the great questions that may confront us as a people. Let us study the proposal for a league of nations. Let us give the best that is in us to these deliberations. It is a big question. Let us handle it in a big way.

The President of the United States has no power to bind this country by treaty unless the Senate ratifies that treaty. So why all this argument and confusion? Let us hope the peace conference will give us a new conception of things; that it will make it impossible ever again to plunge this world into another awful war. A minister said the other day in his sermon that national insanity was the cause of this war; that a friend of his who had been to Germany and talked with the Kaiser told him that Germany was war mad a year before it commenced. The press, the pulpit, the soldiers, and the military men all talked it, and we can well believe it. And so we as a people must remember what we as a Nation have contended for, what we have morally promised our people and the people of the world, why we entered the war and our purpose in doing so, and then stand by our principles to the end. Our duty should be plain, so clear that everyone may understand it, and there let us rest.

Mr. President, a newspaper article quotes Hon. Winston Churchill, minister of munitions in England, as saying that they enter the peace conference with the absolute determination that no limitation shall be imposed on their rights to maintain their great navy. Personally I hope this is not a correct statement, for, much as we love England and admire her system of government and her statesmen, the future is what we have to look to. We admire her splendid navy, we recognize its indispensable usefulness during the past months and its glorious achievements, and yet we must recognize that it might not be wise to agree to the position taken by Mr. Churchill, if he has been quoted correctly. In future years a Napoleon might come forth in England; a Kaiser might appear upon the scene and be the controlling factor in that beautiful country, with dreams such as the late Kaiser made his life study, and then the mistake would be apparent to all mankind. But we have not reached that demand yet, and I hope we may not. Let me suggest, if you will pardon my presumption, in lieu of the Churchill suggestion, that the great fleets to patrol the waters of the world for safety be owned jointly by the civilized nations of the globe, to guard well the treaty to be made and to safeguard the world from future wars. The war has ended; let us also stop it here in this Chamber.

It has been well said that the Kaiser and God have dissolved partnership. We find him now in the land of windmills and wooden shoes, and the German people are just beginning to sit up and look around. The Hohenzollerns of Germany and the Hapsburgs of Austria have been unhorsed. The Kaiser is on his knees, as all cowards are when brought to bay. His crimes will fill generations to come with horror. Mr. President, if I were a German to-day I would feel that they of my own nationality had done more to traduce the blood that flows in my veins and the veins of my father and family than all the other countries in the world had done, and to-day I should rejoice that his power to do those things had gone, and gone forever.

A league of nations—what a great question! What great possibilities it involves and what a future it opens up! The subject is so great that it scares us. We know it will not affect our commercial condition. We know it will not disturb our moral or religious institutions and that it will not affect our educational institutions. The war has taught us a great lesson. It has taught us the possibilities of a righteous people to overcome oppressors, and, greater yet, it has taught us that right makes might, as exemplified on the battle fields in France and Belgium; but it has not taught us what the future holds for us as a Nation. A league of nations—a wonderful, untried plan! That may teach us much. We have sent our commission to meet the commissions of the world to figure this out for us, to show us its power to prevent future wars, to bring the world closer together in thought and in action, so that we may understand each other better; and let us hope that they may accomplish great things for us. They will do their best. They will give our country and the world the best that is in them. Of course they will. No one doubts that. So let us give them our confidence and our encouragement. I am interested; you are interested; we all are interested.

It will take the best talent in the world to solve the problem of our different national temperaments, its dangers and its safeguards. The war has brought us to a realization of this. The great war ended almost as suddenly as it started. It is over. Now for the reconstruction period, with the peace table as its foundation and the sound judgment of the American people as its guide. The Senate of the United States will have its work to do when the problems are all thrashed out over there and the peace treaty comes to us for ratification and approval. Then we will know what our country was asked to do and be guided by our sense of duty, I dare say.

The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] introduced a resolution the other day which I hope may be adopted and become operative at once in this body. It relates to open diplomacy, a subject of great importance to all countries just now, it seems to me, and especially so if the plan of a league of nations should prevail at the peace conference about to commence its deliberations at Versailles. The greatest danger to any country is the danger of secret treaties binding the people without the knowledge by the people of what they agree as a country to do. The subject is of the greatest importance to us as a people, and so, Senators, let us wait until we see what we are asked to do by this peace council, and then do what we do well and in the open. These questions, the result of this peace-table conference, are of great importance to the American people. Their future destinies depend largely upon the conclusions arrived at. The immediate welfare of the American citizen and his family, and their future as well, rest largely upon its outcome. So let us try to remember what our people sent us here to do when we were sent to Washington to represent them and help our commission there instead of quarreling among ourselves like a lot of schoolboys as to whether the President ought or ought not to have gone.

The fact is he has gone, and, God willing, he will probably reach Brest the last of this week. Personally I am glad he has gone. I recognize his ability, I appreciate his greatness and his influence. There is no man in America who could fill his place at that great gathering; and I do not care what his critics say publicly, they, too, are glad he is there.

With my colleague [Mr. STERLING], I have the honor to represent in this body a State that stands second to none in patriotism. South Dakota furnished more men in proportion to its population than any State in the Union. It raised and furnished more food for the soldiers; it bought more liberty bonds and war savings stamps. It is one of the strongest Republican States in the Union, and I am sure the people of that State are glad the President has gone and will wish him Godspeed on his mission.

And now a word more and I am through. There are three things that our commission should insist on: First, to remember the small nations; second, not to quarrel; and, third, to do justice to all as far as possible. The great danger—and it has been pointed out for weeks—is that the forces opposed to good government and the forces over there which oppose the contemplated plan of a league of nations might succeed in getting the real friends of national democracy, along whatever lines is concluded best, into a quarrel among themselves and thus destroy the usefulness of the peace mission. So we should not let ourselves discuss anything here now that will help our enemies over there to take from us any of the very important benefits that may come to us from the deliberations of that great convention on the continent across the seas. When you attack the right of any man, whether it be the President of the United States or one of the commission he selected to go to that gathering, you are doing that very thing. You are helping to destroy our influence there and thereby bringing harm to our own country, which we as Members of this body are here to protect and defend.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before proceeding to the further consideration of the revenue bill I wish to say that what has just happened makes it very apparent, if any headway is to be made of such a character as would justify reasonable expectation that the pending bill can be passed in the time that it must be passed in order to become effective, that it will be necessary each day when the morning hour is over that I shall decline to yield the floor for the consideration of any other measure. Of course, there may be some things of such great importance and of such an emergent character that it would be necessary for me to disregard a fixed rule of that sort; but, with an exception as to cases of that character, I wish to state now, so that Senators may not feel, when I decline to have the revenue bill laid aside for some other measure, that I am discriminating in any way against them, that from now on after the morning business is disposed of, where we have adjourned, instead of taking a recess, I shall insist upon having the revenue bill taken up, and I shall not yield to any other bill.

I think when we concluded the session on yesterday the Secretary had just finished reading the section relating to inheritance taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning on page 137, line 1.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head "Title V—Tax on transportation and other facilities, and on insurance," section 500, page 137, line 3, after the word "after," to strike out "November 1, 1918," so as to read:

SEC. 500. That from and after ———, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 500 of the revenue act of 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 137, line 12, after the word "another," to strike out "and a like tax on the amount paid for such transportation within the United States of property transported from a point without the United States to a point within the United States," so as to make the clause read:

(a) A tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the amount paid for the transportation on or after such date, by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with carriers by rail or water, of property by freight transported from one point in the United States to another.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. There are a number of Senators who desire to be present when this bill is being considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smoot
Bankhead	Kendrick	Nugent	Spencer
Brandegee	Kenyon	Overman	Sterling
Chamberlain	King	Page	Swanson
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Thompson

Gronna	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	McKellar	Simmons	Weeks
Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Henderson	Mulkey	Smith, Ga.
Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smith, S. C.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is necessarily detained on public business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on account of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill for amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 137, line 16.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 500, page 137, line 21, after the word "another," to strike out: ", and a like tax on the amount paid for such transportation within the United States of property transported from a point without the United States to a point within the United States," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) A tax of 1 per cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid to any person for the transportation on or after such date, by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with express by rail or water, of any package, parcel, or shipment, by express, transported from one point in the United States to another.

The next amendment was, on page 138, line 10, before the word "cents," to strike out "35" and insert "42," so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) A tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the amount paid for the transportation on or after such date of persons by rail or water, or by any form of mechanical motor power on a regular established line when in competition with carriers by rail or water, from one point in the United States to another or to any point in Canada or Mexico, where the ticket or order therefor is sold or issued in the United States, not including the amount paid for commutation or season tickets for trips less than 30 miles, or for transportation the fare for which does not exceed 42 cents.

The next amendment was, on page 138, line 13, after the word "date," to insert "in connection with transportation upon which tax is imposed by subdivision (c)," so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) A tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the amount paid for seats, berths, and staterooms in parlor cars, sleeping cars, or on vessels, used on or after such date in connection with transportation upon which tax is imposed by subdivision (c).

The next amendment was, on page 138, line 16, after the word "to," to strike out "6½" and insert "8," so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) A tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the amount paid for the transportation on or after such date of oil by pipe line.

The next amendment was, on page 139, after line 10, to insert:

(h) No tax shall be imposed under this section upon any payment received for services rendered to the United States or to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia. The right to exemption under this subdivision shall be evidenced in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulation prescribe.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that section 500 be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read section 501, beginning on page 139, line 17, down to and including line 24, on page 141.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 502, page 142, after line 22, to insert:

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does the Senator ask that the insurance section shall go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is expected that the committee will later bring in an amendment to section 503 and section 504; and when those sections have been read I shall ask that each of them may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Insurance," in section 503, page 143, line 5, after the word "after," to strike out "November 1, 1918"; and in line 10, after the words "United States," to insert "(except those taxable under subdivision 15 of schedule A of Title XI," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 503. That from and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 504 of the revenue act of 1917, the following taxes on the issuance of insurance policies, including, in the case of policies issued outside the United States (except those taxable under subdivision 15 of schedule A of Title XI), their delivery within the United States by any agent or broker, whether acting for the insurer or the insured; such taxes to be paid by the insurer, or by such agent or broker.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 14, to strike out:

(a) Life insurance: A tax equivalent to 8 cents on each $100 or fractional part thereof of the amount for which any life is insured under any policy of insurance or other instrument, by whatever name the same is called: Provided, That on all policies for life insurance only by which a life is insured not in excess of $500, issued on the industrial or weekly or monthly payment plan of insurance, the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be: Provided further, That on policies of group life insurance, covering groups of not less than 25 lives in the employ of the same person, for the benefit of persons other than the employer, the tax shall be equivalent to 4 cents on each $100 of the aggregate amount for which the group policy is issued and of any net increase in the amount of the insurance under such policy.

The next amendment was, on page 144, line 7, before the word "Marine," to strike out "(b)" and insert "(a)."

The next amendment was, on page 144, line 14, before the word "Casualty," to strike out "(c)" and insert "(b)"; in line 17, after the words "damage, or," to strike out "liability (except bonds and policies taxable under subdivision 2 of schedule A of Title XI)" and insert "liability, including mortgage guaranty policies and policies guaranteeing titles to real estate"; and in line 24, after the word "automobile," to insert "fidelity, surety," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Casualty insurance: A tax equivalent to 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each policy of insurance or obligation of the nature of indemnity for loss, damage, or liability, including mortgage guarantee policies and policies guaranteeing titles to real estate, issued or executed or renewed by any person transacting the business of employer's liability, workmen's compensation, accident, health, tornado, plate glass, steam boiler, elevator, burglary, automatic sprinkler, automobile, fidelity, surety, or other branch of insurance (except life insurance and insurance described and taxed in the preceding subdivision): Provided, That in case of policies of insurance issued on the industrial or weekly or monthly payment plan the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be.

The next amendment was, on page 145, line 8, before the word "Policies," to strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)."

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask to have that section go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 504, page 145, after line 18, to insert:

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time when the tax became due.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask to have that section passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the head of "Title VI—Tax on beverages," in section 600, page 146, line 2, before the word "That," to insert "(a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, line 7, after the words "tax of," to strike out "$4.40" and insert "$2.20," so as to read:

SEC. 600. (a) That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits now in bond or that have been or that may be hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, except such distilled spirits as are subject to the tax provided in section 604, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of $2.20.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on behalf of one of my colleagues, I simply ask that that amendment be passed over. I do not think there will be any objection other than to the rates, and therefore I am not going to ask that the title go over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Simply that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 146, line 10, after the word "of," to strike out "$8" and insert "$6.40," so as to read:

(or, if withdrawn for beverage purposes or for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage, a tax of $6.40) on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon, to be paid by the distiller or importer when withdrawn, and collected under the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, after line 14, to insert:

(b) That the tax imposed by subdivision (a) on distilled spirits intended for beverage purposes shall not be due or payable on such spirits while stored in any distillery, bonded warehouse, or special or general bonded warehouse, and which, pursuant to any act of Congress or proclamation of the President of the United States, can not be lawfully sold or removed from any such warehouse during the period of prohibition fixed by such act or proclamation; and all warehousing bonds or transportation and warehousing bonds conditioned for the payment of tax on any such spirits so stored on the date such prohibition takes effect shall as to all such spirits actually so stored be canceled and discharged, provided the distiller of such spirits shall in lieu of such bonds and prior to their cancellation execute a bond in a penal sum of not less than $10,000, with sureties satisfactory to the collector of the district, conditioned that the principal shall, during the period of such prohibition, safely keep or cause to be kept in good condition all such spirits and the warehouse in which the same are stored, and shall not remove or suffer to be removed from warehouse, contrary to law, any such spirits during the period of such prohibition; and the bond herein prescribed shall be in such further sum and shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations require. The distiller may, subject to the provisions of this section, be permitted to retain in any such bonded warehouse distilled spirits on which, under the terms of any existing bond, the tax imposed thereon becomes due and payable prior to the date such prohibition takes effect: Provided, That on the removal of such prohibition the distiller shall, as to all spirits as to which the bonded period fixed by law has not expired and which remain stored in warehouse, execute new and satisfactory bond in the form required by existing law, conditioned for the payment of the tax on all such spirits; and all provisions of existing law relating to such bonded warehouses, or the storage of spirits therein, or to the execution of new or additional bonds, so far as applicable, shall continue in force as to all distilled spirits rebonded under the provisions of this section.

Upon the withdrawal of distilled spirits from bonded warehouse, after the period of prohibition has ended, and under the conditions imposed by section 50 of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the support of the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1894, an allowance for loss by leakage or other unavoidable cause, not exceeding 1 proof gallon as to packages of a capacity of not less than 40 wine gallons, may be made in addition to that provided in said section 50, as amended; and a like additional allowance of 1 proof gallon as to each package withdrawn may be made for each period of four months, or fraction thereof, for such spirits as shall have remained in warehouse during the period of prohibition and after the expiration of the maximum leakage period fixed by that section.

Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, any imported distilled spirits, wines, or other liquors which may be in any customs bonded warehouse under the customs laws on the date such prohibition takes effect shall be permitted to remain therein without payment of any taxes or duties thereon, beyond the three-year period provided in section 2971 of the Revised Statutes, during such period of prohibition; and may be exported at any time during such extended period. Any imported spirits, wines, or other liquors as to which the three-year bonded period may expire after the passage of this act and prior to the date such prohibition takes effect may at the option of the owner remain in bond during such period of prohibition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 149, line 7, before the word "In," to insert "(c)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 149, line 10, after the words "tax of," to strike out "$3.30" and insert "$1.10."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the same reason that I asked that the amendment on page 146 go over, and at the request of the same Senator, I ask that this amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section 601, page 149, line 18, before the word "Islands," to strike out "West Indian" and insert "Virgin"; and in line 19, before the word "unless," to strike out "recently acquired from Denmark," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 601. That no distilled spirits produced after October 3, 1917, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign country, or from the Virgin Islands (unless produced from products the growth of such islands, and not then into any State or Territory or District of the United States in which the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited), or from Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands. Under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary may prescribe, the provisions of this section shall not apply to distilled spirits imported for other than (1) beverage purposes or (2) use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 602, page 152, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "fermentation and" and insert "fermentation" with a comma; in the same line, after the word "the" to insert "filling and"; and in line 6, after the word "fermenting" to strike out "tubs" and insert "tubs, and assessments," so as to make the paragraph read:

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations exempt distillers of ethyl alcohol, for use in the production of munitions of war, or for other nonbeverage purposes, from so much of the provisions of sections 3264, 3285, or 3309 of the Revised Statutes, and acts amendatory thereof, respecting the survey of distilleries, the period of fermentation, the filling and emptying of fermenting tubs, and assessments, as, in his judgment, may be expedient: Provided, That the bond prescribed in section 3260 of the Revised Statutes shall, in the cases herein provided, be in such sum and contain such further conditions as the commissioner may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 603, page 152, line 23, after the word "engaged" to insert "against the German Government," and in line 24, after the word "war" to strike out "with the Imperial German Government," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 603. That under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, ethyl alcohol of not less than 180° proof, produced at any central distilling and denaturing plant established under the provisions of subsection 2, paragraph N, of section IV of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, may be removed from such plant to any central denaturing bonded warehouse for denaturation, or may, before or after denaturation, be removed from such plant or from such denaturing bonded warehouse, free of tax, for use of the United States or for shipment to any nation while engaged against the German Government in the present war, and the removal herein authorized may be made in such tank vessels, tank cars, drums, casks, or other containers as may be approved by the commissioner. It shall be lawful, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, for an allowance to be made for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident and without fault or negligence of the distiller, owner, carrier, or his agents or employees, which may occur during the transportation of such spirits or while the same are lawfully stored on either of the premises herein described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 604, page 153, line 16, after the word "tax," to strike out "of $2.20 (or, if intended for sale for beverage purposes or for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage, a floor tax of $4.80) on each proof gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof gallon," and insert "equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and the tax so paid," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 604. That upon all distilled spirits produced in or imported into the United States upon which the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law has been paid, and which on the day after the passage of this act are held by any person and intended for sale or for use in the manufacture or production of any article intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and the tax so paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read section 605, section 606, and section 607.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 608, page 157, line 12, after the word "one-half," to insert "of one"; in line 13, before the word "alcohol," to strike out "cent or more of" and insert "cent, or more, of"; in the same line, after the words "manufactured and," to insert "hereafter"; in line 14, after the word "sold," to strike out "or stored, in warehouse"; and in line 20, after the word "law," to insert "to be collected under the provisions of existing law," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 608. That there shall be levied and collected on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquor, containing one-half of 1 per cent, or more, of alcohol, brewed or manufactured and hereafter sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of $6 for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons, and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law, to be collected under the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

JUSTICE TO EDWARD B. M'LEAN IN THE MATTER OF THE BERNSTORFF CHARGES AGAINST THE WASHINGTON POST.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the consent of the eminent chairman of the Finance Committee, at this point I desire to draw the attention of the body to a suggestion of justice to one of our prominent citizens of Washington.

Mr. President, I have received a letter which justifies me in making a motion for the insertion of a small matter in the RECORD. Some one writes me saying that as a Senator I have been addressing certain communications to the Washington Post, and that as a Senator I am addressing them to a paper that is charged by another Senator—referring to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]—with not having been a loyal paper.

Mr. President, I desire at this time to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Minnesota did not say, in the matter referred to, that the Washington Post was not a loyal paper. No one has ever said such. He said, in his observation, on testimony then before him as to Bernstorff and the Post, that up to a certain two years ago the only fair paper in this city was that known as the Star, intimating clearly that in the latter years, since the death of Mr. John R. McLean, there were no objections whatever to be urged by anyone to the fairness of the Post. Now, Mr. President, it was a just tribute to the Star to say it was a fair paper, but if for any reason during the long illness of Mr. McLean, sr., anyone was dissatisfied with the policy of the Post as managed by those intrusted by the senior McLean no one can intimate such as to the management under Mr. E. B. McLean, the son.

I beg to offer at this time the statement of Mr. E. B. McLean, the now owner of the Post, as he gave it, and ask the privilege of having it go in the RECORD that it may be beside the statement of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that justice may be done to Mr. McLean, but more particularly that the charge made by Mr. von Bernstorff, that he considered or was being entertained in the object of purchasing that paper, be wholly disproved. If there has been at any time any intimation anywhere that the Post is not a fair and loyal and very just and eminent paper, from which the public may gather information of the proceedings of this body, this record may disprove it, and the statement of Mr. E. B. McLean wholly repudiates the mendacity of former Ambassador Bernstorff.

I thank the Senator for allowing me this interruption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 9, 1918.]

A STATEMENT BY THE EDITOR OF THE POST.

Mr. Bielaski in his testimony before the Senate committee quotes a dispatch from former Ambassador von Bernstorff in which the statement is made that my father, the late John R. McLean, offered to sell or rent the Washington Post to the German Government. That is another of Von Bernstorff's infamous lies. The Post was never offered to him for sale or hire.

My father purchased the Washington Post for me. He managed it in my interest. If any proposition had been on foot to sell the paper or ruin it by handing it over to any special interest I would have known it.

Von Bernstorff was anxious to put through anything that would help his Government. He often lied to his Government and he was often fooled by sharpers, as previous disclosures have proved. This lie regarding the Washington Post is on a par with the rest of the German propaganda.

I am proud of the Post and jealous of its reputation. It never has been and never will be controlled by any foreign government or by any special interest or any political party.

EDWARD B. MCLEAN,
Editor-President.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, December 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, we thank Thee for the privileges of this hour. We pray that with open eyes and understanding hearts we may meet the obligations and enjoy the privileges of this glorious day. Keep our feet from stumbling and our lips from speaking falsely. Guide us into ways of service and gladden our hearts with a sense of duty done, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the resignation of Mr. SANFORD from the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress; also the resignation of Mr. LUFKIN from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of the Members to the committees indicated by the list which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WILLIAM F. BIRCH, of New Jersey, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.
ADOLPHUS P. NELSON, of Wisconsin, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and Reform in the Civil Service.
FLORIAN LAMPERT, of Wisconsin, to the Committee on Patents, and Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.
FREDERICK ESSEN, of Missouri, to the Committee on Flood Control.
WILLFRED W. LUFKIN, of Massachusetts, to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.
ROLLIN B. SANFORD, of New York, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations?

There were no other nominations.

The Members named were elected to the various committees.

JEWISH POPULATION IN POLAND.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, at a mass meeting held last Sunday evening in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent, resolutions were adopted protesting against the boycott and massacre of the Jews in Poland and Galicia. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and I was asked to call them to the attention of the House of Representatives. I send the resolutions to the Clerk's desk and ask that they be read for information, and ask permission to revise and extend my remarks on the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read for information, and the gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the resolutions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolutions adopted at mass meeting of the Brownsville Jewish community, held at the Hebrew Free School Auditorium, 400 Stone Avenue, Brooklyn, New York City, Sunday, December 8, 1918.

At the conclusion of the greatest war in history, which has so gloriously ended for the cause of democracy, and at a time when a new era of peace on earth and good will among men is being heralded by mankind after a long period of bloodshed and suffering, the most appalling news has reached us from abroad that in Poland the Jewish population has been singled out for slaughter and extermination; that in Lemberg 1,100 Jews have been brutally murdered; that 600 of them lost their lives in a synagogue, where they sought refuge in the sanctuary of God; that similar outrages are being committed in other parts of Poland and Galicia; and that the lives of tens of thousands of Jews—men, women, and children—are in imminent danger because of a brutal and inhuman policy adopted by the Poles to kill and exterminate the Jewish inhabitants of Poland.

We, the Jewish community of Brownsville, in mass meeting assembled, therefore appeal to the conscience of the American people to register their most emphatic protest against these barbarous crimes against humanity.

We call upon our Government to take steps to stay the hand of the assassin and save thousands of Jews from the impending fate that awaits them at the hands of a cruel and vindictive people, dazed by the prospect of their own freedom.

We call upon the conscience of all mankind to come to the rescue of these helpless people and tell the Poles that murder will not be tolerated.

We call upon the people of Poland and Galicia, amongst whom the Jews have lived for several centuries in peace and amity and have contributed in large measure to their material, intellectual, and civic progress, to stop boycotts, persecution, and massacres of their Jewish neighbors. Standing on the threshold of her own freedom and looking to an enlightened world for sympathy with her aspirations for emancipation, let Poland beware not to stain her hands in innocent blood, for the world will not condone crimes wantonly committed against a defenseless people.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. MCARTHUR, on account of the serious illness of his wife.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for three days on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SWITZER was given leave, by unanimous consent, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Ida M. Warner (H. R. 2686, 1st sess., 64th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4873. An act for the relief of Calvin Willard Gilfillan.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4873. An act for the relief of Calvin Willard Gilfillan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THE RAILROADS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a letter of Secretary McAdoo, with reference to the railroads, printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter of Secretary McAdoo. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Washington, December 11, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
Chairman Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR JUDGE SIMS: The question of railroad legislation is of such vital importance to the country that I take the liberty of submitting to you my views as to the course that should now be pursued. The war is ended, and we are now confronted with the necessity either of legislating intelligently about the railroad problem at this session of the Congress or of promptly returning the railroads to their owners.

Less than three months of the present session of the Congress remain. It will be impossible, I presume, to secure legislation in this short period providing a permanent solution of the railroad problem. This being true, only three courses are open: (1) Government operation of the railroads for one year and nine months following a proclamation of peace, which would mean, in my judgment, Government operation for a period in no event longer than two years and three months; (2) the prompt return of the railroads to private control; or (3) extension of the period of Federal control to five years.

I am convinced that it is wholly impracticable, as well as opposed to the public interest, to attempt to operate the railroads under the provisions of the present law. In the first place, the time is too short, and, secondly, the present legislation is inadequate.

As to the shortness of time, it is clear to me that the railroads can not be successfully operated under Federal control during the next two years in the face of an automatic transfer to private control at the end of that time or of an earlier relinquishment by proclamation of the President. Every month that passes will bring more clearly to the minds of the officers and employees the fundamental change in management that is impending and the question as to what that change means to the individual. It is against human nature that there can be complete and single-minded attention to duty under such difficult circumstances. This will be especially true on account of the inevitable discussion as to what ought to be done. Already this discussion is in full swing, and its reaction on officers and employees can not be consistent with the complete concentration upon their daily duties. State railroad commissions, railroad security holders, railroad executives, shippers' organizations, and other interests are naturally and properly discussing the subject and proposing various solutions. However desirable the discussion is for the crystallization of public sentiment, it can not result otherwise than to produce a state of uncertainty and ferment among the vast army of railroad officers and employees, who will inevitably feel that they face a rapidly approaching change in management.

No business in the United States so imperatively requires disciplined organization and composed conditions of operation, for officials as well as for employees, as the railroad business. Not only does the safety of the lives of millions of passengers depend upon such disciplined and efficient organization, but the commerce of the country as well. To keep this vast army of officers and employees in a state of uncertainty and ferment for a period of two years would be harmful in the highest degree to the public interest. It would be impossible to prevent a serious impairment of the morale of the railroad organizations.

From the standpoint of needed improvements, the period of two years is entirely too short a time within which to plan and carry out the comprehensive improvements which ought to be made to meet the country's requirements under peace conditions. Many of the improvements could hardly be completed and put into operation inside of the two-year period, and under such circumstances and facing a change to private management at the end of two years it would be unwise in the highest degree to make the improvements and impossible to secure the hearty cooperation of the railroad corporations.

Because of the inadequacy of the present legislation, the authority of the States and the Federal Government has been left in doubt by provisions which I opposed when the bill was under discussion. Conflict between State and Federal jurisdictions will grow more acute under this law. The revolving fund appropriated by the Congress will be insufficient to carry the Federal operation for a two-year period. More than that, it is of the utmost importance to the commerce, industry, and life of the American people that a comprehensive program of improvements to railroad properties shall be carried forward over a period of at least five years; such a program will involve expenditures of at least $500,000,000 per annum, or $2,500,000,000 for the five-year period. The needed funds are not provided for by the present law. Moreover, it is difficult under the present law, without the consent of the corporations, to carry forward a comprehensive plan of joint improvements, which, to be of value to the public, must of itself disregard the selfish and irreconcilable competitive interests of the various carriers. Many terminal improvements, to be genuinely serviceable to the public, must be made without regard to the interest of any particular carrier. Therefore agreements between the Government and the railroads affected will, in many instances, be impossible, and if the Government should proceed with such improvements, using the people's money for the purpose, without securing the carriers' consent, litigation would undoubtedly arise upon the termination of Federal control, with the danger that a large part of the Government's investment in the properties might be lost.

Upon the efficiency of the transportation machine in America depends in great measure the future prosperity of the Nation. Involved in this prosperity is the extension of our foreign trade. We produce so much more than we consume that markets must be found for that surplus. Those markets are the competitive markets of the world. We must be able to enter them upon equal terms with any other nation. Our transportation system, both on land and water, must therefore function at the highest point of efficiency and at the lowest possible cost, if we are to get our reasonable and fair share of the world's trade and in turn be able to keep a prosperous, contented, and happy population at home.

To attempt to continue Federal control under the inadequate provisions of the present Federal-control act and for the very brief period it authorizes would be to multiply our difficulties and invite failure. On the other hand, I am convinced from the experience of the past year that the return of the railroads to the old competitive conditions will be hurtful alike to the public interest and to the railroads themselves. This course, however, will bring fewer evils in its train than the unsatisfactory, if not impotent, Federal control provided for by the present act. The railroads were taken over as a war measure. They have been operated during the past year for the paramount purpose of winning the war. I think it will be generally admitted that the war service has been successfully rendered, and I am sure that experience of great value and benefit has been gained not only for the public but for the railroads themselves during this brief test.

There is one, and to my mind only one, practicable and wise alternative, and that is to extend the period of Federal control from the one year and nine months provided by the present law to five years or until the 1st day of January, 1924. This extension would take the railroad question out of politics for a reasonable period. It would give composure to railroad officers and employees. It would admit of the preparation and carrying out of a comprehensive program of improvements of the railroads and their terminal facilities which would immensely increase the efficiency of the transportation machine. It would put back of the railroads the credit of the United States during the five-year period, so that the financing of these improvements could be successfully carried out. It would offer the necessary opportunity under proper conditions to test the value of unified control, and the experience thus gained would of itself indicate the permanent solution of the railroad problem.

The American people have a right to this test. They should not be denied it. It is to their interest that it should be done. In my opinion, it is the only practicable and reasonable method of determining the right solution of this grave economic problem.

I am not now and have not been for the past year interested in proving or disproving the theory of Government ownership or any other kind of theory. The railroads have been operated for the past year with the purpose of serving efficiently the paramount needs of the war and at the same time furnishing the best possible service to the public, whether such operation tended to prove or to disprove any theory of railroad control, no matter what it might be. I have formed no opinion myself as to what is the best disposition of the railroad problem, because the test has not been sufficient to prove conclusively the right solution of the problem. I believe that a five-year test will give the American people the right answer. An ounce of experience is worth a ton of theory, and with the start already made under war conditions it would be a comparatively simple matter to complete the test so well begun and thereby gain the invaluable experience which will determine the solution of a problem which has vexed our State and National politics and our economic development for the past generation.

There are those who may say that an extension of five years for such a test will mean Government ownership. Personally I do not believe it. But whether such a test would indicate that the ultimate solution shall be Government ownership or a modified form of private ownership under effective Federal regulation should not cause us to hesitate or refuse to act. It seems to me that in a democracy like ours, where public opinion and the judgment of the majority must finally control, the plain duty is to take those steps which will fully inform public opinion, so that the judgment may be based upon knowledge rather than upon theory. Any test which will illumine the subject so completely that public opinion may operate upon it intelligently would seem to me to be desirable in any circumstances.

In this connection, may I draw your attention to the statement I made before the committee of the Senate on January 21, 1918, in reply to a Senator who asked if I believed "in the Government ownership of railroads." I said:

I do not, or I have not, at least, felt that it was necessary to take the actual ownership of the railroads. I believe that it will be impossible after the return of peace to restore the competitive conditions to the same extent as they existed prior to the outbreak of the war. I favor some form of governmental regulation and control of a far stronger, more intelligent, and effective character than we have had heretofore, because I am satisfied that a stronger Government control will be demanded and will have to be worked out, both in the interest of the public and in the interest of the security holders of these railroads.

Those who may oppose an extension of five years should face the situation squarely and acknowledge that they prefer the immediate return of the railroads to private control under the old conditions without remedial legislation. It is idle to talk of a return to private control under legislation which will cure the defects of the existing laws. There is neither time nor opportunity for such legislation at present. It is impossible and hopeless for the Government to attempt the operation of the railroads for 21 months after peace under the present law. Therefore the country should squarely face the condition that the railroads must promptly go back into private control with all existing legal difficulties unless the only practical alternative, viz, an extension of time, is promptly granted.

I hope that the Congress in its wisdom will grant a five-year period for a test of unified railroad operation under proper provisions of law which will make that test effective and at the same time take the railroad question out of politics while the test is being made. Unless this is done, I do not hesitate to say the railroads should be returned to private ownership at the earliest possible moment. The President has given me permission to say that this conclusion accords with his own view of the matter.

Cordially, yours, W. G. McADOO,
Director General of Railroads.

AMENDMENT OF LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 465 (H. Rept. 856).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12001, "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911"; that all general debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill; that at the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply makes in order the so-called judges' bill. It is a simple form of rule, doing nothing except to make the consideration of a bill in order. The time for general debate and the matter of amendment are left wide open for the committee to consider at the time of its consideration. There is no disposition to debate the rule, and if anybody wants any time I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CANNON. There is no limitation on general debate?

Mr. RIORDAN. No; no limitation.

The SPEAKER. It does not limit debate, and it is to be considered under the general rules of the House.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 68, noes 19.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, we ought not to begin the consideration of a measure as important as this without a quorum. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that no quorum is present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 297, nays 23, answered "present" 4, not voting 109, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

Mr. DELANEY with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. DUPRÉ with Mr. DALE of Vermont.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. FERRIS with Mr. FESS.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. HELM with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. POLK with Mr. MCARTHUR.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WEBB. Under the order adopted, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12001.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this judiciary bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman indicate how much general debate he expects to have on this measure and how it is to be determined and controlled?

Mr. WEBB. I want to have an agreement, if we can get it. I first thought, after discussing the question with some Members, that an hour on a side would be satisfactory. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to what time he thinks would be required by those who oppose the bill or want to speak on it. Of course, there will be liberal debate under the five-minute rule, and everybody can be heard then.

Mr. MANN. There is no proposition to limit debate at this time. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WEBB. I was going to make a request that we limit general debate.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WEBB. I want to have an agreement, if we can, with gentlemen on the other side or any side opposed to it.

Mr. WALSH. I shall object to giving unanimous consent to restrict general debate to an hour on a side. I certainly object to that.

Mr. WEBB. What is my friend's suggestion?

Mr. WALSH. I think at least two and a half hours on a side.

Mr. WEBB. I hope my friend will not insist on that. We have very liberal rules under the five-minute debate and everybody who wants to be heard can speak 5 or 10 minutes. There is no disposition to cut off debate. I never have adopted that course.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the fact, but this is a very important measure and it embodies two separate propositions, and it seems to me we would wish to debate as important a measure as this for three or four hours.

Mr. WEBB. Has my friend requests for as much as two hours?

Mr. WALSH. I have no requests for time except I understand that several gentlemen expect to oppose it and——

Mr. WEBB. I wish every Member of the House to have time who really wants to talk against the bill, but I would not like to give more time than necessary in general debate because I know everybody can speak under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WALSH. I should want 20 or 30 minutes myself.

Mr. WEBB. Let me ask that general debate be limited to three hours, an hour and a half to be controlled by this side and an hour and a half to be controlled by some one opposed to the bill on that side.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better go into the committee without limitation.

Mr. WEBB. Then I will make it two hours on a side. I am sure our side will not consume that much time and I doubt whether the other side will do so.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. There is no law or rule compelling the consuming of that time.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman says "his side and the other side," pointing to this side. What does he mean?

Mr. WEBB. I mean those advocating and opposing the bill on your side and ours.

Mr. DYER. I want to say I think most of the Members on this side are in favor of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. I was speaking of those opposed to the bill and those in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH. How is the time to be controlled under the gentleman's proposition? Who is to have control of the time under the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. WEBB. I suppose the Speaker will designate the gentleman to control the time in opposition to the bill, some one opposed to it——

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee, should probably control the time, so far as those in opposition to it are concerned, as all the other members of the Judiciary Committee are in favor of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. I assume the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will control one-half of the time and somebody in opposition control the other.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to be opposed to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I am.

The SPEAKER. Has any member of the Committee on the Judiciary filed a minority report?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; there has not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts the only member on the committee fighting the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I appear to be at this time, Mr. Speaker, the only member of the committee who has continued to be opposed to the bill.

Mr. DYER. All the other members of the committee are for it.

Mr. WEBB. And my friend from Massachusetts is opposed to only one portion of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair should think as a matter of ordinary fairness that the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to control the time.

Mr. WEBB. Then I ask that all general debate on this bill be limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by myself and two hours by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and all debate to be confined to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The rules provides that.

Mr. WEBB. I know it does.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that general debate shall not exceed four hours, half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12001, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], who made the report on this bill in behalf of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is intended to fix an adequate compensation for circuit court of appeals and district judges and provide a more perfect method for their retirement, without changing the present time of service and age limit for so doing. It therefore deals exclusively with the judiciary. The Constitution creates three coordinate branches of government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, and having in view the best results for the common welfare conferred upon them independent and complete powers. All power resting inherently in the people, they saw fit in their fundamental law to grant distinctive powers to these respective coordinate departments of government, making each one exclusive and independent within its own sphere of action. Each branch, therefore, has its well-defined limitations, and the preservation of such exact limitations will necessarily best conserve the harmony of the whole. Montesquieu, one of the foremost political philosophers of all time, is said to have been the first to definitely suggest the separation of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government. His famous treatise on the Spirit of the Laws, which appeared in 1748, dwelt upon the separation powers under the British constitution as the most remarkable feature of that system. The next generation came to regard him as an oracle of political philosophy, and his treatise was one of that small number of books which permanently turned the course of human thought. Both Hamilton and Madison cite it in the Federalist as an unquestioned authority, and Madison frequently refers to this separation of the three powers as the distinguishing note of a free government. Time has grandly vindicated that judgment. A century and a quarter of great political and social changes has proven what Washington declared, that the judicial system is the keystone of our political fabric. At the time of the appointment of the 13 original judges President Washington wrote to Edmund Randolph, his Attorney General, as follows:

Impressed with a conviction that the due administration of justice is the firmest pillar of good government, I have considered the first arrangement of the judicial department as essential to the happiness of our country and to the stability of its political system; hence the selection of the fittest characters to expound the laws and dispense justice has been an invariable object of my anxious concern.

Judges of these courts are not confined in their decisions to mere questions of personal rights, but their decisions frequently extend to the settlement of principles which affect the policy and welfare of the Nation. It is necessary that they should be statesmen as well as jurists. Looking back upon the history of our courts and testing their work solely by results, all must agree they have acted with integrity and wisdom. If there be security for life, liberty, and property in America to-day, it is largely due to the fact that our judges have not been unmindful of their obligations as ministers of justice. "Justice," said Webster, "is the great interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized beings and civilized nations together. Wherever her temple stands and so long as it is duly honored there is a foundation for social security, general happiness, and the improvement and progress of our race. And whoever labors on this edifice with usefulness and distinction, whoever clears its foundations, strengthens its pillars, adorns its entablatures, or contributes to raise its august dome still higher in the skies, connects himself in name and fame and character with that which is and must be as durable as the frame of human society." In its final analysis the function of the judiciary rests upon popular sovereignty. It is simply the recognition of the natural and equal rights of man as the basis of a government formed for their protection by its people and regulated by law. It is a system under which every citizen shall be assured by indefeasible right the enjoyment of his life, his liberty, his property in all its forms, his home, his family relations, his freedom of conscience and of speech. The powers of government in all their extent and elaboration come down at last to this ultimate purpose. "The whole machinery of the State," says Lord Brougham, "all the apparatus of the system and its varied workings end in simply bringing 12 good men into a box."

The third article of the Constitution, in three brief sections, epitomizing legislative and judicial experience, created the most remarkable judicial establishment the world has even seen. In the first section it was provided that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." In the first section of the second article it was provided that "the President shall at stated times receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected." The prohibition in the case of the judiciary was against diminishing their compensation, while in the case of the President it was provided that his compensation should be "neither increased nor diminished." These different provisions were no doubt due to the difference in their terms of service, the President serving but for four years, while judges serve for life. It is highly probable that during a life service economic conditions may so change as to render a compensation inadequate which before was considered adequate. Hamilton, one of the principal authors of the Constitution, in the Federalist, No. 79, in his usual brilliant manner, thus discusses the provision:

Next to permanency in office nothing can contribute more to the independence of the judges than a fixed provision for their support. The remark made in relation to the President is equally applicable here. In the general course of human nature a power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will. And we can never hope to see realized in practice the complete separation of the judicial from the legislative power in any system which leaves the former dependent for pecuniary resources on the occasional grants of the latter. The enlightened friends to good government in every State have seen cause to lament the want of precise and explicit precautions in the State constitutions on this head. Some of these, indeed, have declared that permanent salaries should be established for the judges; but the experiment has in some instances shown that such expressions are not sufficiently definite to preclude legislative evasions. Something still more positive and unequivocal has been evinced to be requisite. The plan of the convention accordingly has provided that the judges of the United States "shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

This, all circumstances considered, is the most eligible provision that could have been devised. It will readily be understood that the fluctuations in the value of money and in the state of society rendered a fixed rate of compensation in the Constitution inadmissible. What might be extravagant to-day might in half a century become penurious and inadequate. It was, therefore, necessary to leave it to the discretion of the legislature to vary its provisions in conformity to the variations in circumstances, yet under such restrictions as to put it out of the power of that body to change the condition of the individual for the worse. A man may then be sure of the ground upon which he stands and can never be deterred from his duty by the apprehension of being placed in a less eligible situation. The clause which has been quoted combines both advantages. The salaries of judicial officers may from time to time be altered, as occasion shall require, yet so as never to lessen the allowance with which any particular judge comes into office in respect to him. It will be observed that a difference has been made by the convention between the compensation of the President and of the judges. That of the former can neither be increased or diminished; that of the latter can only not be diminished. This probably arose from the difference in the duration of the respective offices. As the President is to be elected for no more than four years, it can rarely happen that an adequate salary, fixed at the commencement of that period, will not continue to be such to its end. But with regard to the judges who, if they behave properly, will be secured in their places for life, it may well happen, especially in the early stages of the Government, that a stipend which would be very sufficient at their first appointment would become too small in the progress of their service.

It has been well said that the judicial branch of the Government is the weakest of all. It has neither the purse nor the sword. The courts are dependent upon the President to furnish marshals to execute their decrees. They are also dependent upon annual appropriations for the bread upon which their judges live. In order to exempt them from undue control of the legislative branch the framers of the Constitution inserted a mandate that they "shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be reduced during their continuance in office." This provision was intended to secure, so far as fixed compensation could do it, the independence of the judicial branch of the Government. It was, therefore, left to the discretion of the legislative branch to increase judicial compensation whenever new conditions and enlarged functions springing from increase of population and business made it proper to grant the same. As the legislative branch, charged under the Constitution with this duty, our inquiry must be whether or not the present compensation is fair and proper and whether "fluctuations in the value of money" and "variations in circumstances" render an increase necessary. The Constitution said they "shall" receive a "compensation." According to its primary significance the word "shall" imports a mandate, a command. And although the word may in obedience to a discoverable constitutional intent be understood in a merely permissive sense, just as words primarily of the latter import may upon like grounds of interpretation be understood as imperative, yet it is well settled that whatever the particular language it will be treated as intended to be mandatory where the purpose is to provide for the doing of something required by public or private justice, the power conferred in such cases implying a duty to exercise it. It follows that by the express language of the Constitution, as well as its unmistakable meaning, Federal judges have a right to insist upon Congress making the contemplated compensation for their services. It is also well settled that the creation of a duty requires its performance in a reasonable way. And here again the language of the Constitution is significant. It says that the judges "shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation," thereby investing Congress with a discretion in fixing it. But it is to be a "compensation," a word which etymologically suggests the image of balancing one thing against another and popularly implies the idea of an equivalent. It can not be conceded at all that Congress can discharge its duty under the Constitution by making an unreasonable compensation, whether merely nominal or grossly extravagant. It is bound to make a fair compensation in view of the nature and extent of the services rendered and to be rendered and the usual and customary remuneration for the performance of similar services. In other words, it must be reasonably compensatory. The discretion given to Congress is a discretion only within that limitation. In view of these plain principles the duty of Congress is not doubtful.

It is not the purpose of this bill to fix any unreasonable compensation as the result of this abnormal time. It is not based upon the war-time cost of living. We all know it is a conservative statement to make that the cost of living since 1903, when judicial salaries were last fixed, is from 50 to 100 per cent greater. This fact was recognized by Congress itself, for by act of March 3, 1911, the salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States were increased $2,000—to $14,500—and $15,000 for the Chief Justice of that court, while the salaries of the circuit and district judges were left as fixed under the act of 1903.

The present bill is, therefore, simply part of the delayed program of 1911 and is not to be considered as a new thought upon the subject. In addition to this, from figures submitted to the House when the bill to increase the compensation of postal employees and pensioners was before it, it was shown that the purchasing value of a dollar is but little greater than one-half what it was 15 years ago. Therefore it is quite unnecessary to discuss in detail this phase of the question, for it has been properly adjudicated by the act of the House under the legislation mentioned. The fluctuations in the value of money and variations in circumstances mentioned by Hamilton for increase of judicial compensation may be accepted, therefore, as existing at the present time.

The ideal principle of judicial compensation would be to make it proportionate to the services rendered in each district. To apply this principle in a legislative way, however, to the various judicial districts throughout the United States would be quité impracticable, for the reason that there is a great lack of uniformity in the character and amount of business and cost of living in all the districts. The present method of compensation takes no note of any of these differences. It was suggested, therefore, that the most reasonable method of arranging a variation in compensation according to the importance of the duty and need of the court's work would be to adopt the principle of making population the basis of compensation in the several districts. This method has worked satisfactorily in a number of States, notably in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Increase in population usually results in an increased volume of litigation and cost of living, and taking into account the variations that must necessarily occur in the different districts it was thought to afford a fairer basis for compensation than any other method that could be adopted. Representatives of the judiciary appeared before the committee and approved this method. In a statement submitted to the committee they said:

> This criterion, however, is not absolute. Of necessity it produces some inconsistencies, but not sufficient to affect it as the most reliable guide, for its application will go far to correct what must occur to everybody as a manifest injustice, and wherever there appears on the statistics a seeming discrimination, when the apparent volume of work seems to entitle one district to be in a higher class or another district to be in a class lower than its business statistics would indicate, in such instances another important factor operates in some degree as a corrective, and that is the cost of living. Generally speaking, in the districts having the largest population are located courts where the cost of living is the highest, because they are the districts in which the metropolitan centers occur, wherein of necessity the court sits and the judges must reside.

It was concluded, therefore, to fix a minimum compensation of $6,500 for district judges and an increase at the rate of $500 for each one-half million of population in the district in excess of the first 500,000, with a maximum compensation of $10,000 per year. Circuit judges are to receive a salary of $1,000 in excess of that paid the district judges, with the same provision for an increase up to a maximum of $11,000 per year. The entire cost of this increase of compensation of both district and circuit judges, based upon the population of the different districts according to the last census, would be $237,500. There are now 95 district judges and 31 circuit judges throughout the United States. Including the increases mentioned, the entire cost of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, circuit court, and district courts of the United States is about $100,000 less than the total amount paid by Great Britain and Ireland to the judges of the highest courts of that country, from which we have borrowed our system of laws. It should be remembered, however, that the population of that country is less than one-half the population of the United States and in extent of territory bears no comparison whatever.

It was realized that any bill that might be prepared would be subject to criticism in its practical application to the various districts. This bill, which has been most thoughtfully prepared, is open to the least amount of criticism, first, because it is a return as nearly as possible to the original scale of Federal judicial salary adjustment in use from the foundation of the Government until 1891, when the flat system was adopted; second, the system is not arbitrary, but based upon a general system by which salaries are determined on the basis of population, and population includes volume of work and expense of living. In the third circuit, where I reside, made up of the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, its practical application produces in that circuit those inequalities and necessities for compromise which must exist in a law applying to the whole Nation. The largest amount of judicial business in any Federal district is done in New York, the second largest in Chicago, and the third and fourth in Pennsylvania; but Pennsylvania is divided into three districts, hence all these districts fall in salaries behind Massachusetts, for the reason that Massachusetts has but one district and one place to hold a Federal court. The result is that Massachusetts, with less business than either Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, is placed in a higher grade of salaries than Pennsylvania. Again, the expense of living is as high in Delaware as in New Jersey, both of which are in the third circuit, but by reason of population Delaware falls in the lowest scale and New Jersey in a much higher scale. From this will be seen the difficulty of adjustment and the necessity of salary inequality even in one circuit. What is true of Pennsylvania in the application of this law is necessarily true when applied to the whole Union. The flat salary system, however, is much more objectionable than this, and the judges themselves recognize in this system as much equity and justice as any that can be devised.

In this connection it may be interesting to note the salaries paid the various English judges.

Under the "judicature acts" of that country, creating supreme judicial tribunals out of the then existing courts, the new courts consisted of a supreme court of judicature, having two branches, the court of appeal and the high court of justice, while the high court of justice is composed of the King's bench, the chancery, and the probate, divorce, and Admiralty divisions. The judges of these courts are as follows: The lord high chancellor, lords of appeal in ordinary, the master of the rolls, the lord chief justice of England, the lord justices of appeal, and associate justices of the high court. The lord chancellor appoints the associate justices, of whom there are 19 in the King's bench division and 6 in the chancery division. Their salaries are as follows:

Lord high chancellor	$50,000
Lord of appeal in ordinary, House of Lords	30,000
Supreme court of judicature:
Court of appeal—
Master of the rolls	30,000
Five justices, each	25,000
High court of justice—
Chancery division, six justices, each	25,000
King's bench division:
Lord Chief Justice Reading	40,000
15 justices, each	25,000

Scotland:
Lord justice general	$25,000
10 associate justices, each	18,000
Ireland:
Lord chancellor	30,000
2 justices, court of appeal	20,000
Lord chief justice	25,000
5 associate justices, each	17,500

Compared with these, our American salaries seem to be very small, indeed. The present compensation of circuit court judges is but $7,000 per annum, and of district judges $6,000 per annum, fixed by act of Congress of 1903, which, following the act of 1891, was the first general inauguration of the flat-salary plan for all district and circuit judges throughout the United States.

An examination of early legislation by Congress on this subject shows that the salaries of the district and circuit judges in the several judicial districts varied continuously from 1789 to 1891, the time of the passage of the act above mentioned. Under the acts of 1830, 1855, 1866, and, again, in the Revised Statutes of 1873, these salaries varied quite materially. Under this legislation the salaries of the judges of the districts of Massachusetts; northern, southern, and eastern districts of New York; eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania; northern districts of Illinois and New Jersey; and the districts of Ohio have only been increased $2,000 per annum in the last half century. In 1857 the salaries of the judges in these districts were fixed at $4,000 per annum, and apparently remained at that figure until 1891, when they were fixed at $5,000, and in 1903 the general increase to $6,000 was made. Meantime, in the western Pennsylvania and New Jersey districts the salaries of State judges were increased considerably more than 100 per cent. In Pennsylvania the justices of the supreme court now receive $13,000 per annum; judges of the superior court, $12,000 per annum; and the common pleas and orphans' court judges of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh each receive $11,000 per annum. The remaining orphans' court and common pleas judges are compensated on the basis of population, as follows:

From 200,000 to 500,000	per annum	$8,500
From 140,000 to 200,000	do	8,000
From 90,000 to 140,000	do	7,000
Less than 90,000	do	6,000

The judges of the Dauphin County court, where the State capital is located, receive $4,000 per annum extra for trying Commonwealth cases.

Pennsylvania, with a population of about 8,000,000, and New York, with a population of about 10,000,000, each pays its judges more than the United States pays its judiciary for administering justice to more than 100,000,000 people. In New York the justices of the supreme court and intermediate court receive $17,000 per annum. Police magistrates in New York City and Philadelphia receive a greater annual salary than the district judges of the United States located in those cities. This situation, which is not confined to the States mentioned, attracts to the State bench men of the highest talent and frequently operates to the detriment of the Federal bench. A judge should be paid a sum which would permit him to live modestly and decently when he is required to devote all his time and energy to the performance of his public duties. In almost every vocation salaries have been increased in order that people may live decently and meet the rising cost of the necessaries of life. Federal judges, whose duties are of the highest character and who are a part of a coordinate branch of the Government, should at least receive the same consideration given to the employees of the Government. If this bill should become a law, the Federal bench will become attractive to those members of the bar who because of their great ability and standing have lucrative practices and whose family obligations forbid their accepting the honor and responsibility because of the small salary now attached to the office. This will insure to the Federal judiciary of the future men of large experience and fine legal attainments. It will also result in retaining on the bench those judges who for patriotic motives remained during the war but who, without such increase, will find it necessary for financial reasons to resign within the near future.

Former Justice of the Supreme Court Charles E. Hughes, now president of the New York State Bar Association, addressed a communication to Mr. CARAWAY, chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, in which he said, in part, as follows:

I desire to express my hearty approval of the provisions of the bill now pending before your committee with respect to the increase of salaries of Federal judges. The proposed increases are reasonable, and it is of the highest importance, in my judgment, that they should be granted.

Section 3 of the bill reenacts section 260 of the Judicial Code, relating to the retirement of judges who have served 10 years and have reached the age of 70 years. Upon the resignation of a judge, under this section, his judicial functions cease, but he continues receiving his judicial salary for the remainder of his natural life. It frequently happens, however, that a judge qualified to retire is also qualified to perform judicial duties of a limited character which he would be glad to perform. The bill therefore contains a further provision for the voluntary retirement of district and circuit judges who may be called upon to perform such judicial duties as such retiring judges may be willing to undertake. In the last Congress this provision was made the subject of a separate bill and passed both the Senate and House. While on its passage in the Senate, however, it was amended by attaching a provision for an additional judge, and because of this amendment it failed of passage in the House. The merit of this provision is that instead of resigning the judge simply retires and is still enabled to perform such judicial services as he is capable of performing when the business of the district demands it. The district thereby receives the benefit of such services without any additional expense to the Government.

Further provision is made in this section for the retirement of district and circuit judges qualified to retire voluntarily and unable to render efficient services, but who nevertheless remain in office. In such cases the bill authorizes:

The President, if he finds that any such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of a permanent character, may, when necessary for the efficient dispatch of business, appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of the circuit or district judge of the district in which such disabled judge belongs.

This provision of the bill accords with repeated recommendations of the Department of Justice. Former Attorney General James C. McReynolds, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in his report as Attorney General dated December 1, 1913, made the following recommendations:

Justices of the United States courts at the age of 70 years, after having served 10 years, may retire upon full pay. In the past many justices have availed themselves of this privilege. Some, however, have remained upon the bench long beyond the time when they were capable of adequately discharging their duties, and in consequence the administration of justice has suffered. The power of Congress to correct this condition is limited by the provision of the Constitution that judges shall hold their office during good behavior. I suggest an act providing when any judge of a Federal court below the Supreme Court fails to avail himself of the privilege of retiring now granted by law that the President be required, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint another judge, who shall preside over the affairs of the court and have precedence over the older one. This will insure at all times the presence of a judge sufficiently active to discharge promptly and adequately the duties of the court.

Mr. Attorney General Gregory made the same recommendation in his reports in December, 1914, December, 1915, and December, 1916, and since then again repeated. We have, therefore, these many requests for the enactment of this legislation from the Department of Justice, made by two different Attorneys General. From these recommendations it appears to be the view of the department that this legislation is urgently needed. The bill, however, is less drastic than the recommendations mentioned. These recommendations would require that the President appoint an additional judge wherever the judge qualified to retire failed to avail himself of this privilege, while the pending bill provides only for such action when such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of physical or mental disability of a permanent character. The ascertainment of this disqualifying fact rests with the President; but this authority can in no sense be considered as a delegation of the legislative power. That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President is a principle generally recognized; but this act is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not in any real sense invest the President with the power of legislation. Legislative power is exercised when Congress declares the contingency upon which the President is required to act. What the President is here required to do is simply the execution of an act of Congress. He is the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the facts upon which its express will is to take effect. What is left to the President is not the legislative determination of what public policy demands, but simple ascertainment of the facts or state of things upon which the law makes or intends to make its own action depend. The practice of Congress in enacting legislation of this character since the organization of the Government has frequently received judicial sanction. A historical discussion of such legislation will be found in Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649). It is recognized in sections 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the Judicial Code, where a circuit judge is authorized, "whenever in his judgment the public interests so require," to designate a district judge or circuit judge to hold a district court in the place of or in aid of any other district judge. See also McDowell v. United States (159 U. S., 596). A familiar instance of the exercise of this power by Congress is the granting of pensions. Its practice is to do this both in individual cases by special acts and collectively by authorizing the Pension Bureau to grant pensions upon certain ascertained facts. Nobody ever questioned the validity of the latter procedure. Whether it shall proceed by special bill in each individual case or declare a policy to be administered by an executive official is within the legislative discretion of Congress. This was settled in the case of Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 364).

Under the judiciary article of the Constitution the power is expressly conferred upon Congress from time to time to ordain and establish "inferior courts." This bill refers only to circuit courts of appeal and district courts, and they are "inferior courts" ordained and established by Congress under this constitutional power. The retirement feature of the bill relates only to judges of "inferior courts" who have held a commission for 10 years, have attained the age of 70 years, whose services are inefficient, and who have failed to avail themselves of the law permitting them either to resign or to retire. It does not interfere with the tenure of office or salary of the judge—two features of their office protected by the Constitution. In effect, it simply fixes the status of the judge in question as a member of the court after it has been ascertained that he is unable to discharge efficiently the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of a permanent character. He remains a judge of the court and can still perform judicial duties. It can not be claimed that a judge has a vested right to perform all the judicial powers exercised by him at the time of his appointment, for this would prevent Congress from changing the jurisdiction of the court in any particular. An additional judge could not be appointed to divide the exercise of judicial power, and Congress would be powerless either to add to or diminish the jurisdiction of the courts. And yet Congress in the past has actually deprived a court of its appellate jurisdiction, abolished other courts, and vested the jurisdiction of abolished courts in other judicial tribunals, and directed the judges stripped of their jurisdiction to serve in other tribunals. In United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (98 U. S., 569) the court said:

> The discretion, therefore, of Congress as to the number, the character, the territorial limits of courts among which it shall distribute this judicial power is unrestricted, except as to the Supreme Court. * * * We say, therefore, that with the exception of the Supreme Court the authority of Congress in creating courts and conferring on them all or much or little of the judicial power of the United States is unlimited by the Constitution.

It would seem clear, therefore, that the retirement provisions of the proposed bill are in entire harmony with the Constitution, and both legislative and judicial precedents thereunder. It is less drastic in its provisions than any of the bills heretofore proposed on this subject, and practically removes all serious objections to it.

These retirement features are intended to meet conditions which have arisen in the past where, because of the life tenure of this office, some justices have remained in active service when of advanced years and when not capable, because of physical or mental condition, of performing judicial work. The need for this legislation was emphasized by a bill which was before Congress several sessions last past. It is in no way political. The features which were objected to by some Members of Congress when it was under consideration before have been eliminated. It has no application except in instances where judges have reached the age of 70 years, and by reason of physical or mental impairment of a permanent nature are incapable of performing their duties.

Much time and thought have been given to the careful preparation of this bill. It has the support not only of the Judiciary Committee of the House but of practically all the Federal judges throughout the country. It has also received the indorsement of the Attorney General and of a great number of the bar associations of the country. In my judgment it is as fair as any bill that could be devised. Its enactment would be simple justice to the men whose services are essential to maintaining the stability of our political system. Any bill that might be prepared would no doubt be subject to criticism in its application. This bill, however, in the judgment of the committee and of the judges themselves is open to but a minimum of objection or criticism.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. I will.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman stated in his opening statement that when he got to that part of this bill which gives the President authority to appoint additional district and circuit judges in certain cases he would point out to the committee wherein this provision differs from the bill which we had up some two years ago, and which was defeated in the House. I remember that in that case the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the ranking member on the Republican side of the Committee on the Judiciary, filed a report against that bill. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that in this case it was the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota that was incorporated in this bill.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Minnesota revised——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman point out to the committee just the difference between those two propositions?

Mr. STEELE. I would be glad to do it if I had a copy of the old bill here with me. I do not happen to have a copy of the old bill here. If the gentleman from Missouri has such a copy, I would be glad to do it. I was indicating in a general way that the phraseology of this bill was radically different from the old, and that in order for the President to acquire jurisdiction to act at all under this bill a man must be in a state of physical and mental decline and unable efficiently to perform all the duties of his office.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I would like the gentleman to explain, if he has an idea on that subject, what the bill means by the President finding that the judge is unable to discharge efficiently the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability. How will the President find that? Will it be by a mere arbitrary statement on his part, or will he have to have the man examined in some way?

Mr. STEELE. He will find that as a fact in the best way he can. That will be up to the President. It can not be an arbitrary decision, however.

Mr. DENISON. How can it be prevented from being an arbitrary decision?

Mr. STEELE. Simply because, when the President is advised in that regard, and it is necessary to appoint a judge on the bench, that appointment must be confirmed by the Senate, and if the Senate did not agree with the President in his finding, and refuses to confirm the appointment, he could not, of course, act or perform any judicial function.

Mr. DENISON. The judge, then, that is displaced in a particular case would have only one remedy, and that would be to prevent the confirmation of the new judge by the Senate. Is that the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. STEELE. I first want to take exception to the gentleman's word "displaced." He still performs such judicial functions as he can. He is not displaced. It is not within the power of the Congress or of the President to displace a judge if once appointed. He is there for good behavior, or life, practically, and he can not be removed from office; and all that this bill attempts to do is simply to change his status as a member of that court. Instead of his being senior in commission, as he may possibly be, he simply becomes the junior in commission in the performance of judicial work He changes his status merely, but does not change his judicial function.

Mr. DENISON. It is a displacement, so far as the office is concerned.

Mr. STEELE. No; except that he is not a senior in commission.

Mr. DENISON. The point I am getting at is, suppose the judge in question disputes, or desires to dispute, the President's judgment as to his physical ability. His only chance to establish it or to defend against that charge is to go before the Senate and prevent the confirmation of the other judge. Is not that so?

Mr. STEELE. In the first place, it is a fact for the President to determine. He usually has an Attorney General who is a trained man to pass upon matters of that kind. Any dispute with reference to it would have to be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. DENISON. It would have to be submitted to the Senate?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. Under the wording of the present bill, I take it now, there will be no pensioning of the judges, as I understand the term. In other words, the judges are not retired from active service and pensionable when retired, but I understand they will always be considered as judges and be ready to perform duties when called upon, no matter what their ages may be?

Mr. STEELE. That is true under the retirement feature. They are judges, and are supposed to be doing some judicial work. It is not true when they resign. There is still a retirement feature as to those who voluntarily resign.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Do the retired judges receive the same salary under this law as they now receive?

Mr. STEELE. The same. The first retirement provision mentioned in this bill is identical with the existing law.

Mr. BURNETT. Not as they receive now, as I understand, but as they will receive, as increased by this bill. Is not that it?

Mr. STEELE. Of course they are entitled to the salary they receive at the time of their retirement.

Mr. BURNETT. I know; but the gentleman's question was whether they would receive the salaries they now receive if retired now.

Mr. STEELE. The salaries they received at the time of their retirement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I so understood. Of course when the bill becomes a law they will receive the salaries that the bill provides.

Mr. STEELE. That is correct.

Answering the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], who asked me in reference to the provisions of the bill that was before the House more than a year ago, and contrasting the provisions of that bill with those of the one that is now before the House, I wish, for the information of the House, to read the provisions of the old bill upon the subject. It was as follows:

In the event any such judge of a district court of the United States, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, the President, if in his opinion the public good so requires, may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Gentlemen of the House will note that in the previous bill the criterion for the appointment was the opinion of the President that the public good so required. The provisions of this bill are that the judge must, from mental or physical condition, be incapable of performing all the duties of his office. It was this provision, as I stated awhile ago, that was drafted by Mr. VOLSTEAD, and after careful consideration by the committee was adopted by it and incorporated in this bill.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Another important difference, as I understand it, between this bill and the previous bill, modified at the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], is that if this bill becomes a law it will still permit the other judge, that is, the judge who is being given this assistance, but who still remains on the bench, to be a judge in fact.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely so.

Mr. DYER. Not a supernumerary.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely so.

Mr. DYER. And if anyone appeared before him for a writ of any kind he would have full authority to issue that writ. In other words, the new judge would not be the only judge of the court.

Mr. STEELE. Not at all.

Mr. DYER. That was the fact under the old bill to which objection was made.

Mr. STEELE. The old judge would perform any judicial functions that he would be capable of performing.

Mr. ROSE. As I understand, under the present law a judge retiring is paid so much salary. The law provides for the amount.

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Under this proposed bill is there any change in that feature of the law?

Mr. STEELE. There is none. He receives the salary payable at the time of his resignation.

Mr. ROSE. The existing law is not changed by the proposed bill?

Mr. STEELE. No. Now, while I am on the subject of these retirement features of this bill, I desire to have read for the benefit of the House a letter which I received from former Justice Charles E. Hughes, of the Supreme Court, after I had reported the bill to the House, a letter relating to this retirement feature and also relating to the provisions of the bill with reference to the compensation provided. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUNE 27, 1918.

Hon. H. J. STEELE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I trust that House bill No. 12001, increasing the salaries of Federal judges, will not fail to pass. As I have already written to Congressman CARAWAY, I regard it as a highly important measure which should be passed in justice to the judges and in the interest of the public. I stated the grounds of this opinion in my letter to Congressman CARAWAY, and I need not enlarge upon them. I write now to say that I am also in favor of the provisions in House bill No. 12001, relating to the retirement of circuit and district judges. I was not in favor of the provisions embraced in House bill No. 11134, relating to the compulsory retirement of district judges, but these provisions have been eliminated and under House bill No. 12001 circuit and district judges have been put on the same basis with regard to retirement, and these provisions, it seems to me, are eminently wise.

Very sincerely, yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. STEELE. The provision of this bill with reference to the compensation of judges is new in Federal practice. While it is new so far as the compensation of Federal judges is concerned, it is not new with reference to the experience of a number of the States of the Union which have adopted the same basis of compensation as is incorporated in this bill. The Constitution provides that the judges from time to time shall receive a compensation, and that this compensation shall not be diminished during their term of office. What is meant by "a compensation"? The ordinary meaning of the word "compensation" in the etymological sense of it is the image of a balancing of one thing against another. Popularly we understand it to be an equivalent for something, and the idea therefore of a compensation is that those who render judicial service shall receive an equivalent for that service from the Government.

Mr. GORDON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Suppose a judge who lived in one of these $10,000-a-year districts were detailed to go and hold court in some rural district where the compensation was only $6,500, what would be his compensation while sojourning in this other district?

Mr. STEELE. His compenation is fixed by reference to the place where he is supposed to perform his regular functions. It is extraordinary for him to leave his district and go somewhere else. Judges who leave their homes and go away to perform other duties are provided a reimbursement for their expenses while so doing. It does not add anything to their compensation. It only reimburses them for their additional expenses.

Mr. CALDWELL. As a matter of fact a man coming from a $10,000 district to a rural district is performing an additional onerous duty. He is doing more than $10,000 worth of work.

Mr. STEELE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KINKAID. Suppose that in a State where the statute constitutes one district there is a population say of 3,000,000 people. There will be several district judges there.

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. KINKAID. Now, are you going to allow additional compensation to each one of the judges on the basis of the whole population?

Mr. STEELE. On the basis of the population of that State.

Mr. KINKAID. Suppose, on the other hand, there is another State with equal population which has five districts, say one judge in each district. Those judges will receive compensation in proportion to the population in their respective districts?

Mr. STEELE. Correct. It operates that way in my own State of Pennsylvania, where there are three districts.

Mr. KINKAID. There are three districts, and several judges in each district?

Mr. STEELE. No; there is but one district judge in one district, and there are two district judges in each of the other two districts, and in that same circuit is the State of Delaware with but a small population.

Mr. KINKAID. I was talking about districts, so as not to get the question confused. Does it not operate to the advantage of each judge in a district where there are two district judges, over the single judge in the district where there is only one? Granting that the population is twice as large, it ought to be consistent, in the district which has two district judges. Now they will get an increase of compensation in proportion to the population of the district. On the other hand, the district that has one judge will get an increase in proportion to the population which one judge should take care of. There will be twice the population, and therefore in a district having two district judges the compensation would be increased twofold for each judge over that in the district that has one judge.

Mr. STEELE. Each district, no matter whether it has one, two, or three judges, will have the salaries fixed according to the population of that particular district. It will be the population of that entire district which will fix the compensation of all judges in that district. Take, for instance, the city of Philadelphia, where there are two district judges in the eastern district of Pennsylvania. Side by side with that is the State of Delaware with a small population. It works out with inequalities in some instances, but on the whole it has been found upon examination that it works out as fairly as any system that can be devised. It has been the judicial experience of those who have had large experience on the bench and who have considered the subject, that population breeds increased litigation, and an increase of population also increases the expense of living in that particular district. The two things go together.

Mr. KINKAID. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not like to argue with the gentleman who has the floor, but if I understand correctly, it seems to me that there is a fallacy contained in the bill.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will look over the report of the committee——

Mr. KINKAID. I have read it carefully.

Mr. STEELE. He will find a discussion on that aspect of it.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. I will.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman has given serious consideration in the study of this, and I would like to ask his opinion about this provision on page 2, line 8, where there is found this language:

Provided, however, That the salary of any district judge appointed for more than one district shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate population of the districts for which he is appointed.

Take the instance of two districts in a State. Suppose one district—call it the southern district—has a judge. Suppose there is another district created by subsequent law in which another judge is appointed for the two districts. Under the reading of this bill, as I view it, the man who is appointed for the two districts would get a salary in proportion to the entire population of the State, even though, as a matter of fact, he tried cases only in the district in which he lives. Is it the idea to afford compensation to a judge outside his own district when he does not try any cases outside his own district?

Mr. STEELE. I will answer the gentleman in this way: That provision was intended to meet a different situation than that which the gentleman has suggested. Where a judge is appointed for a single district and performs his function there, of course he is only entitled to a salary upon the basis of the population of that particular district. There are in the country several instances of this character, where there are two judicial districts and only one judge for those two judicial districts. That is the case in Tennessee to-day. I do not know how it happened, but I know that in Tennessee there are three Federal judicial districts and but two judges for those three districts. One judge is appointed for two districts and no other judge is there to perform the duties of that district. If he performs the duties of that office in two districts and no other judge performs the duties, manifestly he should receive compensation based on the population of the two districts, if he does the work in both districts.

Mr. GARD. How about the converse—suppose he does the work in one district and is appointed for two districts?

Mr. STEELE. He would never be appointed for more than one district unless the situation arises such as I have just mentioned.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman state upon what theory the appointment of judges is made for the judicial districts? Is there any special provision of the Constitution or of law that governs the President in the appointment of judges for the district? I am asking so that I may have a better understanding of the subject.

Mr. STEELE. The Judicial Code divides the country into judicial districts. That Judicial Code and the creation of courts was passed under the clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to establish inferior courts below that of the Supreme Court.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WEBB. I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEELE. The Judicial Code divides the country up into districts, particularly defining their boundaries, and when a district judge is appointed for any particular district the jurisdiction is defined in the Judicial Code.

Mr. DENISON. Can the President appoint a judge for two districts if he wishes to, or two judges for one district?

Mr. STEELE. If the code so stipulates. That is a fact in New York City, in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and in Chicago, where there is a heavy population and creates a large business for the court.

I was about to state that the basis of population incorporated in the bill is that applied to several States of the Union, notably Ohio and Pennsylvania. I might say with reference to the salaries fixed in this bill that the minimum is $6,500, $500 more than the district judges now receive as a basis of compensation, and we provide that they shall receive an increased compensation to the amount of $500 per annum for each additional half million population beyond the first half million that may be in that particular district.

It was the practice of Congress down to as late as 1891 to fix the compensation for each particular judge in this or that section of the country according to the amount of work that he performed. There was a variation in the salaries down to that time, when the flat salary system was adopted. That was continued in the present judicial salary act of 1903. Some gentlemen may ask, Why do you not include the judges of the Supreme Court in this bill? I answer that in 1911 the compensation of the judges of that court was increased $2,000 per annum, while the salaries of the district and circuit judges were left untouched, so that we are really finishing what was commenced by Congress in 1911.

With reference to the amount fixed here and the basis of it, I wish to say that Pennsylvania, which has adopted this salary system, and has had it for a number of years, has found it works very satisfactorily, and Pennsylvania to-day, even although you may add this increase to the judges' salaries mentioned in this bill, is paying $60,000 per year more for its judicial system than the United States is paying its judges for performing their judicial functions throughout the entire territory of the United States. New York is paying vastly more than that, and if a comparison were made with the compensation paid to the English judges our compensation in this country would seem very small indeed. The lord chancellor of England receives $40,000 per year; the lord chief justice receives $30,000 per year; the associate justices, who are equivalent to our Federal judges, receive $25,000 per year; and the lowest, as I recall, are in Scotland and Ireland, and they receive $18,000 per year. The fact of the matter is that the compensation paid to the judges of Great Britain and Ireland for performing the same judicial functions as our Federal judiciaries perform, although the population is only one-half of that of the United States, is much more than we are paying for our entire judicial system. I shall not take up the time to go into the details of that matter, and in conclusion simply wish to say that this bill has received very careful consideration by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Could the gentleman inform the committee what the salaries of the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals are?

Mr. STEELE. Seven thousand dollars per year at the present time. This bill provides for a minimum increase of $1,000 per year.

I wish to say that in the framing of this bill and in its consideration the committee has had the assistance of a committee of judges who have taken the matter up. There are a number of judges now upon the bench who by reason of the increased cost of living have informed the committee that unless they receive some relief of the character described in this bill they will be unable to continue upon the bench. In New York City and in Philadelphia the police magistrates are receiving higher salaries than the United States judges are receiving for performing their vast duties in those large cities. With the expansion of the Federal activities that is going on throughout the country and which has resulted in largely increasing the judicial work performed by the judges throughout the country, it seems to me that the compensation provided in this bill is reasonable, and that making population the basis is as fair and equitable as any system that could have been devised.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. On this question of the number of judges whom the President may appoint in the different districts, does the Judicial Code provide the number? Does it say, for instance, that in southern New York a certain number of judges may be appointed and that in these two districts in Tennessee one judge shall be appointed for the two districts?

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman has stated it correctly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In other words, it is fixed by the Judicial Code?

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely; and he can not go outside of the congressional authorization.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman say about that part of the bill that provides that the President may retire judges who have served a certain length of time and who have reached a certain age, if they do not retire voluntarily, and put some one else in their place?

Mr. STEELE. I think the gentleman must have been absent from the Chamber when I discussed that phase of the matter.

Mr. MADDEN. I was absent, if the gentleman discussed it, for I did not hear it. I would like to know what the gentleman thinks of the justification of that sort of thing.

Mr. STEELE. I think the gentleman has had the same confusion of thought that a number of other gentlemen have had, that the provisions of this bill are identical with the provisions of the bill that was before the House more than a year ago. The provisions of this bill, however, are entirely different from that bill. That bill gave the President authority wherever in his opinion the public good required it to appoint a judge, whereas this bill provides that he is only authorized to act where by reason of physical and mental disability of a permanent character the judge is disqualified from performing efficiently all of the duties of his office. There can be no justification for a man remaining on the bench who has reached that stage of physical decline.

Mr. MADDEN. Where does the bill say that? Does it say that in that language?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman read it.

Mr. STEELE. It is on page 5, commencing in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been fixed by the House.

Mr. STEELE. I think if the gentleman reads that portion of the bill that he will agree with me.

Mr. WEBB. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I always listen with pleasure and respect to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has just taken his seat. I regret when I can not agree with him, as sometimes does occur; but in the main I am happy to say that I do usually accord in sentiment and judgment with what he advocates.

Here is a bill asking for an increase in the salaries of our judges. On the question of the increase in salary I think there will scarcely be an observable opposition. Every man who understands the situation recognizes that the judiciary of this country are underpaid, and have been underpaid for many years. We are performing to-day only an act of unfinished business. We increased the salaries of the Supreme Court judges, but we stopped short of moving down the line to take care of the circuit and district judges. The total increased expense measured by this bill for all the judges of the United States is a little over $237,000, an infinitesimal sum in and of itself; and when we remember the stainless and splendid record of the judiciary of this country every man ought with spontaneity to come to the rescue and say that they ought to be properly paid and properly recognized.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said we ought to have our salaries increased as Congressmen, and gave as a reason that we were called upon for contributions to the Red Cross and to other charities, which are cheerfully given. Are not the judges of the land called upon to make like disbursements? Does not the increase in cost of living weigh just as heavily upon them as it does upon every other citizen in the country? Has not a judge to maintain a certain position of dignity in the community commensurate with his position? Has not a judge to rear, educate, and provide for his family? Where is there anything to compensate him for the life that is spent upon the bench? A lawyer has opportunities for making money that never can come to a judge. The judge is barred practically from entering into any kind of business. The very fact that he has a life tenure is to a large degree a handicap upon him, for when his period of service is ended, when his life is closed, he has had no opportunity to create, augment, or increase his private fortune and leave a provision for his wife or his children who are left behind him.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. I see the force of the gentleman's argument. I should like to know why the judges located in the District of Columbia are not in some way provided for in this bill? Surely the expense of living is as high here as it is anywhere in the country. I should think that some provision ought to be made for the judges of the District of Columbia, even though we do not have an excessive population.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is quite right; but that bill would come under a different classification, I think. The payment, if the old rule of 50–50 prevails, would be borne partly by the District of Columbia and partly out of the Treasury of the United States. I have nothing to say against the proposition which is involved in the question. I simply say that so far as this bill is concerned, so far as the compensation of the judges sitting on our United States court benches is concerned, they are underpaid, and improperly underpaid, and their salaries ought to be increased in a proper and distinct proportion.

Mr. FLOOD. I will ask the gentleman why are not the judges of the Court of Claims here in Washington included?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I do not know. The matter was not presented in the bill. The bill was considered on its merits as it was presented, and the report of the committee is in support of the bill as presented and acted upon and considered by them.

Mr. FLOOD. Does not the gentleman think the judges of the Court of Claims should be put on a parity with the other judges of the United States courts?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I am not able to answer that question. It probably is true; but it ought not to hinder or hamper the passage of this bill now. That question was not before the Judiciary Committee, and was not considered by the committee, and therefore you can not, without probably defeating this bill in its passage, attempt to put an amendment at this late hour on this bill now in the nature of a provision for the courts in the District of Columbia or the judges of the Court of Claims.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman stated a moment ago that taking care of the courts of the District would of necessity come under the fifty-fifty proposition. That would be true so far as the appropriation was concerned, but surely the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction of the salaries of the judges of the District of Columbia; and inasmuch as it was an oversight that the judges of the District of Columbia were not provided for in this bill, does not the gentleman believe that an amendment should be offered that would make provision for them without jeopardizing or embarrassing this bill in any way?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman sees fit to offer an amendment covering those judges, so far as I am concerned I see no objection to it.

Mr. REAVIS. The same thing that inspired the committee to report a bill increasing the salaries of the Federal judges would be equally persuasive regarding the salaries of the judges in the District of Columbia, would it not, the high cost of living, and so forth?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes; surely. I do not know the conditions that affect them, nor do I even know the salaries of the judges in the District of Columbia. I have had no investigation made of that. But I certainly think that if the gentleman wished to offer an amendment of that kind, he is a member of our Judiciary Committee, there is the place where it should have been offered, in order that it might receive full, fair, and thorough consideration.

Now, I want to pass on. The storm center relating to this bill is not as to the question of increasing the salaries nor as to the method of increasing the salaries. I think both those points have been fully and fairly considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. So far as these matters are concerned, there is, as I stated before, very little opposition. The storm center in relation to this bill apparently is with reference to that particular portion of it that provides for the appointment of a judge under certain circumstances by the President of the United States, by and with the consent and concurrence of the Senate of the United States.

We must start with the consideration that there are occasions, rare indeed of course, where there ought to be some power that would correct an evil that everyone acknowledges does exist. Take a district where a judge has served 10 years continuously, is over 70 years of age, is incompetent either from physical or mental causes to discharge all the duties of his office, and the business of that community is being clogged and held up and the community is suffering, why ought there not to be some speedy methods of affording a remedy and quick relief?

We have considered what remedy could be applied. Two years ago a bill was introduced in this House providing for the appointment by the President—and it left it almost absolutely a matter of choice on his part—a matter of his own ipse dixit whether it should be done. I, with my colleague on the committee, Mr. VOLSTEAD, filed a minority report on the bill and opposed it. In the committee our attitude was in opposition to any measure being inserted here on this subject. Finally, as a compromise, suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, the language now in the bill was offered and agreed to, because we felt that it furnished, probably, the best and wisest method that could be obtained.

On one occasion, thinking that perhaps it might be a good suggestion, I asked the judges who were consulted by the committee in framing and aiding us in the formation of this bill, why not leave the question of the ascertainment of incapacity of the judges of the same circuit, or a majority of them, in which the man subject to the objection was exercising the functions and duties of his office. Instantly there was a protest. "Oh, you could not get the judges to certify on that point," and so we were obliged to leave it where the bill puts it, that the President must find the fact, and the bill carefully guards what he must find. He must find that the man is incapacitated physically or mentally, permanently—not temporarily but permanently—incapacitated from discharging all the duties of his office. When he so finds he may nominate a man who shall be senior over him in that circuit, but the man himself is not disturbed; his salary continues, and he remains in the service.

Surely, my friends, if the President of the United States dared to exercise the power that is given him in this bill for the purpose of satisfying some political object, do you think that would or could be tolerated, and would it not find rejection of the nominee by the Senate?

Some one has said to me, Suppose a judge past 70—and there are many men who pass that mark who are still in possession of their faculties physically and mentally and probably capable of doing the very finest work on the bench—suppose the man has reached that stage and the President would say: "He has served 10 years, and I will find that he is incapacitated and will attempt to remove him." What would be the response? Do you think, gentlemen of the committee, that the bar of his community would sit idly by and permit any such action against the man who was capable of performing his work on the bench? Do you think for a moment that the community would suffer a competent judge to be removed in this fashion and would not the protest loud and strong sound in the ears of the Members of the Senate and be so potential with them that they would say by their votes that the appointment thus wrongfully made should not be confirmed? If the appointment is not confirmed, what harm has been done? The judge affected by the attempted appointment is still in his place, he is still in office, and the new appointee that the President has nominated has not and can not take his seat, and therefore the matter is just as it was before.

We know of no other or better way to afford relief of what is recognized by us all as a rare evil but nevertheless one actually in the administration of the justice of the country. There are cases where, perhaps, under some false notion a man may seek to hold his place on the bench when he is unfitted to conduct and perform the duties of his office, and when he ought to retire from his place and let the President appoint a new man. Surely in such a case as that, where the business of the district is clogged, there should be a remedy by which that state of affairs could be redressed. We furnish you with the remedy in this bill, the best our united thought could give, and we ask you to see that it is adopted.

Now, one word in answer to a suggestion that was made, I know not from what source such a thought could come, but, said the gentleman, the judges have tried the case and found a verdict in favor of increasing their salary. It was a question between the judges and the taxpayers, but, he said, there was nobody there to represent the taxpayer. Well, sometimes a gentleman may arrogate to himself all the excellencies and all the virtues of humanity and think that no one else is his peer, but I would have him understand that every man of the 21 members of that Judiciary Committee sat there as the representatives of the taxpayers and their counsel, and not a man would have voted for the passage of this bill if it did not commend itself to their better and unprejudiced judgment.

The bill received unanimous and favorable consideration—with perhaps one exception—and the only point of real difference in this committee to-day, as I understand it, is with reference to the clause which I have discussed at length regarding the appointment of a successor over an incumbent who is incompetent by reason of mental or physical defect for the performance of the duties of his office.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BORLAND). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], who has just taken his seat, did me the honor to refer in terms to my interruption of the speech of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in which I suggested that we represent here the taxpayers of the United States, and with considerable fervor the gentleman from Pennsylvania responded to that suggestion on my part. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, like himself, I have practiced law for many years. I practiced law for 15 years until I came to the Congress of the United States, and then I gave it up. I represented individuals and some corporations to the best of my ability for 15 years when they paid my fees, but when I came here I quit representing them and commenced to represent all the people of my State in these measures appropriating money which the taxpayers of the United States must contribute. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his corporate connections, say the same thing? I propose to continue, in spite of the criticisms of corporation lawyers, to represent to the best of my ability what I conceive to be the interests of the people of my State and of the United States.

I say again that the Federal judges of the United States, 126 of them—95 district judges and 31 circuit judges—tried this case, and there was no dissenting opinion. Every one of them agreed that their salaries ought to be raised, and they agreed upon the amount. When I practiced law I had the greatest respect for the Federal judiciary, and that respect continued until this present moment. After deciding this case without a dissenting opinion—and no one has heard of any one of these 126 judges who is opposed to this bill—they came here—12 of them—and appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the House in favor of this proposition to increase their own salaries. I say that with a blush of shame. When other individuals come here for a small compensation to represent their own interests in the corridors of this House and in the committee rooms we call them lobbyists, but when 12 judges, representing 126 Federal judges, come here and lobby—argue, I will say—for an increase in their salaries, to what particular class shall we assign them?

They are entitled to have their propositions and their suggestions weighed by the same kind of evidence that we apply to any other interests that come here before this legislative body. They come here insisting that their salaries, which are now $6,000 per year, be increased so that the minimum salary of a district judge shall be $6,500 and the maximum $10,000, and so that the minimum salary of a circuit judge shall be $7,000 and the maximum $11,000. That is their proposition in a nutshell, and that is all there is to it. Let us understand the position they occupy. Each one of them became a party to an implied contract when he vociferously accepted the position to receive $6,000 a year for his services, and for what period of time? For the period of his natural life. They have the right at the age of 70 years, if they so elect, to retire on the same salary of $6,000 a year. That is the implied contract under which they all assumed to discharge the duties of their office. They come here now, 12 of them, representing 126, who make no objections, and deliberately violate that implied contract. Are they asking these increases for those who shall succeed them when their present terms of office expire? No; they are asking these increases for themselves, during the period of the term for which they have solemnly agreed to serve for $6,000; and they say they are asking it in order that they "may be fair and judicial," in order that they may "adequately discharge the duties of their office." They subscribe here to a letter of Judge Hughes, who urges this reason for increasing the salaries:

> If we are to maintain the high standard of the Federal judiciary and suitably to recognize the great importance of the work of the Federal district and circuit courts, it would seem to be an imperative duty that a readjustment should be made of judicial salaries.

Judge Hughes, in that same letter, says:

> The present scale of salaries paid to the Federal judges is not only unjust to them, but is a serious menace to the administration of justice, and it greatly narrows the field of choice in the selection of judges to fill the vacancies.

The judges who unanimously agreed upon this increase in their salaries then, according to this letter which they present here as a reason for it, have been selected from a field which has been "greatly narrowed," because the compensation is not big enough. In other words, they have been selected from a field, according to the argument of Judge Hughes, of lawyers from whom you could not get the best judges. Yet these judges, who admit by presenting this letter here that they have been selected from a field that has been "greatly narrowed," because the salaries are not larger, come here with that admission, but insist that they are capable at least of determining this one question, namely, that their salaries ought to be increased. They ask that their salaries be increased, as stated here in the report, for the reason that to them "people are frequently compelled to trust their lives, their fortunes, and their honor." Let us see what there can be in that kind of an argument. Here are a number of them, all of them at present receiving $6,000 a year. There will be 14 of them who will receive $6,500 a year under the provisions of this bill. Then, according to their argument, in order that the lives and property and honor of the citizens of the United States shall be safe in the hands of these 14, we ought to pay each of them $500 a year more, and if the district is larger than that, if it contains a population of 500,000 more, then the lives and the property and the honor of the citizens who are so unfortunate as to live in that larger district can only be conserved by paying each of the judges in districts as large as that $1,000 a year more than they get now.

So in that sort of arithmetical progression the lives, the property, and the honor of the people of the United States are unsafe as the population of the districts increases, and the way to make them safe is to give these judges $500 more for each 500,000 increase in the population of their districts. The report goes on to say not only that the judges themselves appeared, 12 of them, but that representatives of the judiciary appeared before the committee and approved of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, it was not enough for they themselves to appear, but they appeared here by a representative, and I understand the representative was a former Member of this House and a former Member of the Senate of the United States, one of the great lawyers of the United States. They knew enough about the procedure here to select a most able representative. His fees are so high that, of course, nobody would ever call him a lobbyist when he came here before that committee presenting the argument of these judges.

Five times in the history of the United States the salaries of Federal judges have been increased by legislative action, but every time it was increased not on their initiative but on the initiative of this legislative body.

In 1893, when it was fixed at $6,000, not a representative of the judges appeared before any committee of this House. This House initiated that legislation itself. The judges were modest enough to occupy the position of not asking for that increase. To-day, when every man on the Federal pay roll, and we have nearly one-fourth of the adult population of the United States on the pay roll, is demanding an increase in his salary, the judges come in also and join the general chorus and demand an increase of their salaries. We commenced this business of increasing salaries by increasing our own clerk-hire allowance, and then we tied our hands when all the employees of this Government who are organized came here and demanded that their salaries be increased, and so we proceeded during this war increasing salaries of all employees of this Government who asked that their salaries be increased. But we have pursued the policy of increasing, first, the salaries of those who receive the lowest pay. Now, in the first legislative act that this House undertakes to perform in the opening of the period of reconstruction, we are asked to increase the salaries of 126 judges, who are among the highest paid of all the Federal officials of this Government, and when we have increased the salaries of the highest and when we have increased the salaries of the lowest, we will be compelled to increase every salary in between, and there is no place to stop in these assaults on the Treasury.

The war is over, terms of peace will be signed up in the early spring, and the time has come not to treat the expenditure of $237,500 as an "infinitesimal proposition." We have been juggling with millions and with billions, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] who just preceded me made the startling statement that in this period of reconstruction, when we must commence an effort at retrenchment, that $237,500—that is the amount of the charge on the Treasury if we comply with the wishes of these judges—is an infinitesimal amount. Well, granting that he is right about it, and it is infinitesimal as compared with the amounts we have been appropriating for the protection of this country in time of war, granting he is right about that, and nobody is willing to do that, the principle at stake in the matter, in these earliest days of the reconstruction period, of increasing the compensation of $6,000 a year officials, when prices have already commenced to go down, and when we propose to compel, if we can, still further price reduction, is a dangerous way in which to commence to retrench expenses. I hope this House will have enough courage to refuse this unanimous demand of the district and circuit judges of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of dispute between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], who has just preceded me, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. The sole question is whether the judges on the Federal bench residing, for instance, in the State of New York, are to be receiving one-third of the salary which is being paid to judges doing similar work in the State courts. We have 144 judges in the city of New York. A magistrate on the bench receives between $7,000 and $8,000 a year. We have municipal court justices who try municipal court cases up to $1,000, and they get $8,000 a year. We have a court of special sessions that tries dismeanors, and they are getting $9,000 a year, and we have supreme court judges doing the same work which our United States district court judges are doing, and they are getting $17,500 a year. So in the city we see the spectacle of the United States district court judge trying cases involving millions getting $6,000 a year, or one-third of what is being paid to the same kind of a judge doing the same kind of work across the street.

Mr. DYER. What do the appellate judges of the State of New York get?

Mr. SIEGEL. The appellate judges receive $17,500 in the city of New York, first district. The court of appeals judges are getting approximately $13,500.

Mr. PLATT. The supreme court judges get $17,500 in the second district of New York.

Mr. SIEGEL. Twelve thousand dollars, I thought.

Mr. PLATT. I know they are getting $17,500.

Mr. SIEGEL. In your district?

Mr. PLATT. The $12,000 salary begins above my district.

Mr. WALSH. Do any of these judges hold office for life in New York?

Mr. SIEGEL. Practically for life. We reelect them. They are elected first for 14 years and then elected for 14 years again, and are retired at the age of 70 years on full pay.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has the gentleman instanced the experience of Mr. Justice Dowling in regard to his election?

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Justice Dowling has been elected once and then reelected and is still on the bench. Republicans and Democrats both combine and put the same man back; they repeatedly do the same thing.

Mr. WALSH. But do they not go through a campaign for reelection?

Mr. SIEGEL. They do not because both parties nominate at the same time and get rid of the expense.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman think that justice is any better administered by the paying of a judge $17,500—or in courts where they pay less?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; but I do not believe any judge should be worrying whether he is getting sufficient money in order to keep his family going. It has been testified to before the Judiciary Committee that there are judges who have been borrowing money in order properly to support their families. I think a judge ought to be paid a living wage; that he ought to be paid a sufficient amount on which to live on properly, to uphold his dignity in every possible way, and have a chance to educate his children. I could go to work and call your attention to the testimony of Judge Buffington, presiding judge of the third circuit of appeals in Pennsylvania, who testified he was unable to save anything during the entire period of time, and that he was unable to live properly on his salary which the United States had been paying him. I pointed out before the committee the rise in prices in these 15 years. We have increased the salaries of practically everyone else during the entire time except these judges.

Now, there has been some discussion here as to why it is——

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. EAGLE. I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion on this point: Does not the gentleman think that any family anywhere in America can live decently, respectably, and properly on $6,000 a year? I will state to the gentleman that I would not raise the salary of a Congressman above $7,500 a year simply because if any of us wishes to do so we can live in Washington in perfect comfort and decency on even $6,000 a year.

Mr. SIEGEL. In answer to that, I will say that there is not a judge upon the bench who is not called upon to contribute his share to charity and other relief work throughout the country. If he is on the bench in New York City, I believe there is not a single judge, who is not exactly compelled, but who contributes at least 10 per cent of his salary to various charities in New York City. Why should a Federal judge in any of the large cities of the country be compelled to live in a different fashion than the man on the supreme court bench in that same city or the highest judge in that particular city?

There has been some discussion here in regard to the sliding scale, as it is called. The judges in New York, in the Eastern District or Southern District, receive $6,000 a year at the present time. A judge from New Hampshire or Vermont comes down to preside in New York. He gets only $6,000 a year salary, but he gets $10 a day additional while sitting in New York. And we have the spectacle of seeing a judge coming from New Hampshire or Vermont earning $9,000 a year, or $8,500 a year, while his fellow judge, living in New York City, can only receive $6,000 a year, although he does the greatest portion of the work there.

Mr. LITTLE. Just about what is his hotel bill?

Mr. SIEGEL. He does not have his personal expenses in his own home town to pay while in New York City. He is getting $10 a day while down there.

Mr. WALSH. And he will get that $10 a day if this bill passes, will he not?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not construe it that way.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not construe it at all.

Mr. SIEGEL. I know the work these judges are doing, and I went to see them sufficiently paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to a proper raise in the salary of Federal judges and shall vote for it. On the other hand, I have no hesitation in saying to the Federal judges and their friends that if the measure does not suit me I will not support it. We must learn to consider these things aside from personalities.

I find here in this bill that the Federal judges in a district that has the most people will receive the largest salary. I do not like that provision. I do not see any reason for it or any excuse for it. There is no more ability in a big district than there is in a small one. The judges are constantly changed about, and any judge from a district that drew the minimum might be sent to a district that drew the maximum. If Judge Hughes's ideas just quoted are a deciding argument here, we would then say that the people in the big district who received the judge from the little district would not get the best results, because, according to that theory, in order to get exact justice you will have to pay the biggest salaries, so that you would get the lawyers with the largest incomes. But the lawyers with the big incomes are not the ablest lawyers, but simply the best managers of large interests. All of our great jurists came from the country towns almost without exception. If a judge from Kansas goes to New York City and sits in the court there, there is no reason why he should not receive the same salary as the man in New York City. Just a short time ago a judge in the district in which I live, and whose office is right across the street from mine, was sent to New York City. I never heard any complaint. He is an able jurist and did full justice to the situation so far as I have learned.

He is perfectly competent, too, and his salary should be just the same as that of anybody else, and there is no sense in trying to discriminate between these judges in one district and another. They are all liable to perform the same work, and they may be called in any week to do the same work from Baltimore or San Francisco or New York. There is no justice in attempting to classify them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman realize the fact that a judge can live more cheaply in the city of Baltimore than in any other city?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, I have heard the gentleman's arguments on the floor, and I have not moved over there yet. There are temptations over there, too, that increase the cost of living. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Our markets afford the finest delicacies in the way of food, and there is the best champagne over there in the country, and all that.

Mr. LITTLE. Baltimore's temptations are hard to resist, but the economy necessary on a Congressman's salary requires self-denial. They say $10 a day extra is added when the judges are assigned elsewhere, but that will not pay their hotel and railroad fare. The salary should be the same in every district. No discrimination should be made. There is just as much ability in one district as in another. They all do about the same amount of work. Now, I think I have made myself clear on that, and I hope I may pass on to the next phase of the subject.

It is said we need more judges because some men insist on staying on the bench after they are unfitted by age to perform the duties of the position. When this Constitution was framed it was thought that the men who would hold these lofty positions would have sense and manhood enough to occupy them as long as they were useful, and when they ceased to be useful they would have sense and manhood enough to retire. I think a way should be found to retire them without expense to the people. The gentlemen in charge of this bill say this is the only way to get rid of them under the Constitution.

If that is so, the Constitution ought to be amended, and some more expeditious, fair, and equitable way should be provided to get at these old fellows who insist on holding on to the job. The office of judge is intended to be an honor and not a sinecure. The Constitution should be amended so that the situation could be dealt with in some other way than is proposed in this bill, if this is the only way it can be done under the Constitution. The fact is that the Members of this body and those at the other end of the Capitol are authorized by law to make such inferior courts below the Supreme Court as they see fit. Every judge who sits in a court below the grade of Supreme Court so sits by the permission of this Congress, and if there is any defect in the law at present authorizing these judges we ought to make a new law and remedy the defect. Congress is the creator of every Federal court except the Supreme Court and can repeal every law establishing them. Congress in three days' time could deprive every judge on the Federal bench below the Supreme Court of his seat and pass another law similar to it, so that they could be put back or not. If they have so little self-respect that they can not see that point, this Congress should attend to it. Those judges have no business in the world to perform except to decide rows between people. Our business is to pass the laws of the country.

Until I had practiced law a quarter of a century I supposed that courts were organized to do justice between man and man. They are not. They are made primarily to stop rows between people. Society established tribunals to adjust the differences between men so that their difficulties should not disturb the community. If any fellow can get justice in court, so much the better. Of course, the intention of the law is that a man shall get justice, but every lawyer knows that a good deal of the time they do not. A heavy per cent of the cases appealed are reversed, and that would indicate that the same per cent of the original decisions must be wrong. A large number of cases are decided by divided courts on final appeal, showing that that per cent of appeal judges are wrong that number of times.

The Committee on the Judiciary of this body ought to be able to find a better way than to sit here and tell us that this is the only way—to humor these old chaps who do not respect themselves. I think a statute should be enacted to meet this point, and if not I think we should pass a statute to do away with the present law and get rid of the old timber. Why should we allow it to accumulate from year to year? If the judges find we are inclined to do it they will get off the bench. I think the Committee on the Judiciary of this body ought to be able to suggest something better to us than to spend a lot of money to pay three times for work that will only be done once. If this is not possible, the Constitution should be amended. When you make laws for judges in this country, the judge who does the work in my State, or in any other of the smaller States in point of population, should receive the same salary as the judge in any other State. There is no use in classifying these men because they are classified by the amount of work they do.

One gentleman spoke of the judges in New York, who receive $17,500. On one occasion I dropped in to the court of a friend of mine who was on that bench, and he invited me for an hour or so to take a seat with him on the bench, and while I was there I saw his check brought in, and he told me what his salary was, and I observed it was at the rate of $17,500, including a second check to come later. He was a fine judge, but not one whit better than 20 judges out in Kansas, who were paid only $2,500. I was his friend, and I remember he was an aspirant for a seat on the Federal bench at $6,000, but unsuccessfully. Yet over in New York they elected him to a judgeship at $17,500. He would have preferred the Federal bench at $6,000.

Gentlemen, these things do not go by salaries. They go by ability and the confidence people have in the character of their judgment. You ought not to make a discrimination, except according to character and ability. Do not tell me that because New York is rich it can afford to pay its judges that way. That is no argument for spending the hard-earned money of people who are already taxed to the limit. I would have no objection personally to being a judge at $17,500 if I lived there. But the fact that the salaries of judges over there is $17,500 is no reason for raising the salaries of men who accepted lower salaries than that when they were appointed. There is not a Federal judge in the United States who has to meet the expenses which the average Member of Congress has to meet, away from home half the time, and subject to constant drains in his revenues. You gentlemen who are satisfied with the salaries that you are getting ought to be content with giving Federal judges as much. If you can get along with that, it ought to be enough for a Federal judge. If they can get along on $6,000 a year, they ought to be satisfied with that, or with the salary which you are able to live on. It is preposterous, this idea of running up the salary of a Federal judge to $10,000, when Members of Congress and Senators, who have succeeded Webster and Clay, receive only $7,500.

I am in favor of a reasonable advance. I am in favor of devising some means of making these old chaps, who do nothing, get off the bench, as the Constitution intended them to do. They may not technically violate the law, but they violate its spirit. We should find some way to deal with such conditions appropriately. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I find myself very much in the position that Mark Twain found himself in one day when he went to church. An eminent divine started to speak, and Mark Twain was quite captivated with his opening remarks. He put his hand in his pocket and took therefrom a $2 bill and had it ready for the time when the collection basket was to be passed. The preacher kept on. Mark listened and put back the $2 bill into his pocket and took out a $1 bill. The preacher kept on talking. He returned the dollar bill and took out half a dollar. Still the preacher kept talking. Mark's enthusiasm was decreasing, and finally he got down to the point where he put the last quarter in his pocket. He then waited a long time for the preacher to finish and finally when the contribution basket was passed Mark reached out his hand and took $2 out of the basket, because he thought he was entitled to that for listening. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. Not now. As the gentleman's argument advanced I wondered at the revolutionary procedure that was recommended, and the cure-alls that were proposed and the great dearth of constructive suggestions. I wondered also if this committee had not been given their advantage. Of course, if it has not it is regrettable, and it should charge itself hereafter to see that it obtains such suggestions which may or may not be vital.

Gentlemen, I approach the consideration of this measure not from a political or partisan standpoint. It has been demonstrated by the gentlemen who have spoken that it is neither one nor the other, for we have found learned and distinguished Members on both sides of the aisle taking opposite views. While that is true, I am not so sure but that it is regarded in a parochial and provincial sense. I do not use the word "sectional," for that is not right and should not be used, but I do think it is tinctured and tainted with provincialism and parochialism, and with a selfish interest by some men. I have heard men here proclaim their experience at the bar, some who have been allied to corporate interests, some who were for corporations, and the people, and some who had given up the practice of the law with both. I chance to have the opportunity of being a member of the bar in two States. My practice has never been with corporations. It has generally been for the widow and orphan in surrogate matters. I have heard men in this House say that those who are declaring for this bill are lawyers who appear before Federal judges. I am free from the professional charge, from the partisan, parochial, and also from the provincial aspect of it, for the reason that I have above stated. But, gentlemen, it seems to me that it is a question of common sense. A $6,000 man is a cheap man on the United States bench. There is no question about that. I do not care whether he is a married man, with a prolific family, or whether he has an aged mother to support, or is a bachelor. He is a cheap man, and it is a cheap Government that insists that $6,000 a year is a proper compensation. No one will claim seriously that it is not so.

It has been laid down here that the graduation of salaries is based on population. That is true, but it is not alone on that basis. Correlated with the fact is the further fact, which is undeniable, that where the population is, there is where the business is. Where population and business are, there is where the laborer, the doctor, the preacher, and the mechanic are paid more than in smaller communities. Is not that so? It is undeniable.

You talk about the judge who comes from the far west to go to New York, designated to sit there during a term of court. I tell you, my friends, let him go to the Waldorf, to the Astor, to the Biltmore, or to any of the hotels of that city that befit his station as a United States judge; let him see if he can live on the $10 per diem allowed him under the present law while he is staying there. Why, it would hardly pay his tipping money. Gentlemen, here is the whole question, whether the present salary is a reasonable compensation or whether it is a cheap rate.

The opponents of the bill will say, "Well, now, here is the situation: This is a question of honor; this is a position which ought to be filled by an elderly man, a mature man, who has made his money. It is a dignified position." I tell you, gentlemen, if you appoint that class of men, if a man of that kind is put on the Federal bench, he does not work, he is lazy, and the result is that the people will not get justice. We have been told that the people do not get justice in those courts and that the province of the courts is to stop rows. I beg to differ. The province of the court is to interpret the law. These courts touch civilization itself in the administration of life, liberty, and property. Rows! Why, you would think these men were naught except magistrates or justices of the peace. Gentlemen, it is wrong, it is not fair, and we should see to it that these men who are, as has been so excellently explained here, specially trained and qualified men, should receive this advance in salary. Think of a man spending four years in his academic course, and four years more in law school, and then having enough experience in his work as a lawyer to fit him for a position of this kind, going on the bench for $6,000 a year.

It is said that these salaries are lifted up in bulk. That is not true. They are graduated. There are but four circuit judges who are entitled to $11,000 under the new régime. When you say, "set this measure of compensation by population," you are doing nothing but what, as has been said here, is a return to the practice as it was up to 1891. From 1903 the flat rate has been given. Has the compensation according to population been the rule in the States? Yes. Take the city and county of New York, where the supreme court judges receive $17,500, because it is a congested, busy, thriving place. Those judges work day and night. So it is with the Federal judges. Now, in the county courts outside the city of New York you find that the judges get $3,000, or a little over that. How is it regulated? In accordance with the population, because where the population is, that is where the business and the work is. Take the surrogate of the county of New York. He gets $15,000. There are two of them. What do the county surrogates throughout the State get? They average about $3,000.

You, gentlemen, who are broad, generous, big, and fair, dispel your parochial and provincial ideas, forget your man who is now on the bench, who may not be benefited by this legislation, forget whether he is blind or halting. The question is, Is $6,000 enough for a district judge, and is $7,000 enough for a circuit judge? I plead not guilty, and hope you, the jury, will bring in a verdict to pass the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not think I shall use the amount of time that has been allotted to me, as the matter I want to present now is simply preliminary, and I may hereafter want to develop it somewhat under the five-minute rule.

So far as the first part of the bill is concerned, that part where it seeks to increase the salaries, so far as I am personally concerned, I can see no objection to it, and if an opportunity is given me to vote on that part of the bill, without having the latter part of it attached, I shall vote for it.

However, so far as the latter part of the bill is concerned, that additional matter that has been incorporated, I do not agree with it in substance nor in spirit. I think the intent of the Constitution was that men when they are appointed to these responsible positions should continue during life or good behavior. I believe that the attempt to impose conditions or terms upon their service by a bill of this kind is in contravention to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. What would you do with the judge that had become insane?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. GORDON. You would not let him try your case, would you?

Mr. DENISON. The thing to do is for Congress to pass a law authorizing the President to appoint another judge in that district.

Mr. GORDON. That is just what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. DENISON. No; it does not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will answer in my own way. I am not talking about what I would or might do if it were I, but I am talking about what we can do and what the Constitution provides we shall do. That is the issue. I think no man in the House has adhered more closely to the constitutional provisions than the gentleman from Ohio, and I think he will agree with me that if it is in contravention to the spirit of the Constitution to do this, the gentleman would oppose this kind of a law.

Now, look at it. This is the thought I want you to bear in mind, and if I can find any authority on it I propose to do so and present it hereafter.

This is the provision of the Constitution which I am calling attention to:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

The query is this—and I would like to have everybody answer it in their own minds—the Constitution says they "shall hold their offices." What does that mean? Does not the right to hold an office include also in it the right to exercise the duties of the office? Can you conceive of a person being elected to an office or appointed to an office and then by act of the legislature being shorn of the right to exercise the duties of that office? So long as the judge holds the office, does he not have the right to exercise the duties of it? If that be true, does not this act contravene the Constitution when it says that he can be shorn of the right to perform the duties of his office?

The act says the President shall, when he finds some judge is unable to perform his duties, appoint another man who shall be the senior judge and shall tell him what he can do and what he can not do. In other words, the senior judge who is appointed by the President displaces the other judge and absolutely renders it impossible for that other judge to perform the duties of the position to which he was appointed.

The query is whether it is the constitutional prerogative of this body to thus take from the judge who has been regularly appointed to hold his office under the Constitution the right to perform his functions. I doubt the constitutionality of this act, gentlemen, and while I am not prepared to say as a lawyer that it is unconstitutional, I want to put it up to you for you to consider whether we can do, in this indirect way, what the Constitution says we can not do. If I can get time hereafter, and I can find anything on the subject, I want to develop it under the five-minute rule. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back four minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I shall favor this bill. The salaries that at present are paid the Federal judges are altogether inadequate, in my opinion. Oh, I have heard Members say you can get splendid legal talent for $6,000 a year to sit on the Federal bench and try the causes that come up there. No doubt you can. You can get a great many men out of every district that has a Representative in this House who would be willing to come here as a Member of Congress for a great deal less than the salaries that are paid to the Members of this House. That is no argument. Pay higher salaries so as to attract the very best men in the legal profession. Then we will be doing our country a real service.

And then this question of the population has been discussed here. Everybody knows that where the population increases the work of the judges increases. Before the Federal courts of this country are tried causes involving millions of dollars. The judge sitting on the bench, hearing the testimony, listens to the lawyer, who is probably paid as high as $100,000 by way of fees. He decides honestly and fearlessly, but he must frequently feel how poor and incommensurate is his own salary compared with the princely fee of the attorney representing a private corporation. I want to say in passing, that in all the history of this Republic we have had a remarkably honest and fearless and learned class of men upon the Federal bench of the country. We must pay salaries to attract the best men to these places. No man with the great prizes in civil practice dangling before him wants to give up the opportunity for amassing a competency in private practice for the mere sake of sitting on the bench at $6,000 a year. Many men, as they grow older, would cheerfully accept judicial appointments if the Government would make it worth while by paying its judges proper salaries. When you think of the many lawyers who have become presidents of corporations that pay more to such presidents for one month's salary than a Federal judge earns in a whole year one can realize the need for bettering the conditions in this country. I maintain that it is the duty of the Representatives of the Government to see to it that adequate compensation is paid to the judges of this country. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] referred to the fact that the House has no voice in the matter of the appointment of judges. The House has no voice in the appointment of practically any appointive officer of the Government, and yet the country has gotten along pretty well nevertheless. Of course, the Senate has to ratify and confirm the appointees provided for in this bill. It seems to me that the time has come when the country, with its great wealth, its great resources, can afford to do justice to the men who occupy the Federal bench. I know that many of these men find it difficult to scrape along on their salaries, especially those of them who live in the larger communities of the country, where the cost of living is high and their expenses are great. I hope the bill will pass without much opposition. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and as usual he stands for taking the lid off and letting the salaries go to the top. You have increased the salaries of every employee of the Government, all on the proposition that we were in a war. Thank God the war has ended, and you can not bring that old excuse up here any more. We now are confronting a period of reconstruction. Where is it that the judges in this country are not receiving salary enough? A vacancy was just created in Mississippi, where my good old friend, Judge Niles, departed this life, and a great drove of the best lawyers in the State were importuning Members of the House and the Senate to have them appointed in his place—and they were not cheap-screw lawyers; they were lawyers who stand at the top of the bar, and could do so in New York City or anywhere else in this great Nation. Six thousand dollars a year for life, responsible to nobody, with a man to black his shoes, with a fellow to do everything he wants done, with the appointment of the clerk of the court, and, more than that, with a splendid stenographer, just like a Member of Congress has, is not to be sneezed at. A judge ought to be well paid; but it strikes me that $6,000 a year for life, with the right to retire from the bench when he is 70 years old and to go on as long as he lives receiving that pay, is fairly good pay. If the gentleman from California would think about it, somebody ought to notice the man who is paying the taxes, the farmer and laborer, who is grubbing around in the ground making the produce to feed the world. He is the man who is paying the taxes for all these high salaries. Is he here crying that the Federal judges should have more pay—and they are autocratic enough now, by the way. If there is one autocrat on this earth who surpasses the average city hotel clerk in this era of high cost of living, it is the Federal judge. I do not propose to vote to increase his salary and make him any more autocratic than he is to-day.

It seems to me, when you stop to think about it, that the taxpayer of this country should be considered. Already through necessary taxation, much, of course, incident to war expenditure, you have levied on the people of this country about $35,000,000,000. Over in the other end of the Capitol we have a squabble over a tax bill because we are drawing the little sum of $5,900,000,000 out of the people, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] not being satisfied with that, says, "Let us make it six billion by increasing the salaries of the Federal judges of the country." I heard a great howl some time ago about increasing the salary of the letter carriers in order to get the mail carried. I never heard of anybody resigning, and it is now proposed not only to increase the lifetime salary of the judges, but to make them bigger autocrats than they have ever been—a man responsible to nobody except the Congress of the United States, which could impeach him if he is guilty of crimes and misdemeanors. It is very seldom that you ever hear of one committing crimes enough to be impeached. Thank God, most of the judges of this country are honest. I want to reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] by saying that you do not have to go to a low-salaried man to get somebody who is dishonest. You can find a man who is dishonest who is drawing $100,000 a year just as well as you can the poor man who is getting $500 a year. Salary has nothing to do with it. That has nothing to do with a man being honest. Does the gentleman from California mean to imply that because a man gets $6,000 a year he might be susceptible to taking outside fees or being corrupted? I resent that as an imputation upon the integrity of the honest lawyers of this country who are capable of being put upon the bench, either circuit or district or Supreme Court. All of the judges, as a rule, are honest men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, what I do not know about courts and judges would fill very many very large volumes.

In my entire life, having now covered a very considerable span, I have been in a court room but a few hours all told. That is perhaps not a reason for congratulation, and I have no doubt that I have missed a great deal by not having had the benefit of attending sessions of courts. In a way, therefore, I am not informed on some of the questions involved in the matter now before us. I think that perhaps we all will agree that the salaries of Federal judges should be increased, the general cost of living in the country having so greatly increased since their present salaries were fixed. In addition to that, and quite as important a consideration, is the fact that the average income of attorneys in the country, so I am told, has very largely increased in the last few years. That is a matter that must be considered in connection with the fixing of the salary of judges, because if we are to secure good and competent men for those positions they must have a salary that bears at least some remote relation to the sum which they could earn as an attorney. Of course, we realize that any salary we may fix will be much below the income of the average prosperous attorney, particularly in the large cities. So I think we can all agree there should be an increase in the salaries of the Federal judges in order to give them an opportunity to live decently and to remove, to at least a reasonable extent, temptation from their pathway. But I am not, however, in favor of this bill, because, in my opinion, the basis on which it is contemplated that salaries shall be fixed is not an equitable one.

I do not believe that the services of a judge are properly measured by the population of the district. In some cases where there are two or three or four judges in a district each judge, taking the population as the basis, may dispose of business arising from a smaller population than a judge sitting alone in a district of less population. In a case like that the basis of population as fixed in this bill is not only inequitable but is absolutely ridiculous. If the committee is going on the theory that the business of the court is determined by the population, if that is a proper basis, then in all cases where there are two or three or four district judges the salary ought to be based on a division of the population of the district by the number of judges in the district. Unless you do that, then population is without merit as a basis on which to fix salaries. Furthermore, it does not follow and it is not a fact that a large population necessarily originates or develops a larger or more important volume of Federal business than a lesser population. Population is sparse in the country in which I live, but one district judge presides over the Federal business of an entire State, and while the population is sparse we have important water rights and mineral questions, we have land questions, we have Indian questions, which never occur or arise in the districts having the largest population. I have no doubt but what the district judge of the District of Wyoming, taking that district as an example, has just as important a jurisdiction and as many and important cases as the average district judge in the districts of large population. The argument is made, so I understand, that the difference in pay for large centers of population, as compared with the sparsely settled regions, should be provided on the theory that it costs more to live in the large city than it does to live in a smaller community. That does not necessarily follow. The gentleman from New York, in discussing the matter a moment ago, called to our attention the present rates at the Biltmore and the Waldorf. Well, I do not assume that it is necessary for a United States judge to hunt up the most expensive hostlery in the community and insist on having the bridal suite for his accommodation. I am of the opinion that a district judge can live in New York City and maintain a proper station there quite as cheaply as he could in the capital of my State. A district judge in New York is not such a conspicuous personage compared with his neighbors and fellow citizens——

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. A district judge in the capital of one of the Middle or Western States is one of the great men of the community, next to the governor, perhaps the best-known man in the community, and unlike the governor, who comes and goes, he is there for a lifetime, looked up to as one of the leaders of the community. He is expected to contribute to every good work and effort of the community. He is expected to maintain a mode of life in keeping with the dignity of the great office that he fills, and, in my opinion, it may cost him just as much to live decently and properly as it costs a judge to live in New York City.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And we of the West and of the rural districts are getting a little bit tired of the airs which gentlemen from metropolitan districts take to themselves when they talk of the necessity of large salaries in their communities. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. WALSH. I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman would expect the judges in New York to live in accordance with the community there in the same respect judges in his district would live?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not think the judges in New York are called upon to ape the airs of the multimillionaires——

Mr. CALDWELL. Has the gentleman ever lived in New York, and does he know about the expense?

Mr. MONDELL. The nouveau-riche, multimillionaires, of our country congregate in New York and blow their money and put on airs and live in extravagance, but that is no reason why a district judge should attempt to ape their manner of living—I am speaking of a district judge or a circuit judge who desires to live decently and in keeping with the dignity of his high office. He, in my opinion, can live nearly as cheaply in New York, unless he tries to ape the very rich folks, as a judge in the capital or larger cities of one of the Central or Western States.

The Federal judges, if they perform the duties of their office, give all of their time and all of their energy and all of their talents to the work of the office, and while I do not insist that a flat rate is the most equitable, yet I do insist that a rate based on population as provided in this bill is not only inequitable but is ridiculous, for it does not take into consideration the fact where there are large populations there are from two to four judges, and if you were to divide these larger populations by the number of judges you would not have more people per judge to furnish business than in one of the large districts having a single judge. We should increase the salaries of the Federal judges, but we should do it on a more equitable plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the orators who have gone thoroughly over this matter have explained the general meaning and general thought of it, but as a transportation man in and around the city of New York I have had frequent occasions to be present in the court room for days at a time listening to cases being tried by the United States judges; and I know that it is an ordinary thing for people in New York to wonder why these able men, who are sitting on that bench continuously, and busy from morning until night, get less than half the pay of the State supreme court judges.

I have been interested in all forms of transportation. I have run steamboat lines to Albany, the city from which the gentleman there comes, and to Poughkeepsie, and around the harbor, and I know that in the congested marine districts of New York, on the Sound, the rivers, and the harbors, there is so much damage done continually by collisions and otherwise that it takes a year or two years to get a case on the calendar to be tried by one of these district judges. Judge Thomas and Judge Hough and a number of others that I could mention are busy every day, from morning to night, with an accumulation of cases. And they have to possess a peculiar ability. I am not a lawyer and make no pretense to legal knowledge, but I do know that the ordinary cases in the supreme court are governed by statute law. Now, how about the district and circuit judge in trying maritime cases and admiralty cases? There is some law regarding them, of course, but there is the precedent that the judge makes. And there you are. A judge in that court should have sufficient ability to make a precedent that is so clear, that is so fair, that it will form a part of the law in the future. And the lawyers in these courts are frequently heard to say, "It is what Judge So-and-So decided in a similar case." So the judges have to be men of great ability. You can not put an ordinary man in that position, where they have so many cases, and large cases at that, and have him do justice to everybody.

Speaking of the cases in New York, for example, the New York Central Railway have, I think, several hundred tugs and barges; the Pennsylvania Railroad the same; the Cornell Steamboat Co., that runs up the Hudson, at one time, I know, had 58 tugs. There are hundreds of barges and tugs running in every direction, and there follow hundreds of cases in the courts waiting a year or two to be tried.

Now, as I said in the beginning, the thought has always been among fair-minded men—and I have often heard it mentioned in Judge Thomas's case—"Why is this man sitting on the bench, with all the knowledge he is supposed to have and the continuous work that he has to perform for $6,000 a year, when some other man, who has had little or no experience, is getting $17,500?"

That is the way it strikes us as business men.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEARY. I will.

Mr. SIEGEL. And that is why Judge Thomas left the district court bench and went to the supreme court.

Mr. CLEARY. I was going to mention that. He did that, and the United States court bench lost one of the greatest judges it ever had when it lost Judge Thomas for that very reason. So it is difficult to keep on the bench a man of great ability, a man of great experience, who has served his time in these capacities from year to year, unless he is properly paid.

Now, in regard to this talk of the people and the taxes, it is all very nice, and it would be true if the practice were abused. But when you hire men for special purposes because of their great talent, their great ability, their great experience, their great integrity you can not hire them for small pay, and you should not try to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, unlike the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I think I spent most of my time in the 13 or 14 years before I came to Congress in the courthouse, trying cases before both Federal and State judges, and there is no subject in which I feel a greater interest than in the judiciary of the country.

Now, the trouble about this bill in its last analysis is that we are attempting to do by it two or three things that it is impossible for us to do. In the first place, we are attempting to arrange a salary for the Federal judges that will be fair and just to them all, and we can not do that in a country of this kind, because what is a fair and just salary for a judge in New York City would perhaps be excessive for a judge out in some of the Western States, because all of the conditions of living are entirely different and the class of litigation is different. Not only the standard of living and the amount of litigation, but the customary salaries paid to other judges is different in different parts of the country.

The gentlemen from New York have all spoken about the high salaries their State judges are receiving. Of course, we are legislating here for the judges all over the country. We can not pass a law that will increase the salary of the judges of New York alone or give them one salary and the judges in another part of the country a different salary. So that is the difficulty. We have to provide uniformly for the judges all over the country, and there is bound to be an inequality in the situation.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do you not realize that this bill does exactly that thing?

Mr. DENISON. I do not realize that, and it does not do it.

Mr. CALDWELL. It tries to do it.

Mr. DENISON. It may try to do it. But the plan provided in the bill is not an equitable one, but will be inequitable, especially in districts that have more than one judge.

Now, I think that, generally speaking, gentlemen, the salaries of the Federal judges are not adequate, and if you can separate this bill in some way so that we can vote on the increase of salary alone, I may consent to vote for that proposition. I am opposed to the bill in its present form, because of its double aspect. We have had this proposition of forcibly retiring judges up in Congress two or three times before, and the Congress at one time disapproved it, and another time it failed to become the law because of an amendment attached to it. But I do not believe we ought to link the two propositions of increasing salaries and forcibly retiring judges together in order to secure the passage of a measure that, generally speaking, has not met the approval of the Congress. I think they ought to be separated, and if we can separate these propositions I would be willing to vote, I think, for the increase of salary, although I do not think that the increase upon the basis of population is entirely fair or equitable, as has been stated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Now, upon this other proposition I think this bill amounts to a forcible retirement of Federal judges, which under the Constitution you can not do directly, and I will explain what I mean. If the President says to the country that a judge is mentally incompetent or is physically incompetent to perform the duties of his office, and if the Senate also says so by confirming the President's appointment of his successor, it would, of course, be a humiliation of that judge and amount to an adjudication that he is incompetent mentally or physically. And does anyone suppose that that judge can go ahead then and continue to serve and perform his duties in the United States court? Of course, he could not do so. So we are attempting by this bill to do in an indirect way what we can not do directly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Has the gentleman any objection to retiring a judge who has proven to be physically or mentally unable to administer his court as a judge and to deal out justice between litigants?

Mr. DENISON. Have I any objection to do what with him?

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman think more of the judge than he does of the people?

Mr. DENISON. No; I do not think more of the judge than I do of the people. But I still have some respect for the plain provision of the Constitution, which provides for the retirement of Federal judges only when they have been guilty of misbehavior, and then they have a right to be heard. If, in any specific case, a judge has become clearly incompetent to perform the duties of his office and it is a matter of such common knowledge that Congress could afford to act, then, of course, we can meet the situation, as we have met the situation heretofore, by an act of Congress providing an additional judge for that district, passed like other legislation after full public hearings and investigations by the House and the Senate. Congress has a clear constitutional right to provide additional judges for any district whenever the necessity may arise from any cause.

Mr. GORDON. Would not that mean an indictment of him worse than a general law?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all, because it would only be done in such a clear case that the country would accept it as proper. I do not believe that the Congress can properly, or should, delegate any of its constitutional power of creating additional judges to the President or to anyone else. The judiciary should never be under any kind of influence or restraint of the executive department of the Government. If the public interests require the creation of another judge because of the alleged mental or physical disqualification of an acting judge, it should be done by Congress itself after full public investigation, in which the judge whose disqualification is alleged ought to have a right to be heard. I do not think we should attempt, as this bill does, to circumvent a plain provision of the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, what is the amount of time, may I ask, that has been used by the respective sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARD. How much has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 34 minutes.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want to use some more time?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I am heartily in favor of that portion of this bill which relates to the increase of salaries to the Federal judiciary. I think they have been underpaid, and I think that their remuneration should be increased. However, I would rather see it a level raise, a uniform salary throughout the several jurisdictions of the United States.

But I am not in sympathy with the latter portions of the bill. I do not believe that that provision tending to coerce resignations is in harmony with the independence of the judiciary which the Constitution of the United States contemplates. I do not believe that we should inject into the judiciary act of the United States any element of indirectness. I believe that whatever we do with respect to those great courts should be done directly and aboveboard. I do not believe that the men who preside over these great courts should sit in fear of any man or men. I therefore am not in sympathy with the proposed law which says that even the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate, may coerce a vacation of their positions. And that is what it amounts to. A man who has passed the age of threescore years and ten and has served 10 years upon the Federal bench stands at all times in danger of having the Executive challenge his mental capacity, try him, and convict him, without any opportunity on his part to be heard. No procedure is provided; no opportunity is given for defense.

When the President finds the fact, then he may nominate another man for that district. And the President and the Senate can do more than appoint. They can create another judgeship—something that has never been done except by legislation, the House concurring in that act. It could be done in the future, as in the past, by a law, a special law, pertaining to each district. If a case arises that necessitates action of this kind, I do not believe it will militate against the situation by giving the House permission to vote with the Senate in creating the new judgeship, because it is the creation of a new judgeship.

So much for that. I want to take advantage of the few minutes I have, however, to call attention to one of the objections to this bill. It seems to me that the able Committee on the Judiciary has been somewhat in a hurry and has become somewhat entangled in one section of this bill. Section 260 of the Judicial Code relates to all judges of the courts of the United States appointed and holding office during good behavior. It embraces every court of the United States, not merely circuit and district courts. Now, in attempting to amend this section—unwittingly, no doubt—the committee has brought in and entangled a provision which in its very nature pertains only to judges of the district and circuit courts, and then provides that the senior circuit judge of the circuit may assign these judges to such other duties within the circuit as the judges may be willing to perform.

Now, here we have a section covering the Court of Claims, for instance, and covering all of the judges of the Court of Claims, all the judges of the Court of Customs Claims, and every other court of the United States, seated here in the District of Columbia, not within the limits of any circuit, not within the limits of any district; and yet we are having this secton say that the circuit judge within the circuit shall assign a judge to his duties in the district or in the circuit when there is not any circuit or any district.

You should amend that section and make the amendment apply only to circuit and district judges, or else you should strike out the latter part of the section entirely. For instance, it provides for the resignation and retirement of the judges of the Court of Claims in a connection which makes resignation and retirement identical; because if they retire and their successor is appointed they can not, as the district or circuit judge could, ever perform any other function. They can not be assigned to any other territory within the circuit, because there is no circuit.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Under the retirement law as it is now judges of the Court of Claims can not be retired. They can resign under the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. And the language of the second clause here, the personal retirement feature, is identical with the law as it now is, and simply extends it.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. But the language permits the judge of the Court of Claims to retire and not resign.

Mr. STEELE. Which clause does the gentleman refer to now?

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. I am referring to that part of section 3 added to the existing law. Instead of resigning, any judge other than the judges of the Supreme Court, which include the judge of the Court of Claims may retire.

Mr. STEELE. The law includes judges of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Yes, resigning; but you are permitting here the judge of the Court of Claims to retire under a condition that would be utterly meaningless.

Mr. STEELE. I do not understand what the gentleman means when he says it is meaningless.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Because to retire, under that section, is identical with resignation to a judge of the Court of Claims; he can not be called upon by the senior judge of the circuit, as you provide in the latter part of your amendment.

Mr. STEELE. But on line 23 the gentleman will notice that there is a qualification, where it says:

> But, instead of resigning, any judge, other than a justice of the Supreme Court, who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provisions, may retire.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Yes; and a judge of the Court of Claims is qualified to resign.

Mr. STEELE. Exactly. We are not changing the law in that respect.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. But you provide for his retirement, which in his case amounts to resignation, which is already provided for in existing law.

Mr. STEELE. When he reaches the age of 70, as the law now is, if he has been 10 years on the bench, he can resign.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. What does that mean?

Mr. STEELE. That means that he will receive his salary and perform no work whatever. Now, under this provision in the bill, when he reaches the age of 70 and has been 10 years in service, instead of resigning he can retire, and can still be called upon to perform judicial work while he receives that compensation from the Government. It is a change in favor of the Government, because the Government then receives his services so far as he can perform services, while now when he resigns he does nothing.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. Under what conditions could a judge of the Court of Claims, after he had retired, perform any other judicial function?

Mr. STEELE. Under the retirement law as it is now he could resign when he reaches the age of 70, and then all his judicial functions would cease. He would have nothing whatever to do. The Government would receive no services in return for the salary it would continue to pay him as a retired judge.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. I understand that.

Mr. STEELE. Now, he has got to have the same qualifications to retire under this provision here as he has to resign, but the additional fact remains that the Government will receive the value of whatever services he may render in return for the payment of that salary.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. What service can a judge of the Court of Claims render after he has retired?

Mr. STEELE. He does not resign.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. I know, but when can he be called on to act?

Mr. STEELE. Under the provisions of this bill he is called on to act when he is assigned by the chief justice of the court to do a certain work which he can perform. It is a valuable addition for the benefit of the Government.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. When a judge is called by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States to perform judicial duties in any other circuit, that pertains only to the circuit judges. You can not assign a judge of the Court of Claims to go out into a circuit or district court.

Mr. STEELE. But he may be ordered by the chief justice of his own court.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. That pertains only to district judges.

Mr. STEELE. There is a chief justice of the Court of Claims, and he can call on him.

Mr. SCOTT of Iowa. The chief justice of the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction and is not referred to in this bill. [Applause.] The bill provides for the chief justice assigning the retired judge to duties "in any other circuit." That must therefore mean the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of increasing the salaries of these judges. This bill is a good one so far as that feature of it is concerned.

I am not able to agree with my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the salaries of judges in the more sparsely settled portions of the country should be as large as the salaries of the judges, for instance, in New York, Boston, and other large centers. Anyone who will investigate the question will find that in the large centers the opportunity to earn large fees in the practice of law has been such that it has been absolutely necessary to make the salaries of the judges much larger than they are in the less sparsely settled communities. That is necessary in order to get the better men. The best men are none too good to serve upon the Federal bench. The bill has been drawn to meet that situation, and I do not think it is necessary for me to defend that policy, because I feel sure that the membership of this House recognizes it is a proper one. The increases are small in the more sparsely settled regions. I am satisfied that the public generally will approve of the increases; they are not at all extravagant. There has been a general trend upward, making it more and more expensive to live, and at the same time making more and more attractive the professional pay of attorneys, consequently requiring an increase such as that which has been provided for in the bill.

I want to touch upon one other feature of the bill, the one that appears to cause most of the opposition. It seems to me quite unobjectionable in the form in which it has finally been written in the bill.

The provision in question was offered as a substitute for another provision that I considered very objectionable. Personally I would rather that this provision had not been in the bill, but when you come to examine it it seems to me it will serve a useful purpose. During the years past it has been very difficult to get rid of men unable to do the work but who were unwilling to resign and who continued on the bench, obstructing and interfering with the administration of justice. Now, it is true that Congress has had the power to provide other judges in such cases, but it is a slow process sometimes, politics occasionally interferes, so that men who ought to be replaced by able and capable men have continued in their positions, in some cases for several years, and thus practically denying justice to the people. Under this provision the President—and I presume in practical application the Attorney General—would investigate to determine whether a man was able to carry on the business as a judge of a district or circuit.

He would obtain his information from lawyers, clients, clerks of the court, and others, and then certify the facts to the President. If the President became satisfied that the business was obstructed by reason of the physical or mental inability of the judge to do the work, an additional judge would be appointed. It seems to me that the President would be in a position to determine whether a new judge ought to be appointed just as well as the Congress could. This bill provides that instead of removing the judge the President shall appoint an additional judge, who shall perform the duties that the old judge is incapable of performing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman an additional five minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He will then appoint an additional judge, but the old judge, if capable of doing any part of the work, is still to stay on the bench and is not to be removed.

I do not believe the President would dare to abuse his power under this proposed act; if he did, his action would be open to scrutiny in the Senate, as that body would have to confirm the appointment. I do not think there is anything in the contention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] that it would be a threat against the judges. It simply gives power to relieve him of part of his duties by the appointment of an additional judge. He would still be a judge; he would still draw the same salary; he would still retain in the community the same position of prominence and honor and the same power he had before. Personally I think the bill ought to pass, and I intend to vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer and perhaps ought not to speak on this bill; but, unlike the gentleman from Wyoming, I have spent much time in court listening to arguments and testimony, mostly as a newspaper reporter, but sometimes as an interested spectator and interested in legal arguments.

It seems to me, and I think it is undeniable to anybody who has studied the subject and made comparisons of salaries in this country and other countries, that the Federal salaries, from the President down, are too low. We have lately seen a member of the President's Cabinet, the Secretary of the Treasury, retire with the statement that he needed to recuperate his private fortune. He has received a salary of $12,000. Unquestionably he can go to New York and enter into law practice and make $100,000 a year with no difficulty at all. Cabinet ministers receive considerably larger salaries in England than in the United States, and so do most of the judges.

I think it unquestionably true that the Federal salaries are too low, and that we might well raise them all somewhat. The Federal judges receive the lowest of the salaries paid the high officials, and I believe it is true, as I have heard one of my colleagues recently say, that most of the Federal judges in New York City would resign and take State court nominations if such nominations were within their reach. One Federal judge in New York City has recently done so in fact. Not only that, but some would resign and take the position of judge of a county court. The county judge of Westchester County receives $12,000 and the surrogate, or probate judge, receives $10,000. The county judge of Erie County receives $6,000. In Albany County the county judge receives $7,500 and the surrogate the same salary, each of them $1,500 more than the Federal judge in the same place. In the smaller rural counties, the hayseed counties, as the New York newspapers call them, we pay our county judges $3,000 or $3,500, and they are allowed to practice law in the supreme court, so that they often make $7,000 or $8,000 a year. The surrogates, or probate judges, in many counties receive salaries ranging from $2,500 to $3,500 and are allowed to practice law in the supreme court, and undoubtedly frequently make more than the salary of a Federal judge.

Now, it seems to me, it is a peculiar and somewhat humiliating condition when you pay the Federal judges less than the amounts that are paid to the county judges. Furthermore, so far as my acquaintance with Federal judges goes, and it is not large, though I have had the privilege of recommending a number of good men as candidates for Federal judgeships, the candidates are mostly middle-aged men of considerable means. I think you will find in New York and the larger cities that the list of candidates from whom the President has to choose is narrowed down perhaps not exclusively to rich men, but to men pretty well to do. Poor men—men dependent wholly on their salaries—do become candidates, but sometimes they are poor in more senses than one. Generally speaking, we do manage to get good Federal judges, for the life tenure has its attractions; but the field to select from is not as large as it should be. Many good men do not consider the office worth the seeking. Paying a small salary is like paying no salary at all, as they did until recently in the English House of Commons, expecting only rich men to become candidates. Some argue that we ought not to pay salaries to the Members of the House of Representatives, but should elect men successful in life and who have enough money to live on. But in a democracy or a republic that sort of argument hardly goes. We do not think it right to exclude the poor man. We think we ought to pay a sufficient salary for a man to maintain himself in circumstances becoming his position. In New York and in cities like Philadelphia and Chicago a Federal judge can not do that on his salary. He can live comfortably enough, perhaps, in a 15-foot house or maybe a 25-foot house on some side street, but I presume that half his salary would go to the payment of rent if he should take a 25-foot house in a neighborhood near people who would naturally be his friends and associates. They get good men, to be sure, generally speaking, but it looks to me like a very narrow policy on the part of the country to limit the Federal judges to this small salary. Most of the bill is good and I hope it will pass, but I subscribe to a good deal of the criticism that has been made in respect to the latter part of the bill—the retirement feature—by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and others.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any subject pending before Congress which has received so much attention as the one with which the present bill deals. I remember that four or five sessions ago a movement was on foot to increase the pay of the Federal judges, and I am sure the matter has been brought with more or less frequency to the attention of Members ever since. Can there be any question in the mind of anyone laying claim to common sense that the salaries of the district and circuit Federal judges should be increased? Let me compare those salaries with the salaries of the judiciary in a State not very large, my own State of New Jersey. The supreme court justice there gets $12,000 a year, but a supreme court justice deals only with matters of law. A vice chancellor gets $12,000 there, but he deals only with questions of equity. A Federal district court judge has an equally great volume of business to dispose of, consisting not of law cases only, but of equity cases also, and he receives $6,000 a year. By any simple process of arithmetic, taking into consideration the amount of work with which he deals, he ought to get $24,000 a year, and besides that the district court judge has to do with classes of litigation which can not be brought under the jurisdiction of the State courts, such as, for instance, with patent cases, with admiralty cases, and with a very great deal of cases arising out of many Federal statutes which we have passed in the last decade, thus putting upon the shoulders of the district and circuit judges an increasing amount of litigation to be disposed of.

Some objection has been made to the fact that the salaries under this bill are graduated. This is not a new principle in the payment of Federal officers, and it is actually being observed at the present time with other officers of the Federal courts. The salaries of Federal district attorneys can be cited. The Federal district attorney in some of the States gets $3,000 a year. The Federal district attorney in New York gets $10,000 a year.

Mr. SIEGEL. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman from New York corrects me and makes my statement stronger by suggesting $15,000. Now, the district attorney, as you know, is the lawyer of the United States to present the cases to the district court, and if he is paid in some places a larger salary than in others it is a statutory recognition of the fact that the volume of business which he has to dispose of requires and makes just the payment of such an increased salary.

I have seen some men exhibit most pitiful mental anguish on this floor at the prospect of the Constitution being violated by the provision which allows the President in a case where a judge becomes mentally or physically disqualified to appoint a successor. Just imagine such an instance actually occurring. Common sense and the safety of the interests of the people demand a new judge, but the Constitution as it is at present drawn will not allow the removal. The matter is too trivial to be corrected by an amendment to the Federal Constitution, and the only course that is open is to do this matter indirectly and to put the decision into the hands of the most conservative governing influences of the country, the President and the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Then, the gentleman's position is that we ought to do indirectly what we can not do directly?

Mr. HAMILL. My position, stated another way, is that we ought to do what common sagacity plainly suggests should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HAMILL. I greatly regret that my time has run out, for I would like to develop this important matter more fully.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposing the provisions of this bill for two particular reasons, among others. In the first place, I oppose the proposal to increase the salaries of the Federal judiciary because of the manner in which it is sought to be done. I am willing to admit that the district and circuit judges are entitled to an increase in salary, but I do not concede that the proper method of arriving at the increase which should be given is to place it upon the population of the various districts. There are districts which have a population widespread throughout a large area which may be equal to districts more congested of similar population, where the business that is done in one does not at all equal that done in the other, and in considering the recompense that is to be accorded these judicial officers I think we should not confine it simply to the population basis, and we ought to take into consideration also the business that is done. A great deal has been said about the salaries paid in the Empire State of New York and of the business that is done there and of its immense population. I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that in the State of New York the judges are elected for a term of years; that they are political officers; and that the offices do not vest in the incumbent for life; that at the expiration of their term they have to go before the people and ask them to say whether they are willing they should hold that high office for another term of years. Therefore there is no comparison between an office that is filled by the people at an election and an office that is held by an appointment for life.

Attention has been directed to the fact that sometimes a $6,000 judge passes upon a case involving millions of dollars, with a district attorney receiving a salary much more than the judge receives and with a lawyer receiving a fee of $50,000 in that particular case. Well, that has nothing to do with the fixing of the salary of the judge. You can not base salaries on fees paid to an attorney or the fees paid to a district attorney or the amount involved in litigation; you can not base the salary of a judge upon these particular incidents. They may be proper to be taken into consideration, perhaps, in considering the kind and the amount of business transacted in those particular courts, but I wish gentlemen to remember, something that has not been mentioned during this discussion during the afternoon, or if it has it has been referred to but very slightly, that there goes with this office something more than the monetary payment. There goes with it the honor that it is for any man to receive at the hands of the Chief Executive of the Nation designation and appointment to hold office in one of the Federal courts, and that honor should be part of the recompense for holding that office. We can not fix the salary and pay the men all they are worth, because if you did that you would have to base the salary in one district different than it is in another.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that $10,000 is an excessive salary for a Federal judge in the city of New York? That is the limit, I think, which is fixed in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I would say to the gentleman in reply that I do not think $10,000 would be an excessive salary for a judge in the district of New York if there were only one judge in that district, but when you consider the population and the business that is done in the district of New York you must also take into consideration that they do not put all that business upon a single judge, that there are other judges to help out, and that is so in most of the large districts of the country. But, as I said, while I am opposed to the salary provision of this bill, my objection is not as intense as it was when it was proposed to force the consideration of this bill during the midst of a great war several months ago.

I desire to direct attention now to the most objectionable feature of the measure, in my judgment, and to a proposition which I submit is not only dangerous for us to enact, but it is a vicious practice for us to attempt to write into the statutes of this country. We have during the war conferred great powers upon the Executive and upon various other officials of the Government, and we have in doing that sometimes run counter to the interpretation which has been placed upon the Constitution of the United States. Article III, section 1, of the Constitution reads as follows:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuation in office.

The term "good behavior," by interpretation both by legislation and by the court, has come to be considered as meaning during the life of the occupant. We are attempting here to say that the courts of this land shall be under the supervision—of whom? Not of the power that has authority to create the court, but the power that has the authority to appoint the judges after another body has created them. We say to the President, "We confer upon you power to say whether the 14 judges now eligible to retire are competently and efficiently performing the duties of their office," and he can go further and say that they are mentally or physically disqualified to hold that office and because they are not efficiently performing those duties he is empowered to appoint another judge who shall be senior in commission to the man who may have served in that capacity perhaps for some 15 or 20 years, and we are attempting to give to the Chief Executive of the land, whoever he may be, power which was not contemplated when that article of the Constitution was written, and those of you who are familiar with the debates of the constitutional convention will remember how careful and how long was debated the proposition for the appointment and the creation of Federal courts and how carefully it was sought to guard the appointments made to those courts and to keep them free from political or other influence and to make the judiciary independent, yet coordinate. Yet here we are attempting to do indirectly, as has been suggested, that which the Constitution will not permit to be done directly. Why, a year ago last March we had under consideration a bill providing for the retirement of Federal judges. True, it was not sugar-coated at that time, nor was it hitched up to the salary-increase proposition. The two now have been combined, and, as has been suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, one is expected to drag along the other and to carry this support which, I believe, if they were not connected the retirement feature would not receive.

The other proposition, a year or so ago, provided for retirement if the President thought it for the public good to retire these judges. Now he is given the authority by this bill to retire them if they are not efficiently performing the duties of the office, not saying by that phrase that it is not for the public good. It must be, if we interpret this language truthfully, that the President will act for the public good in attempting to say to a judge, "You are mentally and physically disqualified and therefore should have another appointee to take over the burdens and the labors of this court." And this is the same policy. I beg to recall to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], my colleague upon the committee, who made such an eloquent and able argument in behalf of both features of this bill, the language that he used on March 2, 1917, when this same policy was under consideration and when this proposition was before you to give the President the authority to cripple, and not only cripple but to blast, the reputation of a judge and to cripple the management of the Federal judiciary. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] at that time said:

> I do not approve of the policy of this bill, and doubt its constitutionality.

That, I believe, was his firm conviction at that time, and I submit that by changing the language and the methods, and slightly the effect of the action of the Executive, has not removed this measure from the cloud of unconstitutionality that surrounds it.

The Constitution has provided that there shall be three coordinate branches of our Government, and if there are to be, if we are to continue having that form of government, I submit to the committee that we ought not to say to the courts of this land, "You are performing the functions of your office subject to the will of the Executive, who at any time, after you have reached the age of 70 and have served 10 years, may find that you are permanently physically and mentally unqualified to officially perform the duties of the office." It is in effect a removal from office, and it does not provide that the judge upon whom this verdict is passed shall have an opportunity to be heard. He only awaits the decree of the Executive.

Now, I suppose perhaps that in the concluding remarks upon the other side we may be cited to the case of Field versus Clark and the case of the Bridge Co. versus United States, which I think were referred to in the very able report of my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], either this year or when the bill was up before. I submit it is different. There is a different proposition here involved than giving the President the right upon finding a certain set of facts to suspend a tariff duty or to put into operation some law that the Congress has passed. There is a difference, between that, gentlemen of the committee, and giving the President the right upon a finding of fact to create an office, which right rests with the Congress of the United States, because the appointment of this judge is the creation of an office, and Congress could not delegate that legislative authority, I submit, under the Constitution. Under the plain language of the Constitution it could not delegate that authority to be exercised by the President upon finding a certain state of facts.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman distinguish between the addition of an incumbent to an office and the creation of an office?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I will say to the gentleman that the Constitution provides that we shall ordain and establish inferior courts, and that if you create a judge in an existing court you are creating an office and you are clothing the incumbent of that office with all the functions and powers that attach to it, and that creation is of such a character, I submit, as a legislative function, that we can not delegate it to the Chief Executive.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. GORDON. What would you do in case you had a Federal judge who was physically and mentally incompetent to perform the duties of the office?

Mr. WALSH. In response to the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that I would do as we have done in the past. I would have the people from that district, the members of the bar who are most intimately interested, come before Congress and ask for legislation to give them an additional judge. That was done in the case of Maryland, and in the case of Missouri, and, I believe, in the case of Kentucky, by special enactment; and in that enactment we provided that when the superannuated incumbent of the office died a new judge should not be appointed. And that is the function of Congress, and I submit there is nothing to be gained by giving that to the Chief Executive and giving it in this particular way.

We do, as the gentleman from Ohio possibly may have in mind, in passing a special act, give to the Executive the power to appoint a judge by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. But I submit, sir, that we should act upon these cases, each one upon its own merits, and not give general power. Let us at least give our Constitution the benefit of the doubt.

Now, I am not seeking to reflect upon the present Chief Executive of the United States, but I will say, in view of legislation that has been passed, that if we seek to confer autocratic power such as this, from his experience during the past 20 months as the result of war legislation, I think he is qualified as an expert in the execution of autocratic powers, and that he might, if there are cases now pending where there are judges who refuse to serve, refuse to act, or who are guilty of bad behavior, use this power in a political sense, speaking broadly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, what I have to say is brought forward not in the interest of the judiciary but in the interest of those whom the judiciary represents. While it is one of the independent parts of the trinity of government, the judiciary represents the people, or should represent the people, quite as much as this popular branch of the legislative assembly, which goes back with an account of its stewardship every two years for approval or disapproval. I think everyone should recognize, too, that political service—and political position on the bench is political service whether it is appointive or elective—carries with it almost necessarily a sacrifice of some financial benefit. Every man who is of a high order of ability—and it is from that order of ability which the Federal courts should be recruited—possesses possibly the ability to earn a greater financial return than comes to him when he occupies a position upon the bench. But this is compensated for in part by the high honor, for it is a high honor to a man who is given place in judgment upon his fellow men, and who, if he is a Federal judge, is commissioned during his lifetime or during his good behavior. It is a matter which every man, when he assumes a position on the Federal bench, should well weigh, and he should weigh it in the light of his individual responsibility to himself and to his family.

Then, too, it should be considered in the light of opportunity, for a man may have an opportunity for great professional advancement at one bar and may not have a great opportunity at another bar. But all of those things go together to make up a man's consideration for himself and this service, whether he is going to sacrifice actual financial gain for the great honor of sitting upon the Federal bench. But when he assumes the Federal bench it does not mean that he is to be crowded down upon a mere pitiful, beggarly stipend, but it means that he should be properly and reasonably recompensed that his living may be of the standard of living in his community.

I do not hold any brief, nor do I think we should, for the judges of any particular locality. We should pass a bill here, general in its scope, which will afford a fair and reasonable living wage for duty performed on the Federal bench. I think the standard, of course, is the standard of business; I think that the judge who does a great amount of business should receive a higher salary than one who does little court business. But so far as we are able to judge, business follows population. There is a greater business in the congested centers than there is in the rural counties and States of these United States. Therefore, while we may not properly expect to find any arbitrary assumption of entire justice, we may, I think, assume that population regulates business, and toward that end I think the theory upon which this present law is builded is correct. It works well in Ohio, in my own State. We apply it to nisi prius courts based on population, and there has been uniform satisfaction with it for many years.

With the parts to which gentlemen find objection—the two latter sections of the bill—I confess they have my approval as fully and as entirely as the question of salary itself. I think that the thing which the people of the United States want is service; and the particular part of this bill which says that a man may not be compelled to resign but that he may retire, and that his service may be utilized as he can render it, is most commendable, because there are parts of law work—there are parts of the administration of justice—which a man who is advanced in years may do and other things which he may not properly do.

The ideal time for a man to assume a judicial position is when he has a ripe experience, and he should be permitted to make it his life work. He should retain it as long as he has the physical and mental vigor to administer affairs efficiently, but no longer. Therefore I think that there is ample warrant for the last provision in this bill, which comes within the purview of the Constitution of the United States and of adjudications in which it has been held that "the authority of Congress in creating courts and conferring upon them all or much or little of the judiciary power of the United States is unlimited by the Constitution." I say that this is sufficient to establish this procedure, which in effect is this, that instead of having a multitude of special bills when there appears an isolated case we have here a general rule, and I have heard many times—and I have believed that argument—that the establishment of a general principle upon which everything may be based, upon which the individual cases may be determined, is better than the presentation of a special bill for a particular purpose.

Now, my view is that there are not going to be very many cases under this last provision. If there is to be a case of a man 70 years who has been on the bench 10 years and is physically or mentally incapacitated to do the work, there should be some means of affording the people of his district that which they are entitled to; that is, a speedy and efficient adjudication of their cases in court. A man so disqualified can not do this. Therefore, instead of introducing a special bill, instead of there being the necessity continually for special bills, we here arrange for a standard by which the justice of the district or of the circuit may be maintained at high standard in administration.

Mr. HUSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if I may.

Mr. GARD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the provision of the Constitution which provides that judges shall serve during good behavior was intended to make the judges absolutely independent of the Executive?

Mr. GARD. I do; and I think the judiciary should be absolutely independent of the Executive, but this does not interfere with that.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think it does, to a certain extent?

Mr. GARD. No; I do not think it does, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. HUSTED. Does it not tend to a certain extent to bring them under the influence of the Executive?

Mr. GARD. Absolutely not; because it simply provides that when a man can not do the work and will not resign the President of the United States may make an affirmative finding that he is physically or mentally incapacitated—permanently—and unable to do the business of the court, and in that event he appoints a new judge who is senior in commission, and when the incapacitated judge dies then the position is not to be filled, but the newly appointed judge takes his regular place. It seems to me the new provision is entirely within the purview of the Constitution, and that it establishes a principle which we have been very keen to maintain, and that is the principle of service, for I hold that service means as much to the judiciary as it does to the administrative, the legislative, or even the military.

Mr. HUSTED. There is not any question about that, but it seems to me that this provision, which allows the President to declare a man incompetent, violates to a certain extent that provision of the Constitution which is intended to make the judges absolutely independent of Executive authority and control.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. GARD. I will be very glad to have the gentleman's question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The constitutional provision is that the judge shall be protected in his tenure during good behavior, is it not?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I so understand.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Now, if a judge is incapacitated to perform his duties, if the business of his office is being delayed and hindered, and if justice is being denied by his obstinately remaining at his post, is he continuing in good behavior?

Mr. DENISON. If it was not good behavior, then the method of removal would be by impeachment, would it not?

Mr. GARD. Of course there is a method of removal by impeachment, yes; but this is not a matter of impeachment.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. My time has expired. I am sorry I can not yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, as the time was fixed by the House.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BORLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, had come to no resolution thereon.

PAY OF WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter that I received from Gen. Lord touching the matter that was briefly discussed yesterday relative to the pay of wounded soldiers returning from abroad.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Gen. Lord. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the war-risk insurance bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on war-risk insurance. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. It will be the gentleman's own remarks, will it?

Mr. VARE. My own remarks, as well as some newspaper comments.

Mr. KITCHIN. How long is it?

Mr. VARE. It is not very long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of legislation for the sale of three abandoned customs boarding stations at New Orleans, La., known as the "Jump," Southwest Pass, and Pass a Loutre, said properties no longer being required by that department (H. Doc. No. 1578); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a report as to the necessity and advisability of purchasing lands for the Alabama and Coushatta Indians located in Polk County, Tex., pursuant to the investigations therein directed to be made (H. Doc. No. 1579); to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of proposed legislation authorizing the acceptance of a correctionary deed to the land composing the site of the new post office in New York City (H. Doc. No. 1580); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF SPRUCE PRODUCTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, relative to an investigation of the spruce-production section of the Aeroplane Division of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 10, 1918.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

SIR: With reference to the resolution adopted by the United States Senate December 5, 1918, "that the Secretary of War is hereby requested to inform the Senate what, if any, steps have been taken upon the recommendation of Hon. Charles E. Hughes for an investigation of the spruce-production section of the Aeroplane Division of the Signal Corps of the United States Army," I have the honor to inform you that by my direction a comprehensive investigation of the spruce situation was made, and a report rendered, during the month of July, by the Inspector General of the Army, covering all the features of the situation as it then existed.

On November 30 the Inspector General was further directed to send a very competent man to the Northwest to further investigate this situation and complete his report on the whole situation to the present date. In compliance with these instructions the Inspector General has detailed for this duty Maj. H. M. Ray of the Inspector General's Department, whom he considers specially fitted by education and special training, and this office is now engaged in this work. It is the intention of the department that this investigation shall be as thorough and comprehensive as possible.

Very respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

REPORT OF BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND FORTIFICATION (H. DOC. NO. 1423).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification for the fiscal year 1918, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1438).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year 1918, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of Porto Rico, petitioning Congress to include in such reciprocal commercial treaties as may be negotiated with Spain or any other European nation the importation of Porto Rican coffee free of duty or under the largest tariff rebate possible, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution in the nature of a petition adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Roslindale, Mass., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution in the nature of a memorial adopted by the Woman's Antisuffrage Association of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition from the Cullen Commercial Co., of Rawlins, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the Comptroller of the Treasury to expend funds in payment on partially canceled contracts for Government shoes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GAY introduced a bill (S. 5189) to donate 50 cannon to the State of Louisiana, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANNIE T. BRAHAM.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 385), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Annie T. Braham, sole surviving relative of William E. Burke, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the Secretary may continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 157, line 22, section 609.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 160, line 25, to insert in parentheses "in lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law," and on page 161, line 2, to insert after "spirits" the words "whenever withdrawn and hereafter," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 612. That under such regulations and official supervision and upon the giving of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, any producer of wines defined under the provisions of this title may withdraw from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse grape brandy, or wine spirits, for the fortification of such wines on the premises where actually made: Provided, That there shall be levied and assessed against the producer of such wines a tax (in lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law) of 60 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy or wine spirits whenever withdrawn and hereafter so used by him in the fortification of such wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within 10 months from the date of notice thereof: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as exempting any wines, cordials, liqueurs, or similar compounds from the payment of any tax provided for in this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 161, line 24, to insert after the word "sale" the words "containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 613. That upon the following articles which are hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, or which on the day after the passage of this act are on any winery premises or other bonded premises or in transit thereto or at any customhouse, there shall be levied, collected, and paid taxes at rates as follows, when sold, or removed for consumption or sale:

On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 12 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof;

On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 6 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof;

On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy, 6 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

The tax imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article upon which a corresponding internal-revenue tax is now imposed by law, be in lieu of such tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 162, line 5, before the word "tax," to insert "internal-revenue," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 614. That upon all articles specified in section 611 or 613 upon which the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law has been paid and which are on the day after the passage of this act held by any person and intended for sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a floor tax equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and the tax so paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 162, line 14, before the word "cents," to strike out "20" and insert "30," and in line 16, after the word "wine," to strike out "and a floor tax of 30 cents per proof gallon shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all grape brandy or wine spirits withdrawn by a producer of sweet wines for the purpose of fortifying such wines and not so used prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 615. That upon all sweet wines held for sale by the producer thereof upon the day after the passage of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equivalent to 30 cents per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of such wine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in section 618, page 168, line 1, before the word "That," to insert "(a)," so as to read:

SEC. 618. (a) That under such regulations and upon the execution of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, domestic wines subject to the tax imposed by section 611 may be removed from the winery where produced, free of tax, for storage on other bonded premises or from such premises to other bonded premises (but not more than one such additional removal shall be allowed), or for exportation from the United States or for use as distilling material at any regularly registered distillery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 18, to insert:

(b) Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, it shall be lawful to produce grape wines on bonded winery premises by the usual method of fermentation, and to transport and use the same, and like wines heretofore produced and now stored on bonded winery premises, as distilling material for the production of nonbeverage spirits in the production of nonalcoholic wines, containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, in any fruit brandy or industrial distillery: Provided, That all alcoholic spirits so obtained at any industrial distillery shall be denatured, and all spirits so obtained at any fruit distillery shall be removed and used only for nonbeverage purposes or for denaturation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 620, on page 169, line 23, after the word "both," to insert "and in addition thereto by a penalty of double the tax evaded, or attempted to be evaded, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected," so as to read:

SEC. 620. That whoever evades or attempts to evade any tax imposed by sections 611 to 615, both inclusive, or any requirement of sections 610 to 621, both inclusive, or regulation issued pursuant thereto, or whoever, otherwise than as provided in such sections, recovers or attempts to recover any spirits from domestic or imported wine, or whoever rectifies, mixes, or compounds with distilled spirits any domestic wines, other than in the manufacture of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, shall, on conviction, be punished for each such offense by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, and in addition thereto by a penalty of double the tax evaded, or attempted to be evaded, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected, and all wines, spirits, liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds as to which such violation occurs shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention of Senators the fact that I have had placed upon the desks of Senators this morning an index to this bill. It should have been prepared earlier, but I have just been able to get it.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 627, on page 176, line 11.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], I ask that the next section be passed over without action upon the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator refers to section 628?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To section 628.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 176, line 17, after the word "half," to insert "of one"; in line 19, after the word "to," to strike out "30" and insert "15"; in line 20, after the word "all," to strike out "unfermented grape juice"; in line 23, after the word "drinks," to insert "(except fruit or berry juice)"; at the beginning of line 26, to strike out "20" and insert "10"; on page 177, line 3, after the word "containers," to strike out "at over 10 cents per gallon"; and, at the beginning of line 4, to strike out "of 2 cents per gallon" and insert "equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 628. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 313 and 315 of the revenue act of 1917—

(a) Upon all beverages derived wholly or in part from cereals or substitutes therefor, and containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold; and upon all ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks (except fruit or berry juice), sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which so sold; and

(b) Upon all natural mineral waters or table waters, sold by the producer, bottler, or importer thereof, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which sold.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 629, on page 177, line 9, after the word "imposed," to strike out "on" and insert "in respect to," and after line 14 to insert:

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 629. That each manufacturer, producer, bottler, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in section 628 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed in respect to such articles by such section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business, containing such information necessary for the assessment of the tax, and at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulation prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 630, page 177, line 22, after the word "after," to strike out "November 1, 1918"; in line 24, after the words "tax of," to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent"; and on page 178, line 7, after the word "business," to strike out "Provided, That in cases where the charge for any such article is 7 cents or less, the tax shall be 1 cent," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 630. That on and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid to any person conducting a soda fountain, ice-cream parlor, or other similar place of business, for drinks commonly known as soft drinks, compounded or mixed at such place of business, or for ice cream, ice-cream sodas, sundaes, or other similar articles of food or drink, when any of the above are sold on or after such date for consumption in or in proximity to such place of business. Such tax shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that these amendments shall be adopted at this time, because I think they ought to be adopted if this section is to be retained in the bill as it finally passes; but I expect to offer a substitute for the whole section, and if that amendment is agreed to of course this section would be eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would be a motion to strike out and insert. So no advantage will be lost by the adoption of the amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Title VII.—Tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufactures thereof," in section 700, page 178, line 25, before the words "per thousand," to strike out "$2" and insert "$1.50," so as to make the paragraph read:

On cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $1.50 per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $7.20 per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 179, line 23, after the word "cigars," to strike out "or cigarettes," and on page 180, line 2, after the word "cigar," to strike out "or, in the case of cigarettes, the ordinary retail price thereof when sold in packages of less than 40," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Whenever in this section reference is made to cigars manufactured or imported to retail at not over a certain price each, then in determining the tax to be paid regard shall be had to the ordinary retail price of a single cigar.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 180, line 7, after the word "cigars," to strike out "or cigarettes," so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) The commissioner may, by regulation, require the manufacturer or importer to affix to each box, package, or container a conspicuous label indicating the clause of this section under which the cigars therein contained have been tax-paid, which must correspond with the tax-paid stamp on such box or container.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 701, page 181, line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "26" and insert "18," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 701. (a) That upon all tobacco and snuff manufactured in or imported into the United States and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of 18 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 702, page 183, after line 12, to insert:

In the case of any person making due return as required by the commissioner of the stock of all such articles on such date so held by him, the tax imposed by this section shall apply only to the excess of manufactured tobacco and snuff over 50 pounds, to the excess of cigars over 1,000, and to the excess of cigarettes over 3,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the semicolon at the end of line 18 should be a period. I move that that amendment be made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 703, page 184, line 4, before the word "cent," to strike out "1" and insert "one-half"; in line 5, before the word "containing," to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent"; in line 6, before the word "cent," to strike out "1" and insert "one-half"; and in line 7, after the word "tubes," to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 703. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 404 of the revenue act of 1917, upon cigarette paper made up into packages, books, sets, or tubes, made up in or imported into the United States and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer to any person (other than to a manufacturer of cigarettes for use by him in the manufacture of cigarettes) the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer: On each package, book, or set, containing more than 25 but not more than 50 papers, one-half cent; containing more than 50 but not more than 100 papers, 1 cent; containing more than 100 papers, one-half cent for each 50 papers or fractional part thereof; and upon tubes, 1 cent for each 50 tubes or fractional part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 184, after line 17, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 704. That section 35 of the act of August 5, 1909, be, and is hereby, repealed, to take effect April 1, 1919.

That section 3360 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3360. (a) Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall file with the collector of the district in which his business is carried on a statement in duplicate, subscribed under oath, setting forth the place, and if in a city, the street and number of the street, where his business is to be carried on, and the exact location of each place where leaf tobacco is held by him on storage, and, whenever he adds to or discontinues any of his leaf-tobacco storage places, he shall give immediate notice to the collector of the district in which he is registered.

"Every such dealer shall give a bond with surety, satisfactory to, and to be approved by, the collector of the district, in such penal sum as the collector may require, not less than $500; and a new bond may be required in the discretion of the collector or under instructions of the commissioner.

"Every such dealer shall be assigned a number by the collector of the district, which number shall appear in every inventory, invoice, and report rendered by the dealer, who shall also obtain certificates from the collector of the district setting forth the place where his business is carried on and the places designated by the dealer as the places of storage of his tobacco, which certificates shall be posted conspicuously within the dealer's registered place of business, and within each designated place of storage.

"(b) Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall make and deliver to the collector of the district a true inventory of the quantity of the different kinds of tobacco held or owned, and where stored by him, on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing and at the time of concluding business, if before or after the 1st day of January, such inventory to be made under oath and rendered in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner.

"Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall render such invoices and keep such records as shall be prescribed by the commissioner, and shall enter therein, day by day, and upon the same day on which the circumstance, thing, or act to be recorded is done or occurs, an accurate account of the number of hogsheads, tierces, cases and bales, and quantity of leaf tobacco contained therein, purchased or received by him, on assignment, consignment, for storage, by transfer or otherwise, and of whom purchased or received, and the number of hogsheads, tierces, cases and bales, and the quantity of leaf tobacco contained therein, sold by him, with the name and residence in each instance of the person to whom sold, and if shipped, to whom shipped, and to what district; such records shall be kept at his place of business at all times and preserved for a period of two years, and the same shall be open at all hours for the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent.

"Every dealer in leaf tobacco on or before the 10th day of each month shall furnish to the collector of the district a true and complete report of all purchases, receipts, sales, and shipments of leaf tobacco made by him during the month next preceding, which report shall be verified and rendered in such form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe.

"(c) Sales or shipments of leaf tobacco by a dealer in leaf tobacco shall be in quantities of not less than a hogshead, tierce, case, or bale, except loose leaf tobacco, comprising the breaks on warehouse floors, and except to a duly registered manufacturer of cigars for use in his own manufactory exclusively.

"Dealers in leaf tobacco shall make shipments of leaf tobacco only to other dealers in leaf tobacco, to registered manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, or for export.

"(d) Upon all leaf tobacco sold, removed, or shipped by any dealer in leaf tobacco in violation of the provisions of subdivision (c), or in respect to which no report has been made by such dealer in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (b), there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equal to the tax then in force upon manufactured tobacco, such tax to be assessed and collected in the same manner as the tax on manufactured tobacco.

"(e) Every dealer in leaf tobacco—

"(1) Who neglects or refuses to furnish the statement, to give bond, to keep books, to file inventory, or to render the invoices, returns, or reports required by the commissioner, or to notify the collector of the district of additions to his places of storage; or

"(2) Who ships or delivers leaf tobacco, except as herein provided; or

"(3) Who fraudulently omits to account for tobacco purchased, received, sold, or shipped—

Shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"(f) For the purposes of this section a farmer or grower of tobacco shall not be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco in respect to the leaf tobacco produced by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 188, line 13, to strike out "November 1, 1918," and leave a blank, so as to read:

TITLE VIII.—TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 5, to strike out "(25)" and insert "(20)"; in the same line, before the word "soap," to insert the word "toilet" and to strike out "10" before "per cent" and insert "3," so as to read:

(20) Toilet soap and toilet-soap powders, 3 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 12:

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article in respect to which a corresponding tax is imposed by section 600 of the revenue act of 1916, be in lieu of such tax.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that there is a mistake in the date. It should read "the revenue act of 1917" instead of "1916." We might just as well have the change made now.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has verified it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is absolutely right. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 197, line 18, after the word "section," to strike out "900" and insert "900, or leases or licenses for exhibition any positive motion-picture film containing a picture ready for projection"; in line 22, to strike out the words "sells or" and insert "sells" before "leases," and after "leases," to insert "or licenses"; on page 198, line 2, before "leased," to strike out the words "sold or," and, after "leased," to insert "or licensed"; in line 4, before the word "lease," to strike out the words "sale or," and, after "lease," to insert "or license"; in line 5, before the word "leased," to strike out "sold or" and insert "sold," and, after "leased," to insert "or licensed," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 901. That if any person manufactures, produces, or imports any article enumerated in section 900, or leases or licenses for exhibition any positive motion-picture film containing a picture ready for projection, and, whether through any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells, leases, or licenses such article at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the amount for which such article is sold, leased, or licensed shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received from the sale, lease, or license of such article if sold, leased, or licensed at the fair market price.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 198, to strike out lines 7 to 12, inclusive, in the following words:

SEC. 902. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all gasoline, naphtha, and other similar petroleum products having a flash point below 100 degrees Fahrenheit, as tested by the Tagliue open-cup tester, and suitable for motor power, sold by the manufacturer, refiner, or importer, a tax of 2 cents a wine gallon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 13, after "Sec.," to strike out "903" and insert "902"; in line 14, after "paintings," to strike out "and statuary" and insert "statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes"; in line 16, after "artist," to insert: "and upon antique furniture sold by any person"; in line 17, before "per cent," to strike out "10" and insert "5"; and in line 18, after "sold," to insert: "This section shall not apply to the sale of any such article to an educational institution or art museum," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 902. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, sold by any person other than the artist, and upon antique furniture sold by any person, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold. This section shall not apply to the sale of any such article to an educational institution or art museum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 20, after "Sec.," to strike out "904" and insert "903" before the word "That," and after the word "That" to strike out "each manufacturer, producer, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in section 900 or 902, and every person selling any article enumerated in section 903" and insert "every person liable for any tax imposed by sections 900, 902, or 905"; and in line 25, after the word "imposed." to strike out "on such articles by this title" and insert "by such sections," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 903. That every person liable for any tax imposed by sections 900, 902, or 905 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such sections to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, in section 904 (903), page 199, after line 5, to insert:

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 199, after line 12, to strike out section 905, in the following language:

SEC. 905. (a) That on and after November 1, 1918, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 20 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold on or after such date for consumption or use—

(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, except imported and American rugs made principally of wool, on the amount in excess of $5 per square yard;

(2) Picture frames, on the amount in excess of $10 each;

(3) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(4) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hat boxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(5) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(6) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(7) Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades, on the amount in excess of $4 each;

(8) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each;

(9) House or smoking coats or jackets, and bath or lounging robes, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(10) Men's waistcoats, sold separately from suits, on the amount in excess of $5 each:

(11) Men's and boys' suits or overcoats, not including uniforms of officers in the military or naval forces of the United States, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(12) Women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats, on the amount in excess of $50 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $50 in value each;

(13) Women's and misses' dresses, on the amount in excess of $40 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $40 in value each;

(14) Women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods, on the amount in excess of $15 each;

(15) Men's and boys' hats, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(16) Men's and boys' caps, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

(17) Men's, women's misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers, not including shoes or appliances made to order for any person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle, on the amount in excess of $10 per pair;

(18) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

(19) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;

(20) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;

(21) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;

(22) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and

(23) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

(b) The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to any article enumerated in paragraphs (2) to (8), both inclusive, of subdivision (a), if such article is made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory, or to any article enumerated in subdivision (20) or (21) of section 900.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by the purchaser to the vender at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vender in the same manner as provided in section 502. As used in this subdivision the term "vender" includes a tailor or dressmaker making up women's or misses' suits, cloaks, coats, or dresses.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to have that whole section go over, as I propose to offer an amendment to the original text. I think I shall ask that the amendment may be printed, and let the whole section go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 906, page 202, line 8, before the word "That," to strike out the numerals "906" and insert "904"; in the same line, after the word "after," to strike out the words "November 1, 1918"; in line 16, after the word "ivory," to insert "(not including surgical instruments)"; in line 19, after the word "sold," to insert "by a dealer"; in line 20, before the words "per cent," to strike out "10" and insert "5"; and after line 20, to strike out "This section shall not apply to any such articles sold by any person whose principal business is not the sale of such articles for consumption or use and whose gross receipt from the sale of such articles (during the preceding year ending June 30) for consumption or use does not exceed $200," so as to read:

SEC. 904. That on and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivision (e) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917) upon all articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation; pearls, precious and semiprecious stones, and imitations thereof; articles made of, or ornamented, mounted or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory (not including surgical instruments); watches; clocks; opera glasses; lorgnettes; marine glasses; field glasses; and binoculars; upon any of the above when sold by a dealer for consumption or use, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 203, line 5, after the word "imposed," to strike out "on" and to insert "in respect to," so as to make the clause read:

Every person selling any of the articles enumerated in this section shall make returns under oath in duplicate (monthly or quarterly as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe) and pay the taxes imposed in respect to such articles by this section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 203, after line 10, to insert:

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 203, after line 16, to strike out "section 907," as follows:

SEC. 907. That on and after November 1, 1918, in addition to the tax imposed by section 906, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount paid for any article commonly or commercially known as jewelry, composed in whole or in part of plantinum, when sold on or after such date for consumption or use.

Such tax shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502. The vendor shall include in all returns made under this section the name and address of each purchaser, the price of each article sold to him, and a description thereof, including the quantity and value of the plantinum contained therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 204, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 905. That on and after the 1st day of ———, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion-picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per cent of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. If any such person has, prior to December 6, 1918, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition or profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee shall, in lieu of the lessor or licensor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 908, page 205, line 3, after the word "Sec.", to strike out the numerals "908" and to insert "906"; in the same line, after the word "after," to strike out "November 1, 1918"; in line 7, after the word "each," to strike out "10" and to insert "25"; and in line 8, after the word "sold," to insert "by a dealer," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 906. (a) That on and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (in lieu of the taxes imposed by subdivisions (g) and (h) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917) a tax of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for any of the following articles when sold by a dealer on or after such date for consumption or use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 206, line 10, after the word "body," to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the sale of medicinal preparations which are not advertised to the general lay public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 206, after line 20, to strike out section 909, as follows:

SEC. 909. That upon all articles (other than second-hand articles) enumerated in section 906 upon the sale of which no tax was imposed by section 600 or 602 of the revenue act of 1917, and which on the day after the passage of this act are held and intended for sale by any person, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equivalent to the tax imposed by section 900 of this act upon the sale of such articles. This tax shall be paid by the person so holding such articles.

The taxes imposed by this section shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as provided in section 1306 in the case of floor taxes upon articles upon which the tax imposed by existing law has been paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 207, after line 8, to strike out section 910, as follows:

SEC. 910. That upon all articles (other than second-hand articles) enumerated in section 900 in respect to which the tax imposed by section 600 or 602 of the revenue act of 1917 was payable, and which on the day after the passage of this act are held and intended for sale by any person, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equivalent to the difference between (a) the tax imposed by section 900 of this act upon the sale of such articles and (b) the corresponding tax imposed by section 600 of the revenue act of 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 207, after line 18, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 907. That under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, the tax imposed under the provisions of this title shall not apply in respect to articles sold or leased for export and in due course so exported. Under such rules and regulations the amount of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally collected in respect to exported articles may be refunded to the exporter of the article, instead of to the manufacturer, if the manufacturer waives any claim for the amount so to be refunded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title X.—Special taxes," in section 1000, page 208, line 8, after the word "corporation," to insert "other than a life insurance company"; and in line 11, after the word "of," to strike out "so much of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year ending June 30 as is in excess of $5,000. In estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included," and insert: "the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the close of the preceding annual period used by the corporation for purposes of making its income-tax return; but if the corporation made no such return, then of the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the 30th day of June preceding"; so as to make the paragraph read:

(1) Every domestic corporation other than a life insurance company shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the close of the preceding annual period used by the corporation for purposes of making its income-tax return; but if the corporation made no such return, then of the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the 30th day of June preceding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 208, line 21, after the word "corporation," to insert "other than a life insurance company"; and in line 24, after the word "capital," to strike out "actually invested" and insert "employed," so as to make the paragraph read:

(2) Every foreign corporation other than a life insurance company shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business in the United States, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of the average amount of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States during the preceding year ending June 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 209, after line 2, to strike out:

(b) In computing the tax in the case of insurance companies such deposits and reserve funds as they are required by law or contract to maintain or hold for the protection of or payment to or apportionment among policyholders shall not be included.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 209, at the beginning of line 8, to strike out "(c)" and insert "(b)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 209, at the beginning of line 13, to strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1001, on page 209, line 16, after the word "annually," to strike out "in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 407 of the revenue act of 1916"; in line 19, after the word "pay," to strike out "$100" and insert "$40"; on page 210, line 5, after the word "was," to strike out "not more than $2,000, $50; if such value was more than"; and in line 6, after the numerals "$2,000," to strike out "and" and insert "or more but," so as to read:

SEC. 1001. That on and after January 1, 1919, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually the following special taxes—

(1) Brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, other securities, produce or merchandise, for others, shall be regarded as a broker. If a broker is a member of a stock exchange, or if he is a member of any produce exchange, board of trade, or similar organization, where produce or merchandise is sold, he shall pay an additional amount as follows: If the average value, during the preceding year ending June 30, of a seat or membership in such exchange or organization was $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, $100; if such value was more than $5,000, $150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 210, line 13, after the word "pawnbroker," to insert: "If the gross receipts of such pawnbroker for the preceding year ending June 30 were $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, he shall pay $100 additional; if such gross receipts were more than $5,000 he shall pay $150 additional," so as to make the paragraph read:

(2) Pawnbrokers shall pay $100. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be regarded as a pawnbroker. If the gross receipts of such pawnbroker for the preceding year ending June 30 were $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, he shall pay $100 additional; if such gross receipts were more than $5,000 he shall pay $150 additional.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 210, line 18, after the word "pay," to strike out "$50" and insert "$40," so as to make the paragraph read:

(3) Ship brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose business it is as a broker to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers or consignors or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded as a ship broker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 210, line 23, after the word "pay," to strike out "$50" and insert "$40," so as to make the paragraph read:

(4) Customhouse brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other customhouse papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a customhouse broker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 211, line 16, after the word "representations," to insert "and not including edifices owned by religious, educational or charitable institutions, societies or organizations where all the proceeds from admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies, or organizations or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States," so as to make the paragraph read:

(5) Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $100; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $150; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $200. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, and not including edifices owned by religious, education, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations where all the proceeds from admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies, or organizations or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the time the tax is due, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated betwen the parties to the lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 212, after the word "pay," at the end of line 4, to strike out "$200" and insert "$100," so as to make the paragraph read:

(6) The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area, where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances not otherwise provided for in this section are exhibited shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be imposed for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 212, line 16, after the word "pay," to strike out "$20" and to insert "$15," and on page 213, line 1, after the word "than," to strike out "$200" and insert "$100," so as to make the paragraph read:

(7) Proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $15: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to Chautauquas, lecture lyceums, agricultural or industrial fairs, or exhibitions held under the auspices of religious or charitable associations: Provided further, That an aggregation of entertainments, known as a street fair, shall not pay a larger tax than $100 in any State, Territory, or in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 213, line 16, after the word "operating," to insert "or renting"; in line 17, before the word "automobiles," to strike out "sight-seeing" and insert "passenger"; in the same line, after the word "automobiles," to insert "for hire"; and at the beginning of line 18 to strike out "a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the gross receipts during the preceding year ending June 30 from the operation of" and insert "$10 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than two and not more than seven, and $20 for," so as to make the paragraph read:

(11) Persons carrying on the business of operating or renting passenger automobiles for hire shall pay $10 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than two and not more than seven, and $20 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 213, after line 22, to strike out:

(12) Every person carrying on the business of a brewer, distiller, wholesale liquor dealer, retail liquor dealer, wholesale dealer in malt liquor, retail dealer in malt liquor, or manufacturer of stills, as defined in section 3244 as amended and section 3247 of the Revised Statutes, in any State, Territory, or District of the United States contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or District, or in any place therein in which carrying on such business is prohibited by local or municipal law, shall pay, in addition to all other taxes, special or otherwise, imposed by existing law or by this act, $1,000.

The payment of the tax imposed by this subdivision shall not be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided for by the laws of any State, Territory, or District for carrying on such business in such State, Territory, or District, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such business contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or District, or in places prohibited by local or municipal law.

(13) Persons engaged in any trade, business, or profession whose gross receipts therefrom for the preceding year ending June 30, exceed $2,500, shall pay $10. If such person is a wholesaler, he shall pay $5 additional.

This subdivision shall not apply to agriculture, to any person subject to any special tax under this section or under section 1000, 1002, 1005, or 1007, or to persons paying special taxes upon the business of manufacturing, rectifying, or dealing in distilled spirits, malt liquors, stills, oleomargarine, adulterated, process, or renovated butter, filled cheese, or mixed flour.

And insert:

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of persons upon whom a corresponding tax is imposed by section 407 of the revenue act of 1916, be in lieu of such tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, has paragraph (13) been adopted, or was that all taken as one amendment? It is on page 214.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). That was considered as one amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that go over.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had in mind especially the paragraph numbered (13) stricken out on page 214. I have received several telegrams that I think affect that provision.

Mr. SIMMONS. What does the Senator wish to go over—all after line 16 on page 214 down to and including line 2 on page 215?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I think simply the provision on page 215. I see that the committee has stricken out the provision on page 214, and I think that is what the senders of these telegrams wanted done with it. I do not know what the effect of the amendment on page 215 is, so I will ask that that may go over until I have an opportunity to examine it. I have no objection to the amendment striking out the paragraph on page 214. All that I ask to go over is lines 3, 4, and 5 on page 215.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the matter stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection, then, to having these paragraphs stricken out; but I want the proposed amendment on lines 3, 4, and 5, page 215, to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Lines 3, 4, and 5, page 215, will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I understand, the amendment striking out the part before those lines has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has been agreed to. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1002, page 215, line 21, after the word "pay," to insert "$24, and," and in line 22, after the word "thereof," to insert "in respect to the excess over 200,000 pounds," so as to make the paragraph read:

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 200,000 pounds shall each pay $24, and at the rate of 16 cents per thousand pounds, or fraction thereof, in respect to the excess over 200,000 pounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 216, line 11, after the word "pay," to insert "$24, and," and in line 12, after the word "thereof," to insert "in respect to the excess over 400,000 cigars," so as to make the paragraph read:

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 400,000 cigars shall each pay $24, and at the rate of 10 cents per thousand cigars, or fraction thereof, in respect to the excess over 400,000 cigars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1003, page 217, line 5, before the word "tons," to strike out "net" and insert "gross"; in line 6, after the word "for," to strike out "trade" and insert "trade, fishing"; in line 11, before the word "tons," to strike out "net" and insert "gross"; and, in line 14, before the word "tons," to strike out "net" and insert "gross," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 1003. That 60 days after the passage of this act, and thereafter on July 1 in each year, and also at the time of the original purchase of a new boat by a user, if on any other date than July 1, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the tax imposed by section 603 of the revenue act of 1917, upon the use of yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, and sailing boats of over 5 gross tons, and motor boats with fixed engines not used exclusively for trade, fishing, or national defense, or not built according to plans and specifications approved by the Navy Department, a special excise tax, to be based on each yacht or boat at rates as follows: Yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats of over 5 gross tons, length not over 50 feet, $1 for each foot; length over 50 feet and not over 100 feet, $2 for each foot; length over 100 feet, $4 for each foot; motor boats of not over 5 gross tons with fixed engines, $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1004, page 218, after line 21, to insert:

If the corresponding tax imposed by section 407 of the revenue act of 1916 was not payable by stamp, the amount paid under such section for any period for which a tax is also imposed by this title may be credited against the tax imposed by this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 219, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 1005. That on and after January 1, 1919, every person any part of whose business consists of the retailing of merchandise through or upon orders received by mail shall pay annually a special excise tax equivalent to 1 per cent of the gross amount in excess of $100,000 received by such person from such retail sales during the preceding year ending June 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 219, after line 9, to strike out:

SEC. 1006. That 60 days after the passage of this act, and thereafter on July 1 in each year, and also at the time of the purchase of a new or used automobile or motorcycle by a user, if on any other date than July 1, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the use of automobiles and motorcycles a special excise tax at rates as follows: Motorcycles, $5; automobiles (other than electric) of 23 horsepower or less, $10; more than 23 horsepower and not more than 30 horsepower, $20; more than 30 horsepower and not more than 40 horsepower, $30; and more than 40 horsepower, $50; electric automobiles, $5 per horsepower and 50 cents for each 100 pounds of weight.

In the case of a tax imposed at the time of the purchase of an automobile or motorcycle on any other date than July 1, and in the case of the tax taking effect 60 days after the passage of this act, the amount to be paid shall be the same number of twelfths of the amount of the tax as the number of calendar months (including the month of sale or the month in which is included the sixty-first day after the passage of this act, as the case may be) remaining prior to the following July 1.

For the purposes of this section the horsepower of all automobiles other than steam or electric shall be computed as follows: Square the diameter of the cylinder in inches, multiply by the number of cylinders, and divide by two and one-half. In the case of steam or electric automobiles, the horsepower for the purposes of this section shall be the horsepower rating fixed and advertised by the manufacturer or importer thereof at the time when sold by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 220, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 1007. That on and after January 1, 1919, every manufacturer of automatic vending or weighing machines who operates such machines shall pay annually a special excise tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the gross amount received by him from such operation during the preceding year ending June 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 220, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 1005. That any person who carries on any business or occupation for which a special tax is imposed by sections 1000, 1001, or 1002, without having paid the special tax therein provided, shall, besides being liable for the payment of such special tax, be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 221, line 3, to change the number of the section from "1008" to "1006."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1006, page 221, line 6, after the word "on" to strike out "and after January 1, 1919," and insert "or before July 1 of each year"; in line 13, after the word "on" to strike out "and on or before the 1st day of July, annually thereafter"; in line 13, after the word "pay" to insert "the"; and in the same line, after the word "taxes" to strike out "as follows" and insert "hereinafter provided"; so as to make the paragraph read:

SECTION 1. That on or before July 1 of each year every person who imports, manufactures, produces, compounds, sells, deals in, dispenses, or gives away opium or coca leaves, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on, and pay the special taxes hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 221, after line 15, to insert:

Every person who on January 1, 1919, is engaged in any of the activities above enumerated, or who between such date and the passage of this act first engages in any of such activities, shall within 30 days after the passage of this act make like registration, and shall pay the proportionate part of the tax for the period ending June 30, 1919; and

Every person who first engages in any of such activities after the passage of this act shall immediately make like registration and pay the proportionate part of the tax for the period ending on the following June 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 222, line 6, after the word "they," to insert "in the course of their professional practice," so as to make the paragraph read:

Importers, manufacturers, producers, or compounders, $24 per annum; wholesale dealers, $12 per annum; retail dealers, $6 per annum; physicians, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and other practitioners lawfully entitled to distribute, dispense, give away, or administer any of the aforesaid drugs to patients upon whom they in the course of their professional practice are in attendance, shall pay $3 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 225, line 11, after the word "practitioner," to insert "in the course of his professional practice," so as to make the paragraph read:

It shall be unlawful for any person to purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute any of the aforesaid drugs except in the original stamped package or from the original stamped package; and the absence of appropriate tax-paid stamps from any of the aforesaid drugs shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this section by the person in whose possession same may be found; and the possession of any original stamped package containing any of the aforesaid drugs by any person who has not registered and paid special taxes as required by this section shall be prima facie evidence of liability to such special tax: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any person having in his or her possession any of the aforesaid drugs which have been obtained from a registered dealer in pursuance of a prescription, written for legitimate medical uses, issued by a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner registered under this act; and where the bottle or other container in which such drug may be put up by the dealer upon said prescription bears the name and registry number of the druggist, serial number of prescription, name and address of the patient, and name, address, and registry number of the person writing said prescription; or to the dispensing or administration, or giving away of any of the aforesaid drugs to a patient by a registered physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner in the course of his professional practice in personal attendance upon such patient, and where said drugs are dispensed or administered to the patient for legitimate medical purposes, and the record kept as required by this act of the drugs so dispensed, administered, distributed, or given away.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 226, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 1009. That section 6 of such act of December 17, 1914, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to decocanized coca leaves from which all cocaine and other related alkaloids or associated salts have been extracted, nor to preparations of such decocanized coca leaves."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 226, line 21, to change the number of the section from "1010" to "1007."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 227, line 23, to change the number of the section from "1011" to "1008."

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 234, line 18, after the word "thereof," to strike out "and on all policies of guaranty and fidelity insurance, including policies guaranteeing titles to real estate and mortgage guarantee policies"; in line 23, after the word "except," to strike out "such as may be" and insert "fidelity and surety bonds taxable under subdivision (b) of section 503, and bonds," and in line 25, after the word "cents," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That where a premium is charged for the execution of such bond the tax shall be 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged: Provided further, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision.

So as to read:

SCHEDULE A.—STAMP TAXES.

1. Bonds of indebtedness: On all bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued by any person, and all instruments, however termed, issued by any corporation with interest coupons or in registered form, known generally as corporate securities, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That every renewal of the foregoing shall be taxed as a new issue: Provided further, That when a bond conditioned for the repayment or payment of money is given in a penal sum greater than the debt secured, the tax shall be based upon the amount secured.

2. Bonds, indemnity and surety: On all bonds executed for indemnifying any person who shall have become bound or engaged as surety, and on all bonds executed for the due execution or performance of any contract, obligation, or requirement, or the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, and on all other bonds of any description, made, issued, or executed, not otherwise provided for in this schedule, except fidelity and surety bonds taxable under subdivision (b) of section 503, and bonds required in legal proceedings, 50 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 237, line 18, after the word "merchandise," to strike out "at" and insert "at, or under the rules or usages of," so as to read:

5. Produce, sales of, on exchange: Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell (not including so-called transferred or scratch sales), any products or merchandise at, or under the rules or usages of, any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of the merchandise covered by said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 2 cents, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 241, after line 23, to insert:

15. On each policy of insurance, or certificate, binder, covering note, memorandum, cablegram, letter or other instrument by whatever name called whereby insurance is made or renewed upon property within the United States (including rents and profits) against peril by sea or on inland waters or in transit on land (including transshipments and storage at termini or way points) or by fire, lightning, tornado, windstorm, bombardment, invasion, insurrection or riot, issued to or for or in the name of a domestic corporation or partnership or an individual resident of the United States by any foreign corporation or partnership or any individual not a resident of the United States, when such policy or other instrument is not signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in a State, Territory, or district of the United States within which such insurer is authorized to do business, a tax of 5 cents on each dollar, or fractional part thereof of the premium charged: Provided, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision.

Any person to or for whom or in whose name any such policy or other instrument is issued, or any solicitor or broker acting for or on behalf of such person in the procurement of any such policy or other instrument, shall affix the proper stamps to such policy or other instrument and for failure to affix such stamps with intent to evade the tax shall, in addition to other penalties provided therefor, pay a fine of double the amount of the tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 243, beginning with line 1, to strike out:

TITLE XII.—ADVISORY TAX BOARD.

SEC. 1200. That there is hereby created a board to be known as the "advisory tax board," hereinafter called the board, and to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The board shall remain in existence during the continuance of the present war with the Imperial German Government and for a period of 12 months after the termination of such war, as declared by proclamation of the President.

Vacancies in the membership of the board shall be filled in the same manner as an original appointment. Any member shall be subject to removal by the President. The President shall designate the chairman of the board. Each member shall receive an annual salary of $9,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary expenses when absent from the District of Columbia on official business.

SEC. 1201. That the Secretary or the commissioner may and on the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the interpretation or administration of the internal revenue laws, and the board shall report its findings and recommendations to the Secretary or the commissioner, as the case may be.

SEC. 1202. That the board shall have its office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia. The expenses and salaries of members of the board shall be audited, allowed, and paid out of appropriations for collecting internal revenue, in the same manner as expenses and salaries of employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are audited, allowed, and paid.

SEC. 1203. That the board shall have the power to summon witnesses, take testimony, administer oaths, and to require any person to produce books, papers, documents, or other data relating to any matter under investigation by the board. Any member of the board may sign subpœnas and members and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue designated to assist the board, when authorized by the board, may administer oaths, examine witnesses, take testimony, and receive evidence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 244, after line 14, to insert:

TITLE XII.—TAX ON EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

SEC. 1200. That every person (other than a bona fide boys' or girls' canning club recognized by the Agricultural Department of a State and of the United States) operating (a) any mine or quarry situated in the United States in which children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work during any portion of the taxable year; or (b) any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m., during any portion of the taxable year, shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, an excise tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment.

SEC. 1201. That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such products manufactured within the United States the following items:

(a) The cost of raw materials entering into the production;

(b) Running expenses, including rentals, cost of repairs, and maintenance, heat, power, insurance, management, and a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensations for personal services actually rendered, and for depreciation;

(c) Interest paid within the taxable year on debts or loans contracted to meet the needs of the business, and the proceeds of which have been actually used to meet such needs;

(d) Taxes of all kinds paid during the taxable year with respect to the business or property relating to the production; and

(e) Losses actually sustained within the taxable year in connection with the business of producing such products, including losses from fire, flood, storm, or other casualties, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

SEC. 1202. That if any such person during any taxable year or part thereof, whether under any agreement, arrangement, or understanding or otherwise, sells or disposes of any product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person; or (b) with intent to cause such benefit; the gross amount received or accrued for such year or part thereof from the sale or disposition of such product shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received or accrued from the sale or disposition of such product if sold at the fair market price.

SEC. 1203. (a) That no person subject to the provisions of this title shall be liable for the tax herein imposed if the only employment or permission to work which but for this section would subject him to the tax, has been of a child as to whom such person has in good faith procured at the time of employing such child or permitting him to work, and has since in good faith relied upon and kept on file a certificate, issued in such form, under such conditions and by such persons as may be prescribed by a board consisting of the Secretary, the commissioner, and the Secretary of Labor, showing the child to be of such age as not to subject such person to the tax imposed by this title. Any person who knowingly makes a false statement or presents false evidence in or in relation to any such certificate or application therefor shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100, nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

In any State designated by such board an employment certificate or other similar paper as to the age of the child, issued under the laws of that State, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, shall have the same force and effect as a certificate herein provided for.

(b) The tax imposed by this title shall not be imposed in the case of any person who proves to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the only employment or permission to work which but for this section would subject him to the tax, has been of a child employed or permitted to work under a mistake of fact as to the age of such child, and without intention to evade the tax.

SEC. 1204. That on or before the 1st day of the third month following the close of each taxable year, a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person subject to the provisions of this title to the collector for the district in which such person has his principal office or place of business, in such form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income received or accrued during such year from the sale or disposition of the product of any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which children have been employed subjecting him to the tax imposed by this title, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowance authorized by this title, and such other particulars as to the gross receipts and items of allowance as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require.

SEC. 1205. That all such returns shall be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the commissioner, who shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax found due and notify the person making such return of the amount of tax for which such person is liable, and such person shall pay the tax to the collector on or before 30 days from the date of such notice.

SEC. 1206. That for the purposes of this act the commissioner, or any other person duly authorized by him, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment. The Secretary of Labor, or any person duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of complying with a request of the commissioner to make such an inspection, have like authority, and shall make report to the commissioner of inspections made under such authority in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any person who refuses or obstructs entry or inspection authorized by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 1207. That as used in this title the term "taxable year" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in section 200. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the period between 60 days after the passage of this act and December 31, 1919, both inclusive, or such portion of such period as is included within the fiscal year (as defined in section 200) of the taxpayer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know there are several Senators who desire to be heard on this provision, and I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment goes over.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 251, line 3, after the word "appointed," to strike out "from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law" and insert "as provided by law," so as to read:

TITLE XIII.—GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 1300. That hereafter the salary of the commissioner shall be $10,000 a year. The difference between the amount appropriated under existing law and the salary herein established shall, for the period between the passage of this act and July 1, 1919, be paid out of the appropriations for collecting internal revenue.

SEC. 1301. (a) That hereafter there may be employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in lieu of the deputy commissioners whose salaries are now fixed by law, five deputy commissioners and an assistant to the commissioner, who shall each receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly. The assistant to the commissioner may be authorized by the commissioner to perform any duties which the deputy commissioners may perform under existing law.

(b) The salaries of collectors may be readjusted and increased under such regulations as may be prescribed by the commissioner, subject to the approval of the Secretary, but no collector shall receive a salary in excess of $6,000 a year.

(c) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $7,500,000 for the expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes as provided in this act, including the employment of necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers, in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment goes over.

The next amendment was, on page 251, line 7, after the word "equipment," to insert "furniture," and in line 9, after the word "reference," to insert "not to exceed $500 for street car fares in the District of Columbia," so as to read:

telegraph and telephone service, rental and repair of quarters, postage, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, printing, stationery, law books and books of reference, not to exceed $500 for street car fares in the District of Columbia, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts: Provided, That not more than $2,750,000 of the total amount appropriated by this section may be expended in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 251, line 15, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not more than $60,000 of the total amount appropriated by this section may be expended for salaries and traveling expenses of members of an "advisory tax board," to be appointed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. Under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the secretary of the commissioner may, and on the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the interpretation or administration of the internal-revenue laws. Such board shall have the power to summon witnesses, to take testimony, administer oaths, and require any person to produce books, papers, documents, or other papers relating to any matter under investigation by the board. Such board may be continued for two years.

Mr. SMOOT. In line 21 the word "of" should be stricken out where it occurs the second time and "or" should be inserted after the word "Secretary," so as to read: "with the approval of the Secretary, the Secretary or the commissioner may." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 253, line 23, before the word "Islands" to strike out "West Indian" and insert "Virgin" and after "Islands" to strike out "acquired from Denmark," so as to read:

SEC. 1304. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in the United States, upon articles coming into the United States from the Virgin Islands a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon like articles of domestic manufacture; such articles shipped from such islands to the United States shall be exempt from the payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of such islands: Provided, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in such islands, upon articles imported from the United States, a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in such islands upon like articles there manufactured; and such articles going into such islands from the United States shall be exempt from payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 254, to strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive, in the following words:

Whenever in the judgment of the commissioner necessary he may require any person, by notice served upon him, to make a return or such statements as he deems sufficient to show whether or not such person is liable to tax.

And to insert:

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require any person, whether liable to tax or not, to file returns of income or such statements as may be deemed by him to be sufficient to show whether or not such person is so liable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 256, after line 10, to strike out section 1308, as follows:

That, except as otherwise specially provided for in this act, whoever fails to make any return required by this act or the regulations made under authority thereof within the time prescribed or who makes any false or fraudulent return, and whoever evades or attempts to evade any tax imposed by this act or fails to collect or truly to account for and pay over any such tax, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, and in addition thereto a penalty of double the tax evaded, or not collected or accounted for and paid over, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) That any person required under Titles V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, or XII, to pay, or to collect, account for and pay over any tax, or required by law or regulations made under authority thereof to make a return or supply any information for the purposes of the computation, assessment, or collection of any such tax, who fails to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax, make any such return, or supply any such information at the time or times required by law or regulation shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000.

(b) Any person who willfully refuses to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax, make such return, or supply such information at the time or times required by law or regulation, or who willfully attempts in any manner to evade such tax shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, in addition to other penalties provided by law, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

(c) Any person who willfully refuses to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be liable to a penalty of the amount of the tax evaded or not paid, collected, or accounted for and paid over, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected: Provided, however, That no penalty shall be assessed under this subdivision for any offense for which a penalty may be assessed under authority of section 3176 of the Revised Statutes as amended, or of section 605 or 620 of this act, or for any offense for which a penalty has been recovered under section 3256 of the Revised Statutes.

(d) The term "person" as used in this section includes an officer or employee of a corporation or a member or employee of a partnership who, as such officer, employee, or member, is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1309, page 258, after line 12, to insert:

The commissioner, with such approval, may, by regulation, provide that any return required by Titles V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, or X to be under oath may, if the amount of the tax covered thereby is not in excess of $10, be signed or acknowledged before two witnesses instead of under oath.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1310, page 258, line 18, before the word "That," to insert "(a)," so as to read:

SEC. 1310. (a) That in the case of any overpayment or overcollection of any tax imposed by section 628 or 630 or by Title V, Title VIII, or Title IX the person making such overpayment or overcollection may take credit therefor against taxes due upon any monthly return and shall make refund of any excessive amount collected by him upon proper application by the person entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 259, to insert:

(b) Wherever in this act a tax is required to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of a sale, and such sale is made on credit, then, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax may, at the option of the vendor, be returned and paid by him to the United States as if paid to him by the purchaser at the time of the sale, and in such case the vendor shall have a right of action in any court of competent jurisdiction against the purchaser for the amount of the tax so returned and paid to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1312, page 259, line 24, after the word "under," to strike out "Title," and to insert "Titles"; and on page 260, line 5, after the word "price," to insert:

If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, the tax collected under this act shall be the tax in force on May 9, 1917.

So as to read:

SEC. 1312. (1) That (a) if any person has prior to May 9, 1917, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and (b) if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of such tax to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, the tax collected under this act shall be the tax in force on May 9, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 260, after line 8, to strike out:

(2) If (a) any person has prior to September 3, 1918, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Title VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and (b) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of the difference between such tax and the corresponding tax imposed by the revenue act of 1917 (or, in the case of articles in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by such act, the whole of the tax imposed by this act), then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of such difference (or, in the case of articles in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by such act, so much of the tax imposed by this act) as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(2) If (a) any person has prior to September 3, 1918, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by the revenue act of 1917, and (b) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of the tax imposed by this act, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of the tax imposed by this act, as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, no tax shall be collected under this act.

(3) If (a) any person has prior to September 3, 1918, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and in respect to which a corresponding tax was imposed by the revenue act of 1917, and (b) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of the difference between such tax and corresponding tax imposed by the revenue act of 1917, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of such difference as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, the tax collected under this act shall be the tax in force on September 3, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 261, line 24, before the words "corresponding tax," the word "the" is omitted and should be inserted, so as to read "the whole of the difference between such tax and the corresponding tax imposed." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 262, line 7, before the word "The," to strike out "(3)" and to insert "(4)," so as to make the clause read:

(4) The taxes payable by the vendee or lessee under this section shall be paid to the vendor or lessor at the time the sale or lease is consummated, and collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor or lessor in the same manner as provided in section 502.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 262, line 12, before the word "The," to strike out "(4)" and to insert "(5)," so as to make the clause read:

(5) The term "dealer" as used in this section includes a vendee who purchases any article with intent to use it in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1314, page 262, line 20, after the word "That," to strike out "under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary"; in line 21, after the word "par," to strike out "and" and to insert "with an adjustment for"; and on page 263, line 1, after the word "taxes," to insert "and any other taxes payable other than by stamp," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 1314. That collectors may receive, at par with an adjustment for accrued interest, certificates of indebtedness issued by the United States and uncertified checks in payment of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes and any other taxes payable other than by stamp, during such time and under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe; but if a check so received is not paid by the bank on which it is drawn the person by whom such check has been tendered shall remain liable for the payment of the tax and for all legal penalties and additions the same as if such check had not been tendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 263, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 1315. That section 3315 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3315. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, issue stamps for restamping packages of distilled spirits, tobacco, cigars, snuff, cigarettes, fermented liquors and wines which have been duly stamped but from which the stamps have been lost or destroyed by unavoidable accident."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 263, in line 18, to change the number of section "1315" to "1316."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 264, after line 21, to insert:

(c) That the paragraph of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, reading as follows:

"Refunding taxes illegally collected (internal revenue): To refund and pay back duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws" is hereby amended to read as follows:

"To refund and pay back duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, and to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes or penalties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, notwithstanding any limitations imposed by the act of June 20, 1874."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 265, line 10, to change the number of the section from "1316" to "1317," and after line 12 to insert:

SEC. 3164. It shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue having knowledge of any willful violation of any law of the United States relating to the revenue, within 30 days after coming into possession of such knowledge, to file with the district attorney of the district in which any fine, penalty, or forfeiture may be incurred, a statement of all the facts and circumstances of the case within his knowledge, together with the names of the witnesses, setting forth the provisions of law believed to be so violated on which reliance may be had for condemnation of conviction.

SEC. 3165. Every collector, deputy collector, internal-revenue agent, and internal-revenue officer assigned to duty under an internal-revenue agent, is authorized to administer oaths and to take evidence touching any part of the administration of the internal-revenue laws with which he is charged, or where such oaths and evidence are authorized by law or regulation authorized by law to be taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 270, in line 9, after the word "law," to insert "or by regulation made under authority of law"; on page 271, in line 8, after the word "tax," strike out "50" and insert "25"; and in line 13, after the word "tax," strike out "100" and insert "50," so as to read:

SEC. 3176. If any person, corporation, company, or association fails to make and file a return or list at the time prescribed by law or by regulation made under authority of law, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or deputy collector shall make the return or list from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise. In any such case the commissioner may, from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise, make a return or amend any return made by a collector or deputy collector. Any return or list so made and subscribed by the commissioner, or by a collector or deputy collector and approved by the commissioner, shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

If the failure to file a return or list is due to sickness or absence, the collector may allow such further time, not exceeding 30 days, for making and filing the return or list as he deems proper.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall determine and assess all taxes, other than stamp taxes, as to which returns or lists are so made under the provisions of this section. In case of any failure to make and file a return or list within the time prescribed by law, or prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the collector in pursuance of law, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 25 per cent of its amount, except that when a return is filed after such time and it is shown that the failure to file it was due to a reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, no such addition shall be made to the tax. In case a false or fraudulent return or list is willfully made, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 50 per cent of its amount.

The amount so added to any tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as part of the tax unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, falsity, or fraud, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 271, line 20, to change the number of the section from "1317" to "1318"; in line 21, after the word "this," to strike out "title" and insert "Act"; and at the top of page 272, to insert:

The district courts of the United States are hereby invested with such jurisdiction to make and issue, both in actions at law and suits in equity, writs and orders of injunction, and of ne exeat republica, orders appointing receivers, and such other orders and process, and to render such judgments and decrees, granting in proper cases both legal and equitable relief together, as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act. The remedies hereby provided are in addition to and not exclusive of any and all other remedies of the United States in such courts or otherwise to enforce such provisions.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 1318. That if any person is summoned under this act to appear, to testify, or to produce books, papers, or other data, the district court of the United States for the district in which such person resides shall have jurisdiction by appropriate process to compel such attendance, testimony, or production of books, papers, or other data.

The district courts of the United States are hereby invested with such jurisdiction to make and issue, both in actions at law and suits in equity, writs and orders of injunction, and of ne exeat republica, orders appointing receivers, and such other orders and process, and to render such judgments and decrees, granting in proper cases both legal and equitable relief together, as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this act. The remedies hereby provided are in addition to and not exclusive of any and all other remedies of the United States in such courts or otherwise to enforce such provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 272, line 12, to change the number of the section from "1318" to "1319."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 273, line 1, to change the number of the section from "1319" to "1320."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Secretary proceeds to read Title XIV, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to line 23, on page 272, where it reads, "and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both," it should read "and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both."

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, that amendment should be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section (1318) 1319, page 272, line 23, after the words "shall be," it is proposed to strike out the word "fined" and to insert the words "punished by a fine of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Title XIV—General provisions," in section 1400, page 273, line 17, after the first word "That," to strike out "any provision of any act inconsistent with any provision of this act is hereby repealed, subject to the limitations provided in subdivision (b)" and insert:

the following parts of acts are hereby repealed, subject to the limitations provided in subdivision (b):

(1) The following titles of the revenue act of 1916:
Title I (called "Income tax");
Title II (called "Estate tax");
Title III (called "Munitions manufacturers' tax"), as amended;
Title IV (called "Miscellaneous taxes").

(2) The following parts of the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917:
Title III (called "Estate tax");
Section 402 (called "Returns of dividends").

(3) The following titles of the revenue act of 1917:
Title I (called "War income tax");
Title II (called "War excess-profits tax");
Title III (called "War tax on beverages");
Title IV (called "War tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufactures thereof");
Title V (called "War tax on facilities furnished by public utilities, and insurance");
Title VI (called "War excise taxes");
Title VII (called "War tax on admissions and dues");
Title VIII (called "War stamp taxes");
Title IX (called "War estate tax");
Title X (called "Administrative provisions");
Title XII (called "Income-tax amendments").

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 275, line 1, after the word "Such," to strike out "provisions" and insert "parts of acts"; in line 7, after the word "such," to strike out "provision" and insert "part of an act"; in line 9, after the word "thereof," to insert "Provided, That, except as otherwise provided in this act, no taxes shall be collected under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917, or Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917, in respect to any period after December 31, 1917"; in line 14, before the word "collection," to insert the word "the"; in line 15, after the word "taxes," to insert "by the United States or by the collector from the executor of the decedent or out of the property of the decedent"; in line 19, after the word "amended," to insert "by the act entitled 'An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1917"; and in line 25, after the word "this," to strike out "Act: Provided further, That in" and insert "act," so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Such parts of acts shall remain in force for the assessment and collection of all taxes which have accrued thereunder, and for the imposition and collection of all penalties or forfeitures which have accrued and may accrue in relation to any such taxes, and except that the unexpended balance of any appropriation heretofore made and now available for the administration of any such part of an act shall be available for the administration of this act or the corresponding provision thereof: Provided, That, except as otherwise provided in this act, no taxes shall be collected under Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917, or Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917, in respect to any period after December 31, 1917: Provided further, That the assessment and the collection of all estate taxes by the United States or by the collector from the executor of the decedent or out of the property of the decedent, and the imposition and collection of all penalties or forfeitures, which have accrued under Title II of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, or Title IX of the revenue act of 1917, shall be according to the provisions of Title IV of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 276, to insert the word "In," so as to make the paragraph read:

In the case of any tax imposed by any part of an act herein repealed, if there is a tax imposed by this act in lieu thereof, the provision imposing such tax shall remain in force until the corresponding tax under this act takes effect under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 276, after line 5, to insert:

Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917 shall remain in force for the assessment and collection of the income tax in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, except as may be otherwise provided by their respective legislatures.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 276, after line 10, to insert:

SEC. 1401. That section 1100 of the revenue act of 1917 is hereby repealed, to take effect on July 1, 1919, and thereafter the rate of postage on all mail matter of the first class shall be the same as the rate in force on October 2, 1917: Provided, That letters written and mailed by soldiers, sailors, and marines assigned to duty in a foreign country engaged in the present war may be mailed free of postage, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster General.

Section 1107 of such act is hereby repealed, to take effect July 11, 1919.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] requested me to have one or both of these sections which relate to the postal rates go over. I think he referred only to that with reference to second-class matter, but I am not sure, and therefore I will ask that this section go over, and also that the other section go over when it is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the section just read by the Secretary will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 276, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 1402. (a) That section 1103 of the revenue act of 1917 is hereby repealed.

(b) Section 1101 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1919, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale, shall be 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the first and second zones applicable to fourth-class matter, and 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within any other zone."

(c) This section shall take effect July 1, 1919.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask to have that section passed over also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 277, line 13, to change the number of the section from "1401" to "1403."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 277, line 20, to change the number of the section from "1402" to "1404."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 278, line 1, to change the number of the section from "1403" to "1405."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 278, line 6, to change the number of the section from "1404" to "1406."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 278, line 8, to change the number of the section from "1405" to "1407."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am advised that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] desires to call up a bill which, I think, ought to be passed speedily, and I have therefore consented, and now ask, that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to laying aside the bill temporarily.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Mulkey	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thomas
Fletcher	Kirby	Pollock	Thompson
France	La Follette	Pomerene	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Ransdell	Trammell
Gay	Lewis	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gerry	Lodge	Shafroth	Walsh
Gronna	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Hardwick	McKellar	Simmons	Weeks
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] on official business of the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire at this time to announce the absence of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] on necessary business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with one small amendment, the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there is only one committee amendment, and I will hand a memorandum of it to the Secretary. I can read it here, however, if necessary. The amendment is, on lines 12 and 13, page 2, to strike out the words "the foregoing limitation of 10 days shall operate" and in lieu thereof to insert:

The time within which transportation shall be applied for shall be 20 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia, on behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to strike out "the foregoing limitation of 10 days shall operate" and in lieu thereof to insert:

The time within which transportation shall be applied for shall be 20 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section at the end of the bill, or to add, the following:

SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall apply to the men who were offered employment by an agent of the Department of Labor, and who were taken from their homes under a promise of six months' employment or more, but who were given less than 90 days' employment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer that amendment because I have received several letters from people who were brought East under a promise that they would be given a year's employment. Some of them were given only a week's employment, and some had employment for only 10 or 15 days. They were then discharged and forced to pay their way back home.

I want to read two or three of these letters. I have some 10 or 12 of them, but I will read only a few of them, so the Senate may know just how these men were treated:

BALTIMORE, MD., September 17, 1918.

Mr. C. CURTIS.

DEAR SIR: We came here from Independence, Kans. The Government agent there told us we would have a year's work, no matter whether the war stopped or not. Now, we are cut down $2.10 a day in our wages and five and one-half days a week, and we can not make both ends meet, as I have three small children at home.

What we want is our fares home. We have worked 24 days, and as we were misinformed as to the conditions here we would like to go back at once. I have never seen a fire since we came here and have caught the worst cold.

Please write at once. There are two of us.

I am, yours, MALCOLM HUME.

The second letter is as follows:

LARNED, KANS., November 2½, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On or about September 15 this year we were called on by the Government employment office of Hutchinson, Kans., to give up our employment and ship to Curtis Bay, Md., to work in ordnance depot, with the understanding that this work was just starting and that we would have one year's work. However, we found that the bulk of this work had been done earlier in the year and that said work was only an addition, and our employment only lasted seven days, minus two hours. We demanded our transportation home, and were told that there was nothing doing. We then came down to the District of Columbia and found 8 or 10 days' work on the housing proposition, and were laid off until the work was started at Twenty-first and B Streets, which was about 30 days. Working 3½ days, and that work shut down, leaving us less than fare home.

Someone has made a mistake, as we were not needed in that country at all, and we feel that it is no more than just that they reimburse us for our transportation home, which amounts to $50 each, as we were deprived of our earning capacity practically for two months and also forced to wire home and borrow money to return home on.

If you think this is due us, we ask you as our Representative to use your influence to get us that that is justly due us.

Thanking you for this favor.

Our address is:

L. E. RIGGS,
216 East Twelfth Street, Larned, Kans.
WALTER OREBAUGH,
Dodge City, Kans.

The third letter is as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., November 19, 1918.

Mr. CHARLES CURTIS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am writing you in regard to getting transportation back to Topeka. We was promised a long job with time and one-half for overtime and double time for Sunday. We got no Sunday work at all, and only getting in 44 hours a week; so you see it will be a hardship on us to have to pay our transportation back home. I thought perhaps you could get something done for us if anyone could. Hoping to hear from you at once in regard to the matter, I remain,

Yours, most truly, R. F. LANE,
710 West Fayette Street.

The fourth letter is as follows:

ARK CITY, November 18, 1918.

DEAR SIR: I will answer your letter I received yesterday and was glad to hear from you. I got a letter from Mr. Sterns and I answered it the next day, but I guess he never got it. I gave him all the details of my work. I told him I was at work at Curtis Bay for S. H. and M., and that I was at work on those magazines they was building there and that my number was 2712, and that the superintendent's name was Mr. Craft, and that my foreman's name was Mr. O. D. Lott—there may be more than one Lott there—they have the letter he wrote me there and also the receipts I got for my fare, and that I only got to work seven days and that I was sick all the way home and that I was under the doctor's care about two weeks after I got home, and that I had lost about five weeks' work, and that my family had to live all of that time, besides paying house rent and my fare home. Well, I will close for this time. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,

Yours, respectfully,

S. O. PAXTON,
415 North D Street, Ark City, Kans.

I took up this matter with the department and received in reply a letter which I will read. I may say that I referred Mr. Riggs's case and several others, some eight or ten, to the department. This is the reply:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, December 4, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Mr. Post has directed me to keep you informed of the state of the investigation into the case of Mr. L. E. Riggs, of Larned, Kans., which you referred to the department upon the 18th.

In response to telegraphic request, the director of employment for Kansas has made inquiries at Hutchinson regarding the complaint. His report states that no promise was made to the men with respect to any definite period of employment, but that the agent for the company which had the contract at Curtis Bay assured them that they would have several months' employment. An attempt is now being made to do something through the contractor. Regardless of the place where the blame is properly laid, the men have evidently been done an injustice which the department will do all in its power to right.

I shall keep you advised further.

Cordially, HUGH REID,
Private Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Since receiving this letter I have received another letter stating that they have no appropriation out of which they could pay transportation or reimburse these people, and that they have been unable to get anything out of the contractors.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very much in accord with the views of the Senator from Kansas, but I should like to suggest an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I will ask the Senator to wait until I finish my statement, and then I shall be perfectly willing to have the amendment considered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well; I will do that.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, the truth of the matter is that the representatives of the Government did tell these men that they would have a year's employment. I do not care what they say; it is not reasonable to believe that twelve or fifteen men, living in different communities, not having talked with each other, would write as to the promises that were made them, and all of them be mistaken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it was just on that point that I wished to make a suggestion, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to listen to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was going to suggest that perhaps in practically all of these cases it would be impossible to establish the fact that the men were promised six months' work. Now, we know that these advertisements were made, and that the men had reason to expect that they would obtain work for at least a reasonable length of time; and what I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Kansas was that we may avoid that difficulty by giving this right of transportation to all who have actually had less than 90 days of employment.

Mr. CURTIS. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; if the Senator will permit me, I have his amendment before me, and it reads as follows:

SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall apply to the men who were offered employment by an agent of the Department of Labor, and who were taken from their homes under a promise of 6 months' employment or more, but who were given less than 90 days' employment.

It will be difficult in many cases to establish a promise from the Department of Labor for at least six months' employment. From my own State I know a number of men were taken for the purpose of being employed in the war industry only a month or two before the armistice was signed, and they have had no opportunity for employment; but I doubt if you can establish the fact that in each of such cases there was a specific promise of not less than six months' employment. But whether there was or not, they went at the request of the Department of Labor, and went undoubtedly with the view that they would have employment for a considerable period of time.

I would suggest, therefore, that the Senator from Kansas eliminate from his amendment the words "six months," so that it will read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to the men who were offered employment by an agent of the Department of Labor, and who were taken from their homes under a promise of employment or work, but who were given less than 90 days' employment.

Mr. CURTIS. I will modify the amendment in that respect if the Senator will just erase the words "six months" with a pencil and send it to the desk.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator while the modification is taking place? Why does the Senator confine it to representations made by the Department of Labor?

Mr. CURTIS. Because in every case that was presented to me the party said agents of the Department of Labor made the representation.

Mr. NORRIS. It occurs to me that very likely there will be cases where the representation was made by representatives of other departments. Why should they not be covered here by striking out the words "Department of Labor" and saying "representatives of the Government"? If this happened in any other case, they ought to be reimbursed just the same as in the Department of Labor.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to have that modification made.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator from New Mexico, while he is modifying the amendment, to make it apply to all departments.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CURTIS. For a question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. For a question. I wish to know if the Senator's amendment covers the cases of the employment of men at the time the armistice was signed, or would it cover employees of the Government who came here from time to time, possibly stayed only a few days, and left of their own accord? I have been told that there were hundreds every day leaving the employ of the Government when they were really needed, and that they were going home. It does not seem to me that this amendment should apply to them.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment was intended to apply only to such men as left home under the promise of being given work, men who were promised work for a long period, and then, after working for a week or more, were notified that there was no more work for them, and who were forced to go back home.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I find no fault with such a provision as that.

Mr. CURTIS. That was the case with the gentleman who called upon me. As I stated, I have received some 12 letters from men who were in that situation. One of them was an expert brick mason. He was taken to Curtis Bay under an agreement that he would have at least one year's work, six days a week, with extra pay for Sunday and for overtime. He was limited to five and one-half days a week. Then he was given employment for less than 30 days, and he had to pay his expenses back home. I take it that if you are going to pay the expenses of clerks who came here without any promise as to the length of time they would be employed, you ought in fairness pay these laboring men their expenses back home who do not receive as large salaries. They are not asking for an extra month's pay. They have no extra month's pay. In fact, some of them came here and worked only seven days.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Knowing the Senator from Kansas as well as I do, I want to inquire why he is so ungallant as to confine the benefits of his amendment to men alone?

Mr. CURTIS. I think these outside places were given only to men, and women were employed mostly here in Washington, and they are provided for in the original bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the Senator tell us whether any estimate has been made as to how much money it is going to take to meet the requirements of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator will have to ask the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is impossible to make an estimate of any value. We have no idea how many of these people will have to be dispensed with or what their transportation home may cost. I think, at a rough estimate, $200,000 will probably be required.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator believe that there will be anybody who came here to work for the Government and chose to return home for any cause who would not receive this compensation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course, there are many of them who will not receive transportation. It will be only those who were brought here for war service and whose services have been dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is it not true that an appeal was made to all parties throughout the country for help, and therefore everybody can claim that he or she came here under the representation held out by the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Suppose that is true. Of course, they came here under the representation that the Government needed help, by advertisement and by the statements of agents. People came here at the call of the Government and rendered faithful service until the war ended, and when the Government discharges them it ought to pay their expenses home. The Senator can not discharge his coachman or his cook without notice or without paying them something for it. When a man pays wages he can not employ people and discharge them summarily and pay no attention to them whatsoever. This does not go that far. This permits them to get back home. It does not give the money to buy the ticket, but furnishes transportation which is nontransferable and must be used in five days.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is it not a fact that the object of the bill is largely to remove from the District people who are now encumbering it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is a strong inducement with me, but in addition it is an act of justice to give transportation to people who were brought here and put in the Government service and abruptly and summarily dismissed from that service. It simply pays their transportation home, and I think it is a very just provision.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt there are many cases where that is true. I do know, however, as I think the Senator and everybody else knows, that people from all over the United States gave up their jobs at home with the idea that it would be better to work in Washington. Many of them were tired of the job they had on hand and came here, and left after a little while of their own motion. They were not forced to go.

Is it supposed that the bill can be so construed as to pay the expenses back home, sleeping-car expenses included, of thousands of employees who have been here on a sort of vacation? It is a fact that there are thousands of employees in the service of the Government who have been of absolutely no value whatever to the Government. There is no one who has visited the departments who has not found that to be true.

I want to be as generous as anybody can be, but to present a blanket proposition to pay the expenses back home of thousands of employees, without any information as to what the drain upon the Treasury will be, it seems to me, is a question at this time that ought to have more consideration than has been presented to the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator kindly yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will wait until the Senator gets through and then I will answer the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, first I want to say to the Senator from Virginia that the amendment I have offered only applies to men who were brought here under representations of the agents of the Government and were not given work but who were willing to work. Some of these men, as I stated, were experts—brick masons, carpenters, plasterers—and they were told they were slackers if they did not come East to work for the concerns that were constructing buildings for the Government. They gave up good places at home and came East and were not permitted to work long enough to earn money to buy tickets home. As was said by one of these men, he had to wire home to get the money to buy his ticket. In each case the cost of transportation back home is given and in no case was sleeping-car fare included; all of us who travel know what sleeping-car tickets cost. I will state that I bought a ticket home the other day with sleeping-car accommodations and it cost me $57.72. These men say that their transportation home, many of them living farther than Topeka, was about $50.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I simply want to answer the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The bill as reported from the committee provides only for parties employed by the Government since the declaration of war whose employment has been terminated by the Government without delinquency or misconduct on their part. They are people who came here and were employed on war work and have been discharged from the service of the Government without any delinquency on their part. It applies to those engaged in war work summarily dismissed from service without notice and simply gives them transportation home. It is transportation and no money. It is nontransferable. The transportation is issued to the employee, and he can not transfer it. He must use it within five days after issuance. It does seem to me it is a very just thing to compensate these people by giving them the cost of transportation back home when they have come here and worked for the Government faithfully and have been discharged from the service summarily without any delinquency or fault on their part whatever.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if it is the purpose of the bill to compel bureau or departmental officials to do their duty and to discharge those who are not needed by the Government—if it is necessary to do that by passing the bill—it might have my approval. But presumably departmental officers are doing their duty in this respect and are discharging employees as rapidly as it can be done.

The confusion that will arise out of this measure is well illustrated by the questions that have been asked here relating to the amendment that has been offered here by the Senator from Kansas. If we accept his amendment—and it seems on the face of it to be just—there will be innumerable similar instances in which the Government will have made a precedent that will justify their demands being acceded to.

Most of these people have come to Washington because they have been allured here by the higher wages and the shorter hours that they could obtain. They have come very largely of their own free will. I do not mean to detract from the service which they have performed, yet everybody knows that there have been a very large number of incompetents here, untrained men and women who have been receiving very high compensation. There can not be any obligation on the part of the Government to pay a bonus to those who have not performed the very highest quality of service.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. WEEKS. I am speaking of bonuses. If we are going to pay these employees of the Government a bonus, we should pay others. These people, those employed in Washington, for example, have been receiving the same wages as the old and trained clerks who are in the regular service, and more wages in many cases, and very frequently, if not almost invariably, they have not been as efficient.

There is no estimate made of the cost of this measure. All the Senator from Virginia says is that it may amount to several hundred thousand dollars. I maintain that the present condition of the finances of the country do not warrant Congress in paying bonuses to anyone which the Government has not obligated itself to do. If there are Government employees who have been making promises to people to come here which they had no right or justification in doing those employees should be punished for so doing. It should not be the business of the Government to appropriate money to carry out promises which the promiser had no authority for making. That is not a course that ought to be followed.

I do not know that other Senators agree with me at all in this matter, but I must say that in my judgment we are taking an ill-advised step to pass such legislation as this, which has no estimate and which I believe is unjustifiable. I shall vote against the bill.

I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the situation here in Washington is one of the least of the evils. There was made an effort throughout the entire country to get laborers for the munition plants and that sort of thing, and they practically levied an assessment upon the various States of the country, specified the number of men whom they wanted from each State. I know that in my own State, just within two or three weeks of the signing of the armistice, a number of men were gotten to go out of that State, through an appeal to their patriotism day after day, to work in the munition plants, and they looked upon it as simply answering a demand and an appeal from the Government. They were called upon by their sense of patriotism to do it. They were promised this work, or, at any rate, the ability to get the work was held out to them, and they left their ordinary vocations and went at the personal solicitation of some representative of the Department of Labor. There was a labor agent appointed for each State in the Union, I believe, certainly in the Western States, and that State labor commissioner found the number of men who were expected from that State, and he, through his subagent, made it his particular duty to secure the requisite number.

Those men, under those circumstances, went into this employment. Now, after the armistice is signed the work has ceased and they are away from home. Many of them were poor men to begin with, and why should they be called upon to suffer, under those particular circumstances, more than any other citizens of the country? Why should they not be made whole in that respect, so long as the taxpayers of the country are able to make them whole? We can limit the matter so as not to include those referred to by the Senator from Michigan, who voluntarily separated themselves from the Government service, and have it apply only to those who are discharged by the Government when their services are no longer needed.

Mr. WEEKS. I was not aware of any such propaganda as that described by the Senator from New Mexico. Quite likely the conditions in his State are somewhat different from what they are in mine or in the locality where I live, where, generally speaking, additional employees in munitions factories and other places have come from that immediate neighborhood or from the same State. But, in any case, it does not seem to me that a reasoning man could have given up his employment in his own locality to come to Washington or to any other place without considering that that employment must cease as soon as the war ended, and if he had been looking after his own interests and those of the Government as well he would have stipulated at that time that his transportation should be paid to and from the place where he was to be employed. If agents of the Department of Labor were inducing men to leave their homes and go to a place where they could be employed they should have had authority to stipulate in that agreement that the transportation of those men should be paid.

These post facto methods of taking money out of the Treasury in a way that is going to make a precedent to be followed in other cases do not and never have appealed to me, and I object to its being done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suppose the real merit of the bill lies in the fact that it may induce the departments to dispense with the services of some of the employees after their services have really ended. I do not state this as showing a universal practice, but in two instances within the last few days employees of the Government have told me that they have reported to the heads of the department that they felt that the work for which they had been called here was finished; that the particular work which they were doing was at an end; and that they desired to quit and return home, and both individuals were discouraged from separating themselves from the pay roll and were asked to wait to see if they could not find something else for them to do; and one waited a week without doing anything.

I can not understand the disposition of the department to retain these employees. I do not know that this is anything like a general practice, but it calls my attention to the fact that there ought to be some way to encourage the department to let people go home when they have finished their work, especially when they desire to go.

Mr. President, the bill provides that for three months and a half these parties may continue in the employ of the Government and receive the benefits of the bill. Why would it not be a good idea to fix the limit of the bill at January 15, 1919, so that the departments and the people who are interested in getting the money out of the bill will look about and see whether there is any necessity for their staying here? I can not see why you should postpone it until the 31st of March, three months and a half. While it has this merit, that it will encourage them to go and get rid of them in that way, and perhaps save the Government, it will not do so if we pay their way and still continue to employ them two or three months after their services are really ended.

I have no doubt at all that there are hundreds and hundreds of these employees who could leave here to-morrow and the Government would be just as well off. I am not speaking disrespectfully of their services at all, but because their services have ended.

I understand there is an amendment pending.

Mr. CURTIS. There is.

Mr. BORAH. When that amendment is disposed of I am going to offer an amendment to strike out "March 31" and insert "January 15."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I did not make any allusion to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which seemed to be based on the statement that agents of the Government had promised these people employment for a specific time. Everybody knows that there was not any officer or agent of the Government authorized to make any such promise. It is simply ludicrous for them to expect Congress to appropriate money to fulfill promises made by irresponsible agents of the Government throughout the country, and that is all it is.

Mr. President, the gist of this whole matter is that it appealed to me—and I think it will appeal to most people—to make some provision for the young women who have been doing war work in this city; and it is chiefly the women, it is not the men. If only the men were concerned, I would never have voted to report the bill. Very few men will be benefited by it. It is intended to relieve young women who have been here doing war work in this city and find their employment suddenly ended; and the bill provides that it must be ended by the Government and not by themselves, that it must be without any fault or delinquency whatever on their part.

I submit to Senators that this should be done for the young women who have come here during the war period to do work for the Government at the solicitation of the Government, who have been employed by the Government and who have worked faithfully and honestly until the Government discharges them, and who have not been delinquent in any respect. The bill provides that none whose relations with the Government are severed because of delinquency on their part shall have any benefit under the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that as I understand the bill there is no provision made as to the length of time of service. In other words, if one served since April 6 and received $1,400 a year, that person would be entitled to his or her cost of transportation to his or her home.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. Heretofore we have never granted that right to others who were discharged from month to month in all our departments. Does not the Senator think those who have earned $1,400 to $1,800 a year, or $150 a month, could have saved enough in six or eight months to have bought their tickets home?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that those receiving more than $1,400 a year are not included in the terms of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Even as to those who are receiving $1,400 and have been here a year and a half; have not those persons earned enough to pay $50 transportation back to their homes?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The expenses of living in Washington have been very great.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is equally great to all others who have been living here.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is true. I do not say that if these young women had been very economical they might not have saved money enough to get home, but they were brought here by the Government; they have done faithful work; they are not dropped for their delinquencies or anything of that sort whatsoever, but are discharged by the Government summarily and unexpectedly, and I say some consideration should be paid to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As I said just now to the Senator from Michigan, the Senator could not discharge his coachman or cook under the law without a month's notice or without paying a month's wages.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to allow the statement that they have done faithful work to go unchallenged.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If they have not——

Mr. McCUMBER. One moment. If the Senator means that they were willing to do faithful work, I will accept that statement, but as a matter of fact we have had 50 per cent more clerks than could be used, and a great many of them were lying around and doing almost nothing, some of them not half a day's work each day, simply because there were too many of them. They were crowded in the offices, and there was no room for them. I am willing to pay those the cost of sending them back home.

I am not criticizing the bill because of that, but I do criticize the method of employing 50 per cent more than we need in our departments. I especially think the bill is meritorious because I know a great many people had only just arrived here and had to do a week's work and were discharged. Of course, we should send them back home and pay their expenses home, but I do not want it to go unchallenged that all these people here had plenty of work to do.

Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will be glad if the Senator will wait until I get through with my remarks.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Senator had concluded. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is young women chiefly and not men who compose the class intended to be benefited by the bill, and those who make up the class under the provisions of the bill are the young women who are here working, some of them, it is true, at a fair compensation, but a great many of them in these war times at $75 a month. For instance, I know personally of a young woman of high qualifications who has been working for $75 a month, with the expense of living in the city doubled. I am not surprised that they find themselves when leaving the Government service without any money to buy a ticket home.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had brought to my attention the fact that there are a great many young women here who are making from $900 to $1,000 a year, who thought they were going to work 12 months longer and have not saved anything. I am not defending their having been brought here. I think the Government would have been just as well off if 25 per cent of them had never come, and they would have been a great deal better off if they had stayed at home. Every time one writes to me from my State about coming I write back, "Do not come; you are better off at home. I urge you to stay."

But I want to say to the Senator that I know there are a great many of these girls who do not get more than $900 to $1,000 a year. They thought they were here for at least 12 months more, and they have not saved anything. I believe it is a wise course to help them to go home, and I should be glad to have them go by the early part of January.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to say that the fact is that these ladies are here without money and they can not get home unless they are provided with money by the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is absolutely true. The girl who has tried to live here for nine months past on $900 could not have saved anything. The Government is to blame for bringing them here; that is the truth about it. There was not any necessity for bringing a great many of them here. Government officials had no business advertising for them and begging them to come. A good many of them came because they thought——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Virginia yielded to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did, and I am not complaining at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I merely wish to make this further statement. We advertised all over the country, urging them to come, and a good many of these girls really thought they were coming here to work and to help whip the Germans just as were the boys who went into the Army. I did not agree with them. I thought they would have better helped to whip the Germans if they had stayed at home. The Government, however, is responsible for their presence here, and I think it is as little now as we can do to help these girls, if they quit work by the middle of January, to go home. I hope Senators will vote for that. The truth is, I should have been willing to give them 30 days' pay and transportation home.

I thank the Senator from Virginia for yielding to me. I merely wanted to make the statement which I have made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that, in addition to the reasons he has given in favor of this legislation, it strikes me that he might well have also stated that another reason why a great many of these girls find themselves now without money enough to go home is that they have subscribed for bonds, and are now paying for those bonds on the installment plan. They have answered the call of the Government in that respect. I presume that 95 per cent of them—perhaps 99 per cent of them—have subscribed to liberty bonds. That is one of the reasons why they find themselves without money. They have not only subscribed for other issues, but they have subscribed for bonds of the fourth loan, for which they are now paying on the installment plan.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, no doubt there has been some surplus of clerks in Washington, but we have all got into the habit of making very reckless charges about there being two or three times as many clerks here as are needed. I do not believe it. I believe there has been some abuse in that regard, but surely we can not visit that on these girls who have, in my opinion, done faithful, honest, and efficient work. The young women employees in the departments in this city are, so far as I know, entitled to thanks and commendation from the country for the excellent work which they have done. They now find themselves suddenly dropped from the pay roll; they are here in the city of Washington without means to get home. I can not think it possible that any considerable number of Senators on the floor of the Senate will be willing to deny them transportation back home when their services are suddenly and unexpectedly dispensed with. As I said a moment ago, one can not dispense with the services of his coachman or his cook in that way. By the law of the land you are compelled to give them a month's notice or pay them a month's wages.

These young ladies who are working for the Government in these departments and are summarily ordered home, under the provisions of this bill will not receive transportation home if they have been delinquent in any respect. The bill provides on its face that they must be dismissed by the Government; they are not leaving voluntarily, but in cases where they have been guilty of no negligence or fault of any sort, but are suddenly and unexpectedly dismissed from the service, they are to be given transportation home.

I can not conceive of any good reason why that should not be done. I think I may safely say that every Senator on this floor knows that if there are any who have been struggling to keep down expenses and to protect the Government Treasury from unjust raids, I am one of those who have been engaged in that work; and yet I never more earnestly advocated anything in my life than I now advocate that these young women who came here to serve the Government and have done so faithfully be transported to their homes. They have been suddenly discharged, and in justice to themselves and in accordance with the usages of the country and of all civilized countries, they ought not to be summarily dismissed without any consideration whatever. We merely furnish them transportation home; it is not money which is to be given to them, but it is a ticket home, which is nontransferable, and a penalty of $100 is imposed on any one of them who tries to sell the ticket. They are also required to use the ticket within five days after they have received it. We thus do justice to these young ladies, and at the same time relieve this city from a congestion which is very serious, very painful, and very inconvenient to all the people who live here or who have to come here for any purpose.

I never presented a bill to the Senate in my life that I felt was more meritorious and more just than this bill to transport these young women to their homes when they have come here to serve the Government, and have served it faithfully. No one can receive any benefit under the provisions of the bill unless her work has been faithful and satisfactory.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think that the passage of this measure will lead to a better treatment of the whole matter, resulting in the earlier discharge of these employees? Many of them lack the money with which to get home, and so the disposition on the part of those in the department under whom they are working will be to retain them. Will this not have the effect of securing the discharge of such employees earlier and sending them home, and in that way work in the interest of economy?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no doubt of it. If I were the head of one of the departments I have no hesitation in saying that I would put off as long as I could the discharge of one of these young women when she had done faithful work and I knew that she was without the means with which to get home.

Mr. WARREN. So would I. And now, Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia another question. Is it not better for the morale of the departments to dispense with the services of these no longer needed employees at as early a date as possible, and, in doing so, to accord them the same consideration which they would receive if they were in private employment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Beyond a doubt.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator from Virginia has said, nobody turns his employees out without a crust; they do not turn them out without having the means to get home. It seems to me that the departments ought to immediately proceed to reduce their force to the lowest possible point. That would be better for the finances of the Government, better for the clerks who are to be discharged, and better for the morale and the work of the employees who still remain in the departments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Beyond a doubt that is true. Before I take my seat, let me say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who, I think, suggested an amendment to limit the operation of this bill to January, that a great many of these young women can not be dispensed with, though many of them can be.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let us put the date at January 15. It will not take long to pass another bill. If we put it over until the 31st day of March the discharge of these employees will be very slow until about the 25th day of March.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Idaho, Mr. President, that 5,000 of these employees have been discharged, and I do not think there is any reason to suppose that the discharge of others will be very slow. I think there is an earnest desire in all of the departments to dispense with the services of the employees who are useless. I think we had better not take "two bites at a cherry"; that we had better provide to meet this evil while we are at it. The demonstration here this evening shows that it is not so certain about our passing another bill. When this bill shall have been passed I think Congress will feel that it has met its responsibility and will not be likely to pass another. I think the bill as it passed the other House and as it has been reported from the Senate committee makes a very reasonable provision for this whole matter. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not insist on an amendment, but will let the bill go through as it is. I think it relieves a real necessity, an urgent and immediate necessity; that it is demanded by justice and fair dealing. The bill ought to be passed for that reason, as well as for the purpose of relieving the congestion in this city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, but I was waiting until the Senator from Virginia had completed his remarks.

Mr. President, I do not think there is anyone in the Senate who objects to the passage of this bill in a proper form. Personally I can see quite a little difference, however, between granting this right to those who have served a year and a half and those who have served but three weeks. I know a couple of girls who came from my State who have only served three weeks, who now find that they must return home. If the Government pays the price of their tickets one way they will not be even; they will still be at a loss.

There ought to be some limitation, it seems to me; a general stopping point. The Senator, of course, thinks that it ought to be granted to everyone who has been in the service since the 6th day of April, 1917. I think that I ought to ask, in all fairness, why that right ought not to be also granted to the men who have come here to labor and who have been here for nine months or over?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This legislation is not limited to women. I merely stated that they were to be its chief beneficiaries.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know; but here is an amendment that applies to laborers; and as it applies to laborers, I suppose that most of them are men, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas provides that only those may receive the benefit of the legislation who have secured less than 90 days' work.

Mr. President, I think probably one of the strongest arguments against the claim of the suffragettes that the women of the country can not receive fair consideration by the male sex is the very fact that you grant them a privilege far more liberal for them than you are proposing to grant to the laborers. The laborers who came down here, according to the statement of the Senator from Kansas, were actually receiving very much less per diem than these girls were receiving, and it costs just exactly as much for one of these men to go back to Kansas as it would to send women back to Kansas. Why should you make the distinction by granting the right to but one class? I assume that if you adopt this amendment you are making a different rule—a far less favorable rule—wherever it applies to laborers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I inserted in my amendment the limit of 90 days because in all of the letters received by me it was stated that none of the men had been given over 30 days' work, and I thought if I limited it to 90 days it would cover the cases complained of and that it would be fair to all concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the Senator from Kansas can not fail to see the inconsistency in the bill itself, as it will be should his amendment be adopted, for it will then provide that Government employees receiving $1,400 a year will receive this benefit, even though they have rendered service for a year and a half, while those who came down here and could only get 95 days' Government work must pay their own way back. I certainly think it is very far from right.

But what I rose for particularly, Mr. President, was to call the Senator's attention to what I believe is an error in his amendment that ought to be corrected. The amendment proposes to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the provisions in this act shall apply to the men who were offered employment by an agent of the Department of Labor or other governmental department, and who were taken from their homes under a promise of employment, but who were given less than 90 days' employment.

What is meant by the words "given less than 90 days' employment"? If one leaves his employment after 10 days or 3 days because he does not like the kind of work, he has had less than 90 days' employment. I suggest to the Senator that we ought not to grant this privilege to those who refused to perform any service; and I suggest as an amendment that he strike out the words "who were given less than 90 days' employment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "who were unable to secure more than 90 days' service under Government employment." That would make clear and definite that it applies only to those who did not leave of their own volition.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the difficulty with the Senator's amendment is that these people did not work for the Government after they were brought East. They were induced to leave home at the request of Government agents to work for private concerns which were engaged on Government contracts.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then, if they were not employed under the Government, let it read, "who were unable to secure more than 90 days of such service." What I want to do is to protect the Government against sending back to Idaho or to California or anywhere else those who came here and refused to work when they got here.

Mr. CURTIS. In answer to a question asked by one of the Senators on the other side, I stated that it was my intention to cover only such persons as had come East in good faith and had been deprived of employment by reason of the fact that there was nothing for them to do. I did not intend that the amendment should apply to those who left their employment of their own volition, and so far as I am concerned I will accept any amendment the Senator may suggest along that line.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I suggest that there be stricken out the words "but who were given less than 90 days' employment" and insert "but who were unable to secure more than 90 days' employment."

Mr. CURTIS. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas what legal authority is possessed by any representative of the Government to guarantee anybody a year's work?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no such authority reposed in anyone; but the Senator will remember, if he visited any of the motion-picture shows, that there was thrown on the screen an invitation to labor not to accept any position except one tendered through an agent of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I saw that.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, the Four Minute Men, who were sent out to talk to labor, stated to the men that they would be unpatriotic if they accepted any employment that was not tendered them through the Government; and agents of the Government, apparently properly authorized, appealed to men in Kansas, Colorado, and other States, saying, "If you will go East and work in the factories or help erect buildings, you will have at least one year's employment," and they went for that reason and with that understanding.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator whether, if they had that power and authority, we should not pay these men for one year's work instead of sending them home?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not. They will be perfectly satisfied if they get their transportation home. As one man said, he had lost five weeks, but he asked nothing for that.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator how many men this amendment will probably cover?

Mr. CURTIS. I stated a moment ago that I did not know; but I have in my possession letters from 12 men.

Mr. THOMAS. Would this amendment cover the case of men who had never come to Washington at all, but who, for example, were sent from San Francisco to Seattle or from Denver to Topeka?

Mr. CURTIS. This amendment is intended to cover just that class of men. The men I have in mind went to Curtis Bay, Md., instead of coming to Washington.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, does not the Senator see that this amendment, if given such general application, would in all probability result in great abuse of a kind which it would be practically impossible for the Government to guard against, and that it would entail an enormous additional charge upon the Treasury?

Mr. CURTIS. Well, Mr. President, the men would be required to make a showing that they left their homes and reported at some other place and had done some work.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the easiest thing in the world to do.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, the matter could be traced back to the State from which they came, or their testimony could be taken. It would be easy to show whether or not they were asking for the relief in good faith.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the easiest thing in the world to do, and it is quite as easy to assume that the statement would be made that they were promised in some way a year's work. Apart from the fact that I think this bill is entirely wrong, my principal objection to this amendment is that it opens the door for enormous probability of abuse, and will result in all probability in the expenditure by the Government of several million dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move to strike out the words "March 31," in line 14, on page 1, and insert in lieu thereof "January 15."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "March 31" and in lieu thereof to insert "January 15."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, just a moment. I merely wish to say that I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is impossible for these clerks to get through with the necessary work of the Government by the 15th of January. If we are going to give them any relief, I do hope we will give them relief that will amount to something.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the clerks are needed here until the 31st of March, there is very little reason for giving them transportation home. The theory is that they are being suddenly discharged by reason of the unexpected condition which has arisen. There are many of them, hundreds of them, who will go now if they understand that they must go now or not get transportation home. The amendment I have offered would give a month in which the services of these people could be dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There are 30,000 of them who are not needed permanently, but the Government can not dispense with the services of 30,000 of these clerks within the next month.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course we will not dispense with the services of 30,000 clerks within the next month, but we could dispense very easily, in my judgment, with the services of 10,000 of them, and perhaps that is all whose services will be dispensed with until the departments are forced to discharge them all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to call attention to another matter in this connection. We have started out here apparently with a view to economizing in a reasonable way in governmental expenditures. I am perfectly willing to pay the transportation home of the clerks if they are going home, and going at once or as soon as the Government is through with their services; but I am not willing that they shall stay here and work for two or three months and then have the Government pay their way home, taking into consideration the kind of work which will be performed for the next two or three months. There is not sufficient disposition on the part of the departments to curtail these expenses. The same spirit of extravagance which characterizes bureaucracy at all times characterizes it now, and unless we ourselves fix a limit there will be no limit put on in regard to these matters.

I was told a few days ago, Mr. President, that when the war ended the Government had typewriting machines piled up in the different places by the hundreds, and even by the thousands, and there was a question as to what could be done with those typewriters—how they could be disposed of. Now, I learn from the Government Advertiser, which has come in within the last two days, that the Government has just purchased 385 Remington and 2,510 Underwood typewriters, at a cost of $170,387.50, with literally hundreds or thousands of typewriters piled up in different places in Washington, some of them never used at all and some of them just as good as they were when they were new. That is the kind of shameless extravagance that is going on here all the time. Why continue this relief for two or three months, when these girls should be home for Christmas and serve their Government and their families and themselves by being at home? Let us put a limit and start the hegira now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia a question about this bill. The Senator has presented a strong case, stating that many of these employees are practically without means; that they have not any funds with which to return home; that we want to get rid of them; and that it is necessary to pass this bill in order to accomplish that purpose. How is this bill going to become a law? Does the Senator know?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am concerned about the exercise of my own duty; I am not troubling myself about the exercise of the presidential duty. If the Senator wants to know anything about that, he has the same opportunity to find out that I have.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, it is a mighty poor one that I have.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, I have none. I do not know at all. I merely know that I have advocated and propose to continue to advocate such bills as I think are just and right, and if they fail to become laws it will be through no fault of mine. My duty is finished when I vote for them in the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not question the sincerity of the Senator, and I quite agree with him that it is proper for Congress to proceed to discharge its duty as it sees fit; but I am nevertheless curious in regard to this matter, and I thought the Senator might be able to enlighten me, especially as he is urging, as other Senators have urged, emergency legislation and insisting that something must be done now. It is in my thought, however, that nothing can be done now, for the President does not expect to get back here until spring, which will be after these people have suffered and perhaps died—too late for this relief to reach them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator apparently knows more about that than I do. I do not know whether the President will be back in the spring or before that time. I am not speaking for the President; I do not know when he will return; but I propose to discharge my duty on the floor and rely on him to discharge his in the Executive chair.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia, if this bill is passed, is it at all likely that the payments under it will be made within any reasonable time? If they are not made quicker than payments are made under the war-risk insurance act, the beneficiaries of the bill will hardly get any relief from it.

In this connection, Mr. President, I should like to read a telegram from Fairmont, W. Va., dated to-day and directed to me, as follows:

Many wives and mothers of men in the service have received no funds from the War-Risk Bureau for four months. They do not want loans from the Red Cross, but the money due them from the Government. As Christmas draws near the situation becomes critical. Can you help us?

Mrs. Jos. Rosier,
Chairman Civil Relief.

It seems that the War-Risk Bureau are behind four months in the payments to the beneficiaries who are the dependents of soldiers serving on the other side, and there is great complaint upon that score. While we are taking care of the temporary clerks in the departments here, many of whom are deserving, something should be done, if possible, to remedy this situation which is very acute and very critical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit a minority report (S. Rept. 617, Pt. 5) upon the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views of the Senator will be received and printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 14, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 13 (legislative day of December 12), 1918.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Huston Thompson, of Colorado, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission for the term expiring September 25, 1919, vice Harris, resigned.

REJECTIONS.

Executive nominations rejected by the Senate December 13 (legislative day of December 12), 1918.

POSTMASTERS.

GEORGIA.

Henry M. Miller, Colquitt.
Walter W. Daves, Cartersville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth. We thank Thee, O God, for the testimony of Thy truth upon the earth, and ask Thee to bless us in our part of its propagation. We would thank Thee this morning that in Thy providence the President of the United States has arrived safely overseas. We pray that in the councils of the nations he may be guided by wisdom, truth, and courage. Be with us this day, we pray Thee, in the homeland. Guide our steps aright and lead us into paths of service and of light, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRAND, for four days, on account of illness.

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. LUNN, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ASHBROOK, indefinitely, on account of the illness of his wife.

To Mr. PRICE, for 10 days, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4785. An act to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East; and

S. J. Res. 194. Joint resolution directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4785. An act to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. J. Res. 194. Joint resolution directing the United States Housing Corporation to suspend work upon all projects where construction is not more than 75 per cent completed and to cancel all contracts for furniture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PAY OF WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the other day I called attention to a telegram I had received from West Baden, Ind., stating that the soldiers at the hospital had not been paid for many months. Yesterday the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] inserted in the RECORD a letter from Gen. Lord giving his statement in reference to the matter of the pay of overseas soldiers, and saying that he would have an officer sent to West Baden. I received yesterday a telegram from Virginia relating to the same subject which I would like to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RICHMOND, VA., December 12, 1918.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Washington, D. C.:

Your statement in Congress in regard to pay of wounded men is absolutely confirmed by men returned to hospital here. Men with whom I have talked stated that they are in arrears from 5 to 11 months. Large proportion of them are entirely without money except such as have telegraphed for and received money from home. Since their return the people of Richmond who know of this condition are outraged at the treatment of the men at the hands of the War Department, and sincerely hope that your action in Congress will cause the injustice to be remedied.

HENRY E. BASKERVILLE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the difficulties which the War Department encounters in paying these men who are detached from their regular organizations. And yet it does seem to me that they ought to find a way by such investigation as may be necessary to pay at least something to all the men returned and sent to the hospitals, so that a man at a hospital may have at least a little money. Gen. Lord explains what they are doing, but unless the men are paid the injustice exists.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I agree fully with the gentleman from Illinois that every effort possible ought to be made to get the money to these men, and especially those in the hospitals, where they ought to have all the assistance possible. But does not the gentleman realize that everything possible is being done, and does not the gentleman know that Gen. Lord is one of the ablest men in this country and that he is responsible to the War Department for this particular work? I want to say that I do not think there is any more intelligent, patriotic, or efficient man in the War Department than Gen. Lord.

Mr. MANN. I never heard of Gen. Lord until I saw his name in print. But if he is able and efficient, as I have no doubt he is, and if he is an able executive Army officer, and I have no doubt of that, yet the fact remains that these men are not being paid. Gen. Lord or the Secretary of War, or somebody else, ought to change the present arrangements so that they can be paid.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, I have a letter from a soldier this morning, and he sets forth the fact that he made an allotment to his wife, that his allotment has been deducted from his pay, but that she has not had a dollar since last July and neither has he.

Mr. DOWELL. The statement made by the gentleman from Illinois is not only true in that case, but in thousands of other cases. It seems that this department has not made any attempt to pay the wives of soldiers, and they will not even answer the correspondence when these wives send letters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes along the line suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the present moment, in the Committee on Appropriations, before the legislative subcommittee, hearings are in progress, and have been since 10.30 this morning, for appropriations for the War Risk Bureau. Mr. Herbert Brown, now in charge of that work, has been testifying as to the difficulties that have been encountered by the bureau in making allotment pay to the wives and to the dependents of our enlisted soldiers. There have been great difficulties, according to his testimony, confronting the bureau in the allotment of pay to wives. There are instances where pay has not come to the wives of the soldiers of our enlisted men. They are rare, but are occasioned by the difficulties of administration. These mistakes are being ironed out. There is a tremendous task imposed on the bureau in this award of allotment of 4,000,000 soldiers. According to the testimony one-third of the entire enlisted force have made allotments to wives and dependent mothers. In many cases, as I recollect, 18,000 allotments to dependents in class B, so called, mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters, had to be canceled because they were not warranted by the facts, which involved a saving of $500,000 to the Government. It is a great task, and a greater task is going to fall on the bureau by reason of the discharge of the men—30,000 a day—where allowances or compensation are to be awarded; but these allotments are going on and methods are being arranged whereby they can pay the money for all these claims. There are great difficulties that confront the bureau in the administration of this stupendous work. It is easy enough to pick out individual instances where they have received no allotment, but we know that they are the rare exception and that the wives have generally received allotments in due season.

I hold no brief for Mr. Brown, but I do know that they are employing clerks by the thousands in order to pay the allotments and pay the insurance that will come due and the compensation to those who have been injured.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes and a half.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks that have just been made I want to say that I have some information which I regret to say I do not feel privileged to give in full—that is, I do not feel authorized to give the name of my informant. I will state that the party who gave the information is not a Member of Congress, but is an employee of the Government. If the report which reaches me through channels which I think are reliable is true, one trouble down at the War-Risk Bureau arises from gross negligence and almost the criminal conduct of some one in authority in that bureau. I speak plainly. If an investigation should be had—I state upon my official responsibility—I believe I can furnish unquestioned and satisfactory proof of the fact that while the boys were in the Army fighting more than 300,000 letters, many of them containing allotments, applications for allowances, applications in behalf of widows and wives who had been deserted, and all that sort of thing, were dumped into a heap and left there without having been opened, and when some clerk discovered this and opened up three or four thousand of them some one higher in authority said that no more of those letters should be opened, because it was making too much work. I do not assert that this is true on my personal knowledge. I do not personally know that it is true, but I do say that if an investigation should be had I shall apologize to the House if I can not furnish proof to verify what I have stated here this morning. Every mail brings to each and every one of us letters from wives and from mothers by the dozens, showing that they have received nothing for months and months, and to the extent that gentlemen are decrying against that sort of conduct, I indorse it from whatever source it comes. It ought not to be so. That bureau has the largest force of any bureau in the Government and ought to perform its duties.

Mr. MADDEN. And they are increasing it all of the time.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 187, providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, by reason of the death of Hon. Charles Warren Fairbanks, of Indiana, be filled by the appointment of Robert S. Brookings, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SECURITY LEAGUE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Georgia, Judge PARK, who is the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, I am directed by that committee to report House resolution 476, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the special committee under H. Res. 469, adopted December 10, 1918, authorizing said special committee to make certain investigations set out in said resolution, to an amount not exceeding $25,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Also that the committee be, and hereby is, authorized to have done such printing and binding as, in the opinion of the committee, may be necessary; also that the committee may sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have explanation of what this is. It is not exactly clear to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This is providing money to make the investigation of the National Security League.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman think that the committee will use $25,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no idea of how much will be used, but I hope the committee will not use that much. I think I can assure the gentleman that the committee will be as economical as possible.

Mr. GARNER. I realize from the personnel of the committee that it will be economical, but it occurs to me that $25,000 is rather a large sum to begin with. Of course the committee may need that much money to conduct the investigation, but it occurs to me that $10,000 would be all the money they would need unless the investigation is going to lead further than anybody now anticipates.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the matter has already arisen in the committee as to whether or not the committee will be compelled to go to New York and also to Chicago. If so, the railroad fares and the hotel bills are going to come pretty high.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The resolution as reported from the Committee on Accounts does not limit in any way the character of the assistance that the committee may employ.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that in that respect this is a copy of the resolution that was adopted when the committee made the East St. Louis investigations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, the resolution upon which the report from the Committee on Accounts was predicated in that instance fixed the matter of the clerical employment or the employment of counsel. The report from the Committee on Rules in that case, if I may be permitted, provided that the committee should have authority to employ such legal and clerical assistance as it might require. The resolution which was brought in by the Committee on Rules this time made no such provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can say to the gentleman the committee is not going to employ any attorney.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Perhaps it ought. It might find itself in the position——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That question was brought up in the committee, and the committee was unanimous upon that point, that it would not employ an attorney as such.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman anticipate the employment of counsel in this case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not.

Mr. GARNER. This is merely for the expenses of the witnesses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If whoever should be employed as a clerk should happen to be an attorney he would be employed as clerk and not as an attorney.

Mr. GARNER. The expense largely devolves, I assume, on clerical assistance of the committee and the expenses of the committee in New York or Chicago and the expenses of witnesses brought to testify before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; we may have to bring a lot of witnesses here.

Mr. GARNER. Is that the major item of your contemplated expense?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say this was a report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; a unanimous report.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. SANFORD. When was that meeting held by the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This morning.

Mr. SANFORD. Without notice?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Upon notice received by me yesterday from the chairman of the committee, Judge PARK.

Mr. SANFORD. No notice was received by me, and I think I was entitled to notice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman I got my notice yesterday, a written notice, and when I got to the committee room this morning the clerk of the committee said the chairman of the committee would not be present, and as I was the next on the list I was asked to preside; and the clerk also said that the gentleman had resigned from the committee——

Mr. SANFORD. I have not resigned from the committee; I am a member of the committee and was entitled to notice and should have had it. Will the gentleman tell me how many members of the committee were present?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. About the resignation I know absolutely nothing——

Mr. SANFORD. I do. Will the gentleman kindly tell me how many members of the Committee on Accounts were present when they reported this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There was a quorum.

Mr. SANFORD. Does the gentleman mind telling me how many?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think there were five.

Mr. SANFORD. That is not a quorum, I believe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The clerk of the committee announced there was a quorum.

Mr. SANFORD. I do not know that is the clerk's business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; that is the clerk's business.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say the special committee had decided it would not have an attorney.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then I should think, with all due deference to the special committee, it might be able to tell better whether it needed an attorney after getting into the investigation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kenucky. Well, I think so, too; and, as I said when the committee took that action, the committee could reverse itself afterwards and employ an attorney if it should find it necessary, but it is the present purpose of the committee to get through without counsel, if possible.

Mr. ROBBINS. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question? Inasmuch as you are going into this without counsel, may I ask who the committee are?

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced the committee, and it is in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I refer the gentleman to the RECORD.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the history of these investigations? Do committees generally use up the whole amount authorized?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can say I have served on but one, and in that instance the committee did not use all the money.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose it is something of a temptation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think so at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been my distinct privilege to serve on two of these committees, one the very noted Mann committee to investigate pulp and paper manufacture, which I believe established a record as to expenditure, and, though we labored for 10 months, the total expenditures did not exceed $10,000. It was also my privilege to serve on the Muihall, the famous Michael Martin Mulhall investigating committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] was the chairman, and I believe that our total expenditures did not exceed in that instance, though we labored for many months, $10,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Three thousand five hundred dollars was the total expenditure.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee advises me $3,500, so I do not believe there is any basis for the claim that there is any undue desire on the part of Members of Congress to use all the amount of money that has been authorized. The same way also with the St. Louis investigation. I will inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, because I know it was not a very expensive investigation, what was the total expenditure in that case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say that was somewhat expensive for the reason the committee sat nearly five weeks over at East St. Louis, and our stenographer's bill was $1,700 or $1,800; and I recall perfectly well that when the first hotel bill was presented to me it was over $1,600, and it jumped me very considerably. Out of $7,500, if I remember correctly, that committee spent about $6,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That certainly was not a large amount, considering the time devoted to the work and that most of the work was in St. Louis, away from Washington, where hotel expenses had to be paid.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit just a moment, I have no objection to the resolution, but I did desire to call attention to this condition. Always, until now, when bringing in a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee, the Committee on Rules has provided that it should have clerical assistance or should have authority to employ counsel if it should find it necessary. So far as I now remember, no resolution providing for a special committee during the last eight years, at least, has failed to carry that provision. This resolution did not carry that, however, because of the fact that some time since a point of order was raised when we were creating a committee of the House, the Water Power Committee. That provided that that committee should have authority to choose a clerk. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] raised a point of order, and the Speaker felt constrained to hold that that destroyed the privileged character of the resolution. Therefore, the Committee on Rules in drafting this resolution did not make any provision of that sort. It was expected, of course, that the Committee on Accounts would define with some degree of definiteness the assistance that might be required. This resolution does not define it with definiteness, and this is no reflection upon the special committee, of course. It does not define any character of employee that that committee shall have.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state how much the Committee on Rules expended for counsel during the Lawson leak investigation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it was $15,000. That is my recollection.

All I wanted to say about this is that I believe it would be wise for both committees, if we have occasion to do anything of this sort in the future, to try to define in some specific degree what shall be employed. Of course, this House has every confidence in the committee that has been selected. It does not follow the usual form, either the one from the Committee on Rules or the resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. I do not believe that anybody can forecast just how many avenues this committee will have to enter in its effort to make a good-faith and searching investigation of the proposition that is submitted to it. We are not to determine whether or not this organization has slandered Representatives or misrepresented the record of Members of this House. We are to determine, if possible, if I understand the resolution, whether or not the National Security League was organized for some sinister purpose, seeking to control the Congress of the United States for its own financial benefit and cloaking its real purpose under the garb of patriotism and loyalty. We have gone far enough in this to have learned that there are numerous avenues into which we must make search. It is not an easy proposition. I do not know how extensive it will be, but if it is worth doing at all, it is worth doing thoroughly. [Applause.] And so far as I am concerned, I would not care to serve on that committee if the committee were not given every opportunity to completely uncover the real character of the National Security League. I do not believe that it will require $25,000 to do it. I do know from my knowledge of the personnel of this committee that no part of the appropriation will be expended unnecessarily. It was suggested that it might cost that sum, and to save the committee the annoyance of coming back to Congress and asking for further appropriation, in case such action was necessary, the amount we asked covered to the limit of reasonable probability the amount of money that would be used or needed in this investigation. If you are going to limit the committee in its expenditure, in its effort to find the truth of this matter; if you are going to appoint a committee on investigation, and then so limit the appropriation that the investigation would necessarily be superficial, it would be my judgment that you would better not go into it at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SESSION CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in the same capacity I present another resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 468.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds each be allowed a clerk at the rate of $125 per month during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, beginning December 2, 1918; that the Committee on Enrolled Bills be allowed a clerk at the rate of $6 per diem during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, beginning the 2d day of December, 1918; that the Committee on Rules be allowed an assistant clerk at the rate of $100 per month during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, beginning the 2d day of December, 1918. Salaries of said clerks to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Kentucky grant to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SANFORD. Five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Members of the House will permit this resolution to pass under the circumstances. In fact, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will be generous enough to withdraw the resolution. It was pending in the Committee on Accounts a week or so ago, and at my request a special committee was appointed, of which I was a member—a subcommittee of three—to investigate the necessity for this resolution. The subcommittee met and an arrangement was made with the clerk to have present the clerks of these several committees, many of whom, to my knowledge, were not in Washington and have not been for some months. Many of the committees named in this resolution need a clerk and should have the same. Many others of the committees named in this resolution do not need a clerk, and although a clerk has been provided upon the statement of its necessity by the chairmen, for nearly a year there has in some instances been absolutely no public duty for the clerks to perform. In some cases they have used their clerks as campaign managers and wholly for political purposes, to my knowledge.

While this matter was then pending before this subcommittee it was rumored in the Committee on Accounts that I am not a member of that committee. That misunderstanding arose naturally. It was expected that I would resign from that committee. I have not done so. I am a member of the subcommittee appointed to investigate this very resolution. Therefore, the committee holds a meeting this morning bright and early, without any notice to me, on account of that misunderstanding, and reports this resolution, which it is my duty to investigate. I therefore present the matter to the House. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw the resolution, to correct the error that has been made, and to return this resolution to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York that at the meeting of the Committee on Accounts several days ago, to which he has referred, I was not present. I knew nothing whatever of the resolution until the meeting of the committee this morning. The clerk of the committee this morning stated to those of the committee who were present that this matter had been referred to a subcommittee and that the subcommittee had reported favorably upon the resolution. Thereupon the committee took it up and ordered its favorable report.

Mr. SANFORD. The subcommittee had not reported, to my knowledge. I tried on several occasions——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman must give the committee credit for the information coming from the clerk. The clerk of the committee said that the subcommittee had made a favorable report on it.

Mr. SANFORD. That is my very point. There is so much misunderstanding with reference to it that I think the House would like to have it straightened out. I have tried for two days to find the clerk, and I have been at the committee room four or five times, and I could not find him. Apparently he was not looking for me, but he was on hand bright and early this morning when the committee met.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The call for the meeting of the committee was for 10.30 o'clock.

Mr. SANFORD. But it did not include me. That is the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is my opinion, without having noticed the clock, the committee commenced the transaction of business about 15 minutes after that, or about 15 minutes of 11, which I do not regard as very early this morning.

Mr. SANFORD. This matter may not be very important. I do not know whether it is or not. But I do wish to emphasize my point of view, that the House should not act with such uncertainty and confusion, which arise wholly out of a misunderstanding. I think the gentleman from Kentucky should withdraw the resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Who were the members of the subcommittee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not ask. The gentleman from New York could suggest who they are.

Mr. SANFORD. I am one of the members.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Massachusetts will remember that I stated that I was not present at that meeting.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. BRODBECK and Mr. MCLEMORE.

Mr. GILLETT. I wondered if they had made a report in the absence of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SANFORD. I do not know. There was supposed to be a meeting of the subcommittee yesterday, but I was late in coming to it, and then I went out to find the clerk, and was not able to find him or the members of the subcommittee. I presumed that they had adjourned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been stated, I ask that the resolution be rereferred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the resolution be rereferred to the Committee on Accounts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLERKS TO CERTAIN COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I send another resolution to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 460.

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, be, and they are hereby, assigned for the present session of Congress to the following committees, to wit: Committee on Education, Committee on Railways and Canals, Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, Committee on Invalid Pensions (assistant clerk), Committee on the Judiciary (additional assistant clerk), Committee on Enrolled Bills (assistant clerk), Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. SANFORD. That is exactly in the same situation as this other resolution. I make the same request with respect to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be rereferred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the resolution be rereferred to the Committee on Accounts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE ON WATER-POWER BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that when he appointed the conferees on the water-power bill (S. 1419) Mr. LA FOLLETTE, of the State of Washington, was one of them, but for some reason, sickness, I think, in his family, he could not attend the first session of the conference committee, and the Chair appointed Mr. SINNOTT, of Oregon, in his place. Mr. SINNOTT asks that Mr. LA FOLLETTE be returned to the place, and the Chair reappoints him.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman, for what purpose?

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think a Member of this House must disclose the purpose every time he asks unanimous consent to make a few remarks. If the gentleman wants to object, he can object.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. McKEOWN. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws the point.

AMENDMENT TO LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. I want to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12001.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of no quorum was made.

The SPEAKER. The point was withdrawn by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. We should have order here, so that we can hear the proceedings. The gentleman must have spoken to himself when he withdrew it. Gentlemen should speak loud enough to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires Members to speak louder.

Mr. McKEOWN. I withdrew that point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. I know, but the gentleman from Illinois could not hear it. Hardly anybody else heard it but the Speaker.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12001. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, with Mr. BORLAND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 12001, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to modify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate being exhausted, the Clerk will proceed to read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The salaries to be paid to the district judges shall be $6,500 per annum, except that in districts having a population of over 500,000 the district judge or each of the district judges appointed for those districts, respectively, shall receive annually additional compensation at the rate of $500 for each half million of population or part thereof in their respective districts, in excess of the first 500,000; which additional compensation, as the same may be ascertained, as aforesaid, in the said several districts, respectively, together with said sum of $6,500, shall be the annual salary payable to the district judge or each of the districts judges in such districts, respectively: Provided, however, That the salary of any district judge appointed for more than one district shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate population of the districts for which he is appointed. Such salaries shall be paid in equal monthly installments, beginning on the first day of the month next following the approval of this act, and the amount to be so paid in the several districts, under the provisions of this act, shall be ascertained by the Attorney General of the United States, from the last Federal census, and certified by him to the proper disbursing officer or officers. As soon after the 1st day of January next succeeding the taking of any future Federal census as may be practicable, any changes in such salaries, due to changes in population, shall be ascertained and determined by the Attorney General of the United States, and shall become effective on and after the 1st day of July next following: Provided, however, That at no time shall the salary of any district judge be diminished during his continuance in office, nor shall the salary of any district judge at any time exceed the sum of $10,000 a year."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, strike out all of lines 7 to 11, inclusive, and all of page 2 and lines 1 and 2, on page 3, and insert:

"SEC. 2. Each of the district judges shall receive a salary of $8,000 a year, to be paid in monthly installments."

Mr. GORDON. I move an amendment to that amendment. The salary ought not to be more than that of a Member of Congress—$7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor on his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I have retained the language of section 2 of the judicial code, with the exception of the amount to be paid as salary, and I have increased the salary paid under the present law, which is $6,000, to $8,000, making it applicable to each district judge in the United States. Now, there may be those who believe that in some districts an increase of $2,000 would not be warranted because of the amount of business that may be done there, and that in other districts it is not sufficient for the amount of business that is transacted, but I submit when you take into consideration the increases that have been made for other officials, and take into consideration the 128 judges that I believe there are, an increase of $2,000 is equitable, and it will be sufficient in those districts where business may not at the present time warrant such an increase to cover a gradual growth of business in those districts, and it will be a proper sum to pay the judges in the districts where business has increased. It will also be in conformity with the plan which has been adhered to heretofore in most of the increases that have been made, particularly in the judiciary, of putting the judges of all the districts upon the same plane as far as compensation is concerned, and it will permit the transfer of a judge to another district, and it will be known that the man who is transferred is getting the same salary.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman's amendment propose to increase the salaries now written in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. RUCKER. It does not increase the amount proposed in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. My amendment proposes a flat increase for all the judges. The scheme provided in the bill would give some judges a $500 increase and some judges a $4,000 increase, based upon the population of the districts. Now, I propose to amend the existing law, and that instead of paying all the district judges $6,000 we shall pay each of them $8,000.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman think that is a little too high?

Mr. WALSH. It may be that $7,500 would be sufficient.

Mr. RUCKER. For many years, of course, I have had nothing to do with district judges or any other kind of judges, but speaking now with profound respect for the judiciary——

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, I know the gentleman has that.

Mr. RUCKER. I have that respect for them, but I think that if there is any class of American citizens who are autocratic in the last degree, Federal judges constitute that class. They sit when they please, adjourn when they please, take recesses when they please, and go wherever the devil they please, and do less hours of work than any class of men in the country; and I am not much in favor of taxing the people to pay increased salaries to these men who enjoy life tenure of office and who do the minimum of work.

Mr. WALSH. As the gentleman states, there may be district judges who are in a position to take things comparatively easy, but I think the tendency in the courts is for the judges to work much harder than they formerly did, particularly in some of the larger districts.

Mr. RUCKER. That is a very gratifying tendency, but I am afraid it is not going to operate very long or very extensively.

Mr. WALSH. I will admit that I have not had a very great deal to do with the Federal judges recently.

Mr. RUCKER. My opinion is that when we begin to increase salaries we ought to increase the small salaries, where the people work practically all the year, and do not get much pay.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman appreciate that we have done that?

Mr. RUCKER. No; we have not done that in any substantial degree at all.

Mr. WALSH. When you take the percentage of increase, it is considerable.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will yield to me further——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think he has got his figures too high?

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to an amendment being offered to fix the salary at $7,500.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$8,000" and inserting "$7,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out $8,000 and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500."

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is too high yet.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the Federal judiciary are entitled to some increase in their compensation, and I have no complaint to make of them. Until I came here I had done nothing else for the last 30 years and more except practice law. These Federal judges have a great deal to do, and it takes a high order of talent to enable a man to be a decent Federal judge or any other kind of a judge.

But I do not want to establish the precedent here of this Congress making discrimination between judges of the same class because they live in different communities. The proposition is made here to base every salary on the amount of population in their district, and that makes a sliding scale which is to be adjusted after each census. Here you have this situation: Take the southern district of New York. It is perfectly possible and entirely probable that that district may be subdivided into two districts. You will have established a set of judges with salaries of $10,000. Suppose you divide it into two districts and you cut it below the limit of the $10,000 a year, and you have judges in the district whose salary is fixed at $10,000 a year and whose salary can not be reduced during the term of office, and therefore you have them serving in a district whose population does not justify and does not give the $10,000 salary, and yet you can not prevent their getting it as long as they live.

That is one reason, and the other reason is—and there is a good deal said about the salaries of the supreme court justices of the court of appeals in different States. We can only deal with the people whom we create and whom we take care of. We can not establish an equality between our judges and the judges of the State; we can only maintain the equality among our own people.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, will the gentleman tell me why it is that when a judge from another district comes into New York he receives $10 a day additional pay?

Mr. STEVENSON. The judge from New York who goes to South Carolina also receives $10 a day additional; there is entire equality and no discrimination.

In the southern district of New York you have four district judges. Divide up the population among them and they serve 800,000 people apiece. Taking the eastern district of South Carolina, that judge holds court in four different places and has to be away a large part of the time; yet he serves 850,000 people also. The proposition here is to leave him $6,500 and put four district judges of New York at $10,000 apiece. This establishes a discrimination between the judges whom we create and whose compensation we fix that is not proper under our duty.

It is also said that if we send a judge to New York he gets $10 additional a day. They send a judge down to South Carolina and he gets the additional pay. The judge in the district of South Carolina holds admiralty court in New York a month of every year, and has for several years, I am informed. He goes there and gets his expenses paid. The judge in New York, if he wants a trip, gets assigned to the western district of South Carolina, goes to Asheville, into a high climate, and holds court, and he gets $10 a day additional. So it seems to me that we are going to establish a precedent of discrimination as among our own judges.

The proposition is advanced in the report of the committee that there are very few people and a very small amount of business in Nevada, and therefore her judge ought not to be paid as much as the judges in the district of New York or Chicago. Follow that principle out and you would say that the Senator from New York should be paid about ten times as much as you pay the Senator from Nevada. In other words, take South Carolina and Texas. South Carolina's Senator would be entitled to about one-quarter as much as Texas, and the same way in a great many other States. When you begin the policy of discrimination among the officers we create, who are coordinate and equal in every respect, you do that which will rise up to plague us for all time hereafter, and we ought not to begin it now. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina lays too much stress altogether on establishing a precedent. He forgets the fact that precedent existed in this country from 1789 down to 1891, by making a discrimination between the pay of the judges in different parts of the United States and giving them different salaries, based on the idea of population and the amount of business. This bill is not establishing precedents. This bill is restoring a condition that has been recognized as a wise and sane one for over a century in the history of this country.

In addition to that, the idea of equality pay which he advocates with respect to judges is running counter to the stream of human experience in every other direction. Why do you not make every postmaster in the United States get the same salary and the same pay. You discriminate between the rural districts and the great centers and pay the postmasters in the larger cities a greater amount because they have a greater amount of business. There is no basis upon which this line of compensation can be prescribed better than the one proposed here.

In addition, I want to ask gentlemen to remember that in the large centers the opportunities for making money are greater. The bar has more opportunities to earn compensation for their work far in excess of anything that would be paid on the bench. In such a district as that you can not draw to the bench the best and ablest man to sit upon it and administer justice. I trust that what has received the unanimous consent or approval, with one exception, of our committee will receive the approval of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. KAHN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the last legislative appropriation bill the salaries for independent treasurers run this way in different sections of the country: In Baltimore the assistant treasurer gets $4,500; Boston the assistant treasurer gets $5,000; Chicago he gets $5,000; in Cincinnati he gets $4,500; in New Orleans he gets $4,500; in New York he gets $8,000; and in Philadelphia $5,000, and so on. So do the various collectors of customs throughout the country receive different salaries, depending upon the amount of work which they perform.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That exactly supports the statement I made, that this effort to put all of these salaries upon a flat level is running counter to the stream of human experience and the wisest judgment that has been exercised in this legislative body on almost every subject.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is it not a fact that the discrimination which existed from 1789 to 1891 was repealed, and such precedents as it established was repudiated, and are you not trying to reenact it now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No. I was answering the gentleman's proposition that this bill was intended to establish a precedent by showing that the practice of discrimination had existed for nearly a century up to the date which I named.

Mr. STEVENSON. My proposition is that you are trying to reestablish a precedent which has once been repudiated by this Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That would be a wise thing to do in any case, when you find that that which was existing and approved for a century was a proper proposition and the new departure was erroneous.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.
Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee if he does not think that if a man has a position which he holds for life it should make some difference?
Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No. On the contrary, I think that the appointment for life, while it has some advantage of certainty, has the disadvantage of being a handicap upon a man who is deprived of entering into any business of any kind except the administration of his office as judge.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.
Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this proposition of graduated increase of pay for the Federal judiciary was given the most careful consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary for many weeks. We had before us not only, as some one has said, some representatives of the judiciary but we had before us members of the bar from many States. I submitted this proposition to the bar association of my State and of my city and it met with their approval. We have heard here letters read approving of this method of increasing the pay of these judges by men of the highest character, who are members of the legal profession, including former Justice Hughes, of New York. This bill ought to pass as it has been written, after it has been considered, as I have said, by the Judiciary Committee and by the judiciary of the entire country. It was most carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee of this House, and that committee practically unanimously is for this bill as it has been presented. As has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] and others, you must give consideration in increase of pay to the big centers of population where business comes pertaining to the Federal bar and the judiciary.
Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. Yes.
Mr. FAIRFIELD. I would ask the gentleman whether it requires a higher order of intelligence and greater ability to preside over a district in the centers of population than it does in the Middle West or the West or the South?
Mr. DYER. I would say to the gentleman that in his State of Indiana there is, in my opinion, one of the ablest men that sits in any court in the United States—Judge Anderson.
Mr. GORDON. And they are fixing his salary at $6,500.
Mr. DYER. And, Mr. Chairman, go to Indianapolis, where they have a splendid bar association, and you will find men appearing almost week after week before Judge Anderson in important litigation where the lawyers receive more pay in one case than does a man of that great ability—Judge Anderson—receive in a whole year for presiding over that court. So it is in other cities in other States.
Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. Yes.
Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask whether population was considered a just and fair basis of fixing salaries by the judiciary affected by the bill, so far as they were represented before your committee? Did the judges who are affected by this bill consider population as a fair and just basis for fixing the salaries of the judiciary?
Mr. DYER. To a large extent.
Mr. STEELE. I will say in answer to the gentleman from New York, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit, that a committee of the judiciary—the entire judiciary of the United States—appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary of this House and stated that this basis of adjusting their salaries had been under consideration by the judiciary themselves and met with their entire approval; and, if the gentleman will permit another statement, I will say that the increase proposed in this amendment will be no saving to the Treasury at all, but will simply result in unfair distribution of the salaries, something that is not asked by the judiciary themselves.
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. Yes.
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that in the hearings, on page 4, where the classification of judges is presented, the arrangement should be reversed? The first class is given as of the smallest population and smallest salary. Will not the classes be reversed in the public mind? When one speaks of a first-class judge one will think of a $10,000 judge, and the judge in the lowest classification will be regarded as inferior, which is not intended, of course. But will not the tendency of the public mind be to classify judges in the order in which they are paid?
Mr. DYER. I do not think so. They do not do that with reference to other Federal appointees.
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Something like postmasters, first class, and so on.
Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. Yes; and in this connection I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for five minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. KEARNS. It has been stated by the chairman of the committee that there appeared before your committee representatives from the judges' associations throughout the country.
Mr. DYER. And also the bar associations.
Mr. KEARNS. I just wondered if those judges who are to receive an increase of only $500 were represented?
Mr. DYER. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that among those whom I distinctly remember as indorsing this bill is one of the judges who receives $6,000, and who would receive $6,500 under this bill, who for a number of years presided over the Judiciary Committee of this House with very great distinction, Judge Clayton, of Alabama. There is no division as to the fixing of this salary. The judges all over the country agree that it is the right and proper thing.
Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. I will yield.
Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that all the judges who came before you on the bill were from large centers of population?
Mr. DYER. No; and I told the gentleman among others was Judge Clayton, and we have letters from judges from all over the country.
Mr. GORDON. They are all in favor of the increase in salary?
Mr. DYER. Even from those who would receive $6,500 as a maximum salary.
Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. I will.
Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman states that the judges are unanimous for this bill. Is it not a fact all the judges will be increased thereby, and of course they would be unanimous?
Mr. DYER. Even from those who would only be increased $500. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one proposition here that you and I must consider now and together, and that is whether we are going to enact some legislation that is badly needed, not only in increasing the pay but in remedying the situation in several parts of this country, and that is the other proposition; and, gentlemen of this House, we can stand together and enact a bill of this kind that has been so carefully considered, so unanimously agreed to by the Committee on the Judiciary and by the bar association and lawyers of the country.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. I do.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman referred to Judge Clayton, judge of the middle district of Alabama, and he is also the judge of the northern district of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the fact that this bill as written will fix Judge Clayton's salary, taking into consideration the population of the northern district of Alabama, which is presided over by another judge, in which he does no business whatever?
Mr. DYER. That goes to show, Mr. Chairman, I take it, that the great centers of population of the country are the places where the greatest amount of work is done by the judiciary, where they sit day after day and week after week and only have a month or two of vacation away from their arduous duties the year around. Those men ought to be paid, and they ought to be paid a salary commensurate with the business they do and that accords with the practice of the bar in those States. In other words, Mr. Chairman, there ought not to be appointed to these great places men who have not the ability and who do not stand high in their bar associations where appointed, and they should not be compelled to sit performing work of that high character where lawyers come in and try a case in which they receive, as I stated, double the amount of the salary of the judge in one fee.
Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman want to say these judges are drafted?
Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. I will.
Mr. ROBBINS. Was there not evidence before the committee also that unless the salary was increased of the Federal judiciary a number would be compelled to resign?
Mr. DYER. And some have already done so, and some believe they will be compelled to do so. In some of the great cities of this country you can not rent a decent house in which a judge should live for less than half of the money he receives in compensation.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. ROSE. Does the gentleman know any judgeship where the salary paid was so exceedingly low that it went begging because of a vacancy?

Mr. DYER. You can find men, of course, who will accept everything that is offered. You can find in your city and my city probably 500 or a thousand men who would accept the appointment of a Federal judgship, men who ought not to be appointed——

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that in his city or in any other city a man who is not fit is accepted?

Mr. DYER. No; I do not say that; but I say they are liable to be appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire, if possible, that we have some agreement about the time to be consumed on this amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Your committee has consumed all the time so far. It has all been on one side, and I would like to be heard in favor of the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but members of the committee have opposed the amendment.

Mr. GORDON. The last speaker spoke on the same side as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], and he got 10 minutes.

Mr. WEBB. I have no disposition to cut off my friend from Ohio, but I want to have some agreement in reference to limitation of time on this amendment, and I shall be very glad to do so in order that Members may know when debate closes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman consent to 20 minutes on a side?

Mr. WEBB. That is agreeable to me. I wanted to have some limitation.

Mr. GORDON. I would like 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to 20 minutes on a side, does the gentleman mean 20 minutes on a side based upon the aisle or 20 minutes on a side based upon the proposition?
